SIR WILLIAM SYDNEY SMYTH.

(WITH A PORTRAIT.)

IT's a cheering circumftance to the People of Great Britain, that at a time when they have been compelled into a war, for the fecurity of their Laws, Religion, Property, and Perfonal fafety, all menaced by their ancient, implacable, and at this time more than ordinary powerful and ferocious enemy, that in addition to the great names which have been diftinguifaed in former conflicts, a new race of Heroes, equally brave, enterprizing, and determined, has arifen, from whole exerctions the world may hope for repofe, and their country honour, peace, and fecurity.

Among those who have fignalized themfelves during the prefent war, the perfon whole Portrait ornaments this Magazine deferves a particular eulogium. He was born about the year 1764. His father was John Smith, Eiq. Aid-de-Camp to Lord George Germaine, and his mother was Mary Wilkinfon, daughter of Pinkney Wilkinfon, an opulent merchant, who had another daughter, married to the late Lord Camelford. The union between Sir Sydney's father and mother, which took place in 1760, being without the confent of Mr. Wilkinson the grandfather, the great property left by that Gentleman went to Lady Camelford*. Previous to the old Gentleman's death, the difagreement between him and SirSydney's father had arifen to fuch a height, that on the care of his grandfon's being taken from him, he cancelled a codicil to his will by which he had made fome provision for them. The first part of Sir Sydney's education was at Tunbridge School, then kept by Mr. Knox deceased, where he continued until . 1773, from whence he was removed to Bath, under the care of Mr. Morgan, and in the year 1777 he devoted him-felf to the fea fervice, under Captain Young, of the Sandwich. In the year 1780 he was appointed Fifth Lieutenant of the Alcide, and in 1783 became a Post Captain. The warin which Great Britain had been involved being at an end, Captain Smith obtained leave to go into the Swedish fervice about 1788, and fignalized himfelf in fo extraordinary a manner, that he was invefted with the Swedish Order of Knighthood, which not being admitted in England, his name in the Lifts of Naval Officers appears without that diffinction.

The war between the Swedes and the Ruffians being concluded, Sir Sydney again returned to England, and on the commencement of hostilities between Great Britain and the usurping Powers of France, he was, as might naturally be expected from his former gallantry employed in the fervice of his country. In the beginning of December last he joined Lord Hood from Smyrna at Toulon, and offered his fervice to burn the ships and deftroy the arsenal on the evacuation of that place. How effectually this was executed our readers are already acquainted from the difpatches printed in our last Volume, p. 73.

* Some of these facts and dates are taken Camellord in 1785, but never published.

* Some of these facts and dates are taken from a Case drawn up and printed by Lord

Sir

Sir Sydney Smith is at this juncture on the fea, in the fervice of his country, and we anticipate the honours he will acquire fhould the enemy afford him an opportunity. At an early period of lite he has acquired laurels which will not fade, and he posselies those qualities which are likely to procure fucces, cool refolution and undaunted courage. May Great Britain at all times fee a fucceffion of fuch men! While fuch are to be found in her fervice, the may contemn the impotent menaces of her foreign enemies, and the equally impotent efforts of her feditious lurking domeftic foes.

To the EDITOR of the EUROPEAN MAGAZINE.

SIR,

Salifbury, April 2, 1794.

THE following Letter from the celebrated Lord SHAFTESBURY to Dr. BURNET, Bifhop of Salifbury, I found in Manufeript at the end of a Copy of that Nobleman's Letters to a Young Man at the Univerfity, 8vo. 1716. MICHAEL AINS-WORTH, to whom those Letters are addreffed, is the perfon here recommended. As I do not find that it has been published, I transmit it for the use of the European Magazine.

I am, &c.

To the BISHOP of SARUM. Reigate, May 23, 1710.

My Lord,

THE young man who delivers this to your Lordfhip is one who for feveral years has been preparing himfelf for the Minifiry, and in order to it has I think completed his time at the University. The occasion of his applying this way was purely from his own inclination. I took him a child from his peor parents, out of a numerous and neceffitous family into my own, employing him in nothing fervile, and finding his ingenuity, put him abroad to the best fchools to qualify him for preferment in a peculiar way. But the ferious temper of the lad difpoing him (as I found) to the Ministry preferably to other advantages, I could not be his hinderance; tho' till very lately I gave him no prospect of any encouragement thrs' my intereft. But having been at last convinced by his feber and religious carriage, his fludious inclination, and meek behaviour, that 'twas real principle, and not a vanity or conceit that led him into thefe thoughts, I am refolved, in cafe your Lordship finds him worthy of the Ministry, to procure him a Bencfice as foon as any thing happens in my power, and in the mean time defign to keep him as my Chaplain in my family.

1 am, my Lord, &c.

SHAFTESBURY.

OF DEPHLOGISTICATED or VITAL AIR CONSIDERED AS A MEDICINE,

THE importance of this Air (of late termed Oxygene), not only in the animal and vegetable œconony, but alfo in medicine, becomes every day more apparent, and bids fair to introduce a grand revolution in the whole fystem of Physic.

Near a dozen years ago, when Dephlogifticated Air was but lately difcovered, and only a few of its properties diffinctly known, the prefent Dr. Fo-THERGILL appears to have been the firft who conceived the bold idea of its being the principle of Irritability, or, in other words, of Life, as may be feen from the following remarkable paffage in his Hints on Animation, &c.

" Being inhaled with atmospheric air into the lungs, it finds an easy paffage from thence into the blood, as appears from the more florid hue which the blood acquires in its courfe thro' that organ. Though irritability is faid to be a property inherent in living folids, yet it evidently requires to be continually fupported by Dephlogifticated Air received into the lungs, fince it foon forfakes the mufcles after refpiration is fuppreffed. Does not this plainly difcover the fource of irritability, the principle from whence the mufcles derive their energy?"-Hints on Animation, p. 122, 3. 1783.

He particularly recommends a trial of Dephlogificated Air for reftoring animation when fufpended by drowning or noxious air; in which he has been followed by the ableft Authors who have fince written on that fubject.— "Numerous are the inflances," fays he,

he, " in which this air promifes to become not only a powerful corrector of impure air, but also an efficacious remedy against various difeases, especially luch as proceed from noxious miafmata, animal effluvia, or putridity, as the pestilence, malignant fevers, putrid fore throat, marine fcurvy, &c.; alfo in difeafes of the lungs, which demand that the patients thould conftantly breathe a pure air, as afthmas, catarrhs, and confumptions, in all which the fufferers are often fent to remote places. But what country can boaft fo falubrious an atmosphere as what, by a proper apparatus, might be artificially prepared in the patient's own chamber? There they might breathe air thus medicated without relinquishing the endearments of focial connexions, and without being forced to feek it, folitary and unknown, in a distant climate. In stubborn cafes of this nature, which baffle practitioners, where is the propriety of their obftinately perfifting in their ufual routine of oily mixtures, and other unavailing modes of medication? Is it not ftrange that fo interefting a discovery as that of Dephlogifticated Air has not more awakened the curiofity of medical profeffors ? or that they have not yet availed themselves of it for the improvement of practice, and the benefit of their patients."-Hints, &c. p. 34; 36, 79.

Certain writers have fince adopted Dephlogisticated Air, or (as they are now pleafed to call it) Oxygene, as the fource of irritability, and, what is remarkable, have proposed it in the very cases abovementioned . Some of them have ingenioufly, though not ingenuou/ly, brought forward thefe ideas as their own, and entirely new, forgetting, however, to mention whence they durived the first bints, tho' published more than eleven years ago.

They have indeed worked them up into a fine-spun system, but unluckily feem to have drawn out the thread too fine to be feen by the naked eye, and of too flimiy a texture to be durable.

INVESTIGATOR.

To the EDITOR of the EUROPEAN MAGAZINE.

SIR.

Fakenbam, June 19, 1794.

OBSERVED in your excellent Magazine for last Month, under the Article KNOWLEDGE, that the Proverb, " Many things fall out between the Cup and the Lip," was supposed to take its origin from one of Penelope's wooers being fhot as he was going to drink. But it arofe, as Ainfworth has it, thus :-- " A King of Thrace had planted a vincyard, when one of his flaves, whom he had much opprefied in that very work, prophefied that he, the King, fhould never taite of the wine produced in it. The King difregarded his prophecy, and when at an entertainment he held the cup full of his own wine, he fent for this flave, and afked him infultingly what he thought of his prophecy now ? The flave only anfwered, "Multa inter pocula ac labra cadunt." Scarce had he fpoke, when news was brought that an huge boar was laying his vineyard wafte. The King role in a fury, attacked the boar, and was killed without ever tafting the wine."-If this reaches you in time, please to insert it for the fatisfaction of thofe who have not had the advantage of ever feeing it before.

I thould be obliged, too, if any of your Correspondents could inform me, why lovers of good cating and drinking fhould be called Epicureans, when Epicurus himfelf was the most fober, fparing man in the world.

> I am, Sir, Your old Reader, ANTIQUARIUS.

FOR THE EUROPEAN MAGAZINE. ON THE FOLLY OF PRYING INTO FUTURITY. Quid futurum ora, fuge querere, HOR.

are grafted by nature in the mind of man, there is hardly a ftronger than that

A MONG the various inclinations that of the defire of forefeeing future events. Without reflecting upon the confequences that may refult from an inquifitive folicitude about those things which time has not yet brought forward into the view of reason, he is often led into a variety of misfortunes and perplexities, by too haftily indulging his pattions and defires in this respect. If man were really to forefee the calamities and misfortunes that are to attend him during the fort period of his prefent existence, he would be fo difficartened and dejected with the view as not to be able to purfue his occupations with vigour and industry, or even with common hopes of attaining the end he ought diligently to aim at; and were those whom God has marked out to blefs with profperity and affluence to know of it beforehand, they would be in danger, like spendthrift heirs, of mortgaging their effates before they came into actual poffeilion. How often then do we see men tormented and perplexed through the fear of future evil that may never arrive, and rejoice through the hope of diftant fuccels they may never meet. But, not fatisfied with the knowledge of all the events and transactions of the years he himfelf has already lived, as well as those of former ages, man must continually endeavour to penetrate into the unfathomable depths of fusurity. To men of fense it cannot but appear, and plainly appear, that the knowledge of runure events is hid from all but God himfelf in impenetrable darknels. We know for certain that we must die, but we do not know when, or what will happen to us previous to the arrival of that awful period. If we follow the advice of the writers of former ages we thall do well to fecure the prefent hour, and difinifs all the cares which intrude upon our quiet, or hinder by importunate perturbations the enjoyment of those delights which our condition fets before us.

* Except confumption; for heftic patients have lately been recommended, inflead pure air, to breathe the impure air of a close room, and even a large portion of azotic air that is, air which, when an animal is thut up in it, prefently extinguithes life!

This concern about things to come is a folly which none are more liable to fall into than the minds of unthinking, inexperienced youth. Thefe, tranfported with the pleafure of knowing what lives they are to lead, raihly run to the oracles of fortune, and there hear of profperity they never meet with, or are perplexed with the fear of forme evil that never arrives. It is a pity, that, in feminaries for the education of youth, the impiety of fo favourite a vice is not pointed out to them in fuch a manner, and at fuch a period of their lives as that is will make too deep an impression ever to wear out. We fee that in the ages of heathenifm men faw the folly and the impropriety of prying into futurity; for, fays an elegant author of those times,

Tu ne quæfieris (feire nefas) quem mihi, quem tibi

Finem di dederint.

This author in various parts of his writings, points out in a beautiful manner, not only the folly of withing to, but the impofibility of forefeeing future events;

Prudens futuri temporis exitum Caliginola nocte premit deus,

Ridetque fi mortalis ultra

Fas trepidet.

Thefe men who concern themfelves about things to come, which they certainly cannot forefee, have continually on their minds fuch feenes of melancholy gloom that render in every thought fear the predominant paffion.

" The misfortunes,' fays Dr. Johnfon, ' which arife from the concurrence of unhappy incidents, fhould never be fuffered to difturb us before they happen; becaufe, if the breath be once laid open to the dread of mere poffibilities of mifery, life must be given a prey to difmal folicitude, and quiet must be lott for ever. Pleafure is redoubled by coming on us unexpected, and pain becomes the greater, as we forefee it the sooner, for from that time till it arrives all our enjoyments are entirely gone. Why then, if pleasure is lessened and pain increafed by being forefeen, why fhould men be anxious to know which they are to enjoy, and when their pains or their pleafures are to arrive ? Why folicitous to know when they are to die? For if they did know it, the melancholy gloom it would naturally imprefs on their mind, would make them unhappy here, and prevent them from exercifing those duties which would infure their happiness hereafter.

Let men then, feeing the folly of defiring to know future events, and the abfurdity of fuch a wifh, as well as the impofibility of its being gratified, turn their, attention from the folly here treated of, to the advice of that inimitable p. et before guoted.

Carpe diem, quam minimum credula postero; for on the prefent day depends all our happiness in this life as well as in that which is to come.

POSTSCRIPT.

SIR, In the Nineteenth Volume of Your entertaining Magazine, one of your correspondents has given a very fatisfactory explanation of the reason of Berwick upon Tweed being particularly mentioned in Acts of Parliament.—I fhould feel myfelf highly indebted to you, or any of your readers or correfpondents, if they can inform me, thro' the channel of the European Magazine, why the counties of Flint, Denbigh, and Radnor, in Wales, are also expressed particularly in Acts of Parliament.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ERUPTION OF MOUNT VESUVIUS,

IN A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN NOW AT NAPLES, DATED JUNE 17.

" FOR fome days past the inhabitants of this city and neighbourhood had been alarmed by repeated flocks of an earthquake ; in confequence of which the ftreets and churches were filled with processions, imploring St. Januarius, the principal object of worship here, to procure an eruption of Mount Veluvius, as the likelieft means of preventing mifchief from the motion of the ground. This good-humoured faint, who is fuppoled to be the best manager of a volcano in the whole calendar, feems to have attended to their requeft, for on Sunday evening about eleven o'clock, immediately after a fmart fhock of an earthquake, the mountain burft alunder, with a violent explosion, and instantly poured forth a torrent of lava. I was at the opera when it happened, and, when informed of it, rejoiced at the event, as giving me an opportunity of enjoying a magnificent spectacle; for eruptions have, for some years past, been so frequent and fo harmlefs, that it was not looked upon as an object of terror : but when I returned home, and had been fome little time at a window from whence we had a full view of the whole, my pleafure was foon changed into apprehensions of the mischief that was likely to enfue; for as frefh mouths continually opened, and ran one into another, fo as to form a cleft of great length in the fide of the mountain, the mals of lava was fo augmented, and ran with fuch increased velocity, that it became evident, it would foon arrive at the cultivated and inhabited part of the mountain. Portici seemed at first threatened: this town ftands on part of the old Herculaneum, and in the museum there are lodged all the curiofities that have been taken from thence and Pompeia. There feemed now the greatest probability that these towns were again to undergo the fate they had done before ; but fortunately for the inhabitants of this place, a fmall elevated piece of ground opposed itfelf to the torrent, and diverted its courfe towards the town of Torre del Greco, fituated on the feafhore. This unhappy place, likewife built on part of the antient Herculaneom, has in a great meafure fallen a facrifice to its fury. It contained from 12 to 14,000 inhabitants, who have all efcaped except 20 or 30 fick perfors, that perifhed certainly from want of friends to remove them, as there was fufficient time to have done it.

" I went yefterday to the fpot, and found that a little before it reached this place, the lava divided itfelf into tour ftreams, three of which entered the town; the principal one had gone thro" it, and advanced itfelf about 100 feet into the fea, where it prefents a front or breadth of 1000 feet, 25 or 30 in height; the other two were likewife making their way to the fhore, burning and overturning in their course different parts of the town. I suppose they are by this time arrived in the fea. The by this time arrived in the fea. fourth was not arrived in the town, but is certainly there before now. It had filled up a valley 150 feet deep and 70 or 80 wide. Where I faw it had come forth from this valley, and was directing its destructive course over a field of walnut and pine trees, which were all in turn falling before it; its width was about 500 feet and height 30. Befides the cruption on this fide, another very confiderable took place on the part of Ottiano, but happily the lava there has loft itfelf in fome vallies, without doing any material harm.

"From this fketch of the immenfity of the lavas that have been poured forth on this occasion, you may, perhaps, form tome idea of the terrible fpectacle they prefented when rolling in one mais down the hill; they paffed over about eight miles in the fpace of four hours and a half, till they approached the fca, which they have heated for a great difiance around.—To the horror of this immenfe moving body of fire was added that of the tremendous founds fort forth by the mountain, infinitely louder and more repeated, Sir W. Hamilton fays, than any he ever heard before : they were of two forts, a continual roaring, and fudden explosions, accompanied by a violent agitation of the ground of this town. Thefe circumstances increased to fuch a degree about four o'clock on Monday morning, that the alarms I had before felt for others began now to be converted into alarms for ourfelves. The explosions were such as though the mountain were burft into a thousand pieces; the house shook so that the window-fhutters were forced open, and every bell was ringing; - and the fame was the cafe with the King's palace at Caferta, one of the most folid buildings you can imagine, and fituated near tw-nty miles from the mountain. Almost all the inhabitants passed the night in the fircets, or on the water ; but towards feven in the morning it became more quiet, and this great fire, the re-Acction of which had made the fea look as red as blood, was hid from our fight, as indeed was every other object, by a cloud of afhes, which, with a very fmall intermiffion from a temporary change of wind, has continued ever fince, creating a darkness that may be felt. The ashes that fall are composed in a great degree of iron and fulphur.

"When this substance has lain a little time on the fca thore and been acted upon by the heat of the fun, a ftrong efflorescence of brimstone is plainly vifible upon it, and being very finely puiverized infinuates itfelf copioufly into the eyes and lungs, and much affects both the fight and breath .- As this is widely diffused and in vast quantities over the country, it will probably produce fatal effects amongst the cattle, and we shall be obliged to give up most vegetables for fome time.

"This eruption, though one of the greateft that has been known, and the lava poured forth exceeding perhaps that of any former period, yet having been unattended with those showers of cinders which often accompany eruptions, and from the fuddennels of which the most fatal confequences enfue, may in fome degree be called a merciful one. The only mouth that threw matter in the air was that from which it first burst, and though this perhaps threw fome pieces upwards of 1000 feet, yet that is efteemednothing, it indeed is inconfiderable when it is known that in the year 1779, the fire was carried into the air to the height of 11,000 feet.-When a breeze of air gave us this morning a fight of the mountain, we faw a column of finoke afcending from the crater in grand folds to the height, as is supposed, of about 7000 feet .- I understand the lava has now cealed to run, but it is expected to open again, though the violence of the eruption is probably over."

CHARACTERS, ANECDOTES, &c. of Illustrious and Celebrated BRITISH CHARACTERS, during the last Fifty Years.

EARL CAMDEN.

A Sketch of bis Life and Public Character. LEW men have had fuch ftrong claims to the gratitude and admiration of his countrymen as the noble and illustrious character whose life and political merits we are now attempting to fketch. Whether we confider him as a flatefman, called to that high fituation by his talents ;-as a lawyer, defending, fupporting, and enlarging the Conflitution ; or as a man, fustaining both by his firmnefs and unshaken integrity; in all he excites our general praife; and every individual, in the contemplation of fuch higha nd exalted merit, is tempted to exclaim, in the becoming spirit of national pride,

-"" AND I, TOO, AM AN ENGLISH-MAN!"

CHARLESPRATT, EarlCAMDEN, was the third fon of Sir John Pratt, Knt. Chief Juffice of the Court of King's Bench under Geerge the Firft, by his fecond wife, Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Hugh Wilfon, Canon of Bangor, and was born in 1713, the year before his father was call. d to the honour of the Bench. He received the firft rudiments of his education at Eton, and afterwards temoved to King's College, Cambridge.

Of his early life at both places there is little known, other than at College he was found to be remarkably diligent and fludious, and particularly fo in the hiftory and conftitution of this country. By fome he was thought to be a little too tenacious of the rights and privileges of the College he belonged to; but, perhaps, it was to this early tendency that we are indebted for those noble ftruggles in defence of liberty, which, whether in or out of office, he difplayed through the whole courfe of his political life.

After flaying out the ufual time at College, and taking his Mafter's degree, in 1739 he entered himfelf a fludent of the Inner Temple, and was in due time admitted by that Honourable Society as a Barrifter at Law. And here a circumflance developes itfelf in the hiftory of this great man, which flews how much chance governs in the affairs of this world, and that the moft confiderable talents and indifputable integrity will fometimes require the introduction of this Miftrefs of the Ceremonies, in order to obtain that which they ought to poffels from their own intrinfic qualifications.

Mr. Pratt, after his being called to the bar, notwithstanding his family introduction, and his own perfonal character, was very near nine years in the profession without ever getting in any degree forward. Whether this arole from a natural timidity of constitution, ill-luck, or, perhaps, a mixture of defpondence growing out of the two circumstances, it is now difficult to tell, but the fact was io; and he was fo difpirited by it, that he had fome thoughts of relinquishing the profession of the law, and retiring to his College, where, in rotation, he might be fure of a Church living, that would give him a fmall but honourable independence *.

Brooding

* Mr. Pratt's cafe, though fingular in point of time, has, in a degree, happened to fome of the greateft luminaties of the law in our time. Sir Fletcher Norton, afterwards Lord Grantley, was fome years before he got into any notice. Mr. Dunning, afterwards Lord Afthurton, received but twenty guineas the firft year, and for three years afterwards (communities annls) did not get above one hundred pounds. The fourth year, however, did him juitice; as his Weftminfter-hall fers, independent of Circuits, produced him one thoufaut guineas. Sir George Hay, who was no lefs a great civilian than a man of fine Seneral talents, was for three or four years in fo little practice, as to be (carcely able by his Proteffion to keep up the port of a gentleman; when diftinguifning himfelf in fome popular caufe, he drew the notice of a client, who fent him twenty guineas with a brief next morning. Upon this Sir George observed (after counting the money with fome furprife), "Well, if the Public, at laft, have found out that I have any merit, I'll fludy to deferve it." He did fo, and progreffively rofe to the firft honours of his profefilon.

The Hon. Thomas Erikine flands in contradiftinction to thefe inflances, as, by having Vol. XXVI. C the Brooding over thefe melancholy thoughts, he went, as ufual, the Weftern Circuit, refolving to make this one more experiment, and then take his final determination. He had, from his first fetting out in his profession, been very intimate with Mr. Henley, afterwards Lord Northington and Lord High Chancellor of England; a man who, with the talents of wit and conversation, was effeemed a good lawyer, and capable of ftrong and friendly attachments. Henley, at this time, was rifing rapidly at the bar, and was concerned in most of the great caufes on this Circuit. He was the amicus omnium borarum with Pratt, but, whether from the preffure of bufinefs, or an unobtrufive temper of inquiry, knew nothing of the embarraif-ments of his friend's affairs, till the other, availing himself of a leisure hour, opened himself to him with all the franknefs, the confidence, and unrefervedness of an old and intimate colleague.

He told him, "that he had been very ncar nine years at the bar, without being in any degree diffinguithed in his profession-that this circumstance, perhaps, alone thould induce him to think of changing it, but the incentive was ftill ftronger when he had to tell him, that as his fortune was originally finall (that of a younger brother by a fecond marriage)he had fo far through neceffity diminished it, that he had little better than two India Bonds of One Hundred with Pounds each remaining-that this fum, he propoled, when he returned to town, to go down to his College at Cambridge, there to wait till fuch time as he fhould get a living in rotation, and thus exchange the uncertainties of the law for the quiet independence of retired life."

Henley heard him throughout with a feeming and anxious compositive, when burfting out into a horfe-laugh, he exclaimed, in his firong manner, "What I turn parfon atlaft! No, by G-, Charles, you tha'n't be a P-, neither !--You thall do better for yourfelf, and that quickly too. Let me fee-I'm concerned in a caufe that will fuit you to a hair-you thall be concerned in it too-ut is on the popular fide, and will do you credit—therefore let me hear no more of this canting bufneds of turning parfon:—ycu have abilities that run before us all, but you muft endeavour to fcour off a little of that d—ned modefly and diffidence you have about you, to give them fair play."

In this rough, familiar manner did Henley rally the fpirits of his friend; —and he followed up his advice with fagacity and cordiality; for his client's attorney calling in upon him a little after, in order to arrange the particulars of the caufe, he afked him, "Whether he had retained Pratt?" "Pratt ! Pratt !" fays the Attorney, "Who is Mr. Pratt?" "Who is Mr. Pratt ! Sir," fays Henley gravely, "it fhews you to be a Country Attorney, or you thould know better. Go to him directly, and engage him, as I would not have a man of his abilities againft me on any confideration." The Attorney infantiy did as he was directed, and Mr. Pratt was retained in the caufe.

What this caufe was, now, perhaps, it might be difficult to trace: it, however, was of that nature as to excite much of public expectation, and Mr. Pratt prepared for it with all the exertions of his mind. He, perhaps, might have attributed a principal reafon of his not rifing long before in his profethon, partly to the ill-luck of not being concerned in fuch a caufe. He might likewife have felt the blunt but well-founded and friendly reproach on his natural diffidence; and, perhaps, he might likewife reproach himfelf for too long and too eafily yielding to the habits of despondence. These, or some of thefe, at least, we are warranted to fuppofe were his reflections, as in this caufe we find the powers of his great mind first called out into action.

Mr. Henley was taken ill upon the day of trial, and Mr. Pratt, of courfe, took the lead, and difplayed a profettional knowledge and elecution that caufed the admiration of his brother Barrifters, as much as that of the whole Court. In fhort, the iffue of that day's trial was, that belides gaining his caufe, he gained the reputation of an eloquent, profound, and conflictutional lawyer.

When Mr. Pratt returned to London,

the good luck of a popular caufe to aid the brilliancy of his talents, he at once fracted inte public notice, and his first year's fees are faid to have amounted to confiderably above one thousand pounds. His practice and reputation have every year fince increased, and it is generally understood, that he has made more money than any man of the profession in the same number of years. don, he found the bruit of his profefional fame before him, which his friend Henley took care to cultivate by all the good offices in his power. Lefides fiving him a part of that great bufnefs which flowed in upon him, he introduced him to feveral of the leading characters of that day, and in particular to Mr. Pitt (afterwards Earl of Chatham), between whom a friendfhip forung up, and continued to the death of the latter, no lefs creditable to their talents and integrity, than uf.ful and honourable to their country.

As we would wish to mark the progrefs of this celebrated character as much as possible through the feveral gradations of life, we must here take notice of the fecond great event which called out his professional talents, and placed his fame upon that basis which rendered it marked and permanent, and for ever after shielded and protected it from neglect and infecurity.

This was the celebrated cafe of Owen the Bookfeller, for publishing "A Defence of Alexander Murray, Efq." in 1751, and afterwards in the Contefted Election between Lord Wenman and Sir James Dafhwood on one fide, and Lord Parker and Sir Edward Turner on the other. Mr. Pratt was Counfel for the former, as he had been for Owen, and fo diftinguished himfelf for his eloquence, his skill, and patriouism, as not only clevated his character as a lawyer, but marked him as an able defender of the conflictutional rights of his country.

Mr. Pitt was the auditor tantum of this celebrated conteft, and, charmed with the eloquence, the professional fkill, and the integrity of his new friend, he gave him his unreferved confidence.

- Great fouls by inftinct to each other turn.
- " Melt in alliance, and in friendship burn."

From this hour they were the Pylades and Orefies of their time. Their views were alike large and honourable —their minds firm and independent their integrity unqueftionable—and the love of their country their firft and ruling paffion. To trace their characters minutely, tis true, we fhall find fome conflitutional difference of temper in the ardent, commanding figirit of Pitt, and the mild, perfuafive talents of Pratt. fame principle-their purfuits and fentiments were alike congenial, and ran to the fame common centre.

With these warm preposses in favour of his friend, when Mr. Pitt came to be appointed Secretary of State in the year 1756, he appointed Mr. Pratt his private Counfelior, with an handsome falary, in order, as that great man declared, " not only to have the benefit of fuch advice, but to guard against any inroads which he otherwise might unintentionally make on the laws and constitution of his country." The appointment was honourable to both :- to the one, as anxioufly tenacious of fulfilling the great truft repofed in him with conflitutional purity; and to the other, as performing the duty affigned him with a degree of ability, punctuality, and integrity, every way worthy of that high confidential fituation.

In 1757 Mr. Pratt was made Attorney-General in the room of Sir Robert Henley, now made Lord Keeper. Mr. Pitt jocofely played upon the temper of his friend on this occafion, who knew nothing of this intended move, by telling him he was appointed Attorney-General. "Not for the world, Sir," fays he, " to the prejudice of my oldeft and beft friend Henley." "Well, but fuppofe we kick this old friend of yours up to the Houfe of Lords, will that do ? In fact, the thing is fo, Henley is made Lord Keeper, and I wifh you joy, moft fincerely, of your new appointment of Attorney-General."

We are now to view Mr. Pratt as an official fervant of the Crown, a fituation in general fufpicious, and often, in the proper difcharge of duty, fubject to popular cenfure and difapprobation.

- " But he bore his faculties fo meek, and was
- " So clear in his great office," that though then engaged in a war which produced many trying and embarraffing fituations, he conducted himfelf with fo much wifdom, prudence, and fpirit, he balanced the prerogatives of the Crown and the liberties of the people " with fuch even-handed and conditutional juffice," that during the courfe of his five years Attorney-Generalthip, he had the thanks and rewards of his Sovereign, with the unanimous approbation of the people.

From the office of Attorney-General Mr. Pratt (now Sir Charles Prat.) afcended the Bench, being appointed Lord Chief Juffice of the Court of C a Common Common Pleas in 1762 (after having been chosen Representative for the Borough of Downton, Wiltshire.in 1759, and made Recorder of Bath the fame year). In this elevated fituation it became this illustrious character to thew the extent of his legal knowledge, and the independency of his principles; and an occasion foon after prefented itfelf for the full difplay of both-an occafion which, both in its origin and confequences, attracted the most general attention, and was no lefs creditable to the Judge who decided on it, than it was useful to the people, in fecuring to them one of their most important and invaluable privileges.

A glance at this period of our domefile hiltory will remind the Public, that we allude to the affair of General Warrants, in the feizure of Mr. Wilkes's perfon and papers on the 30th of April 1763; a period in its confequences that will be long and juftly remembered by Englifhmen, as it records the reftoration of a privilege which, though inherently their undoubted right, was long withheld from them by those who preferred being advocates for prerogative against the confricutional claims of their fellowfubjects *.

It is not our wifth, nor is it our province to overdo a caufe which took up for many years of public difcuffion as General Warrants, by going into any great detail of that important fubject; it is already fufficiently recorded—and when it becomes hiftory, will form no inconfiderable part of the memorabilia of that time. We fhall, therefore, only notice fuch parts as more particularly apply to the object of our biography, in order the better to elucidate the character he fo juftly acquired in the fituation of Lord Chief Juffice of the Common Pleas.

Mr. Wilkes having his houfe entered by four Meffengers of the Crown on the 3cth of April 1763 (under a warrant for feizing the Authors, Printers, and Publithers of the North Briton, No. 45), and next day (having undergene a previous examination before the Secretaries of State) being committed a prifener to the Tower, a Habeas Corpus was foon after granted for his being breught before the Court of Common Pleas; and after his cafe had been argued for fome time by his Counfel, the Court took time to give their opinion, and for this purpofe remanded him to the Tower 'till the 6th of May following, when, being on that day brought up before the Court, and making a very ipirited and conflictutional fpeech on that occasion, the Lord Chief Juffice Pratt delivered the refolution of the Court (which was unanimous) as follows:

"When this return was read my brother Glynn, Counfelfor Mr. Wilkes, made two objections to it, and though thefe flould fail him, he infitted that Mr. Wilkes, from the nature of his particular flation and charafter, as being a Member of the Houfe of Commons, was entitled to privilege of Parliament, and ought, for that reafon alone, to be difcharged from his prefent impriforment.

" To begin with the objections-the first was, that it did not appear by the Warrant that Mr. Wilkes flood charged upon any evidence with being the Author of the libel defcribed in the warrant. The true question arising upon this objection is, Whether stating the evidence be effential to the validity of the warrant? and upon this point we are all clearly of opinion that the We confider the warrant is good. Secretaries of State in the light of common Juffices of the Peace, and they, no more than any common Juffices, can iffue warrants merely ex officio, or for offences within their private knowledge, being in these cafes rather witneffes than magistrates. But though this be admitted, it will not affect the prefent The present question is, question. Whether the ftating the evidence be effential to the validity of the warrant? No authority has been cited by the defendant's Counfel to fhew it-Ruddyard's Cafe, in Vent. 22. was indeed referred to, but upon examining that cafe, it does not apply ;- the commitment there was a commitment in execution, and therefore it was ne-

* When this fubject was difcuffed in the Honfe of Lords fome time afterwards, the late Lord Mansfield obferved, "That as to the fubject of General Warrants, it was no new doctrine to pronounce them illegel, they were always confidered fo, both in our books and the fpirit of the Confliction, and every aluments in Weftminfler-hall ought to know fo." Upon which the old Duke of Newcattle repled, in his ftrong, plain manner, "It may be fo, my Lord—but —I vow to G—d, whenever this matter was debated in the Council, I always underflood your Lordship to be of a different opinion." ceffary in that cafe to flate the evidence. "It was urged further, that the ground of the Juftices' jurifdiction refled in the charge by winneffes, and if it were otherwife, every man's liberty would lie in the power of the Juftices. The objection deferves an anfwer, and if it had not been defermined before, I should have thought it very weighty and very alarming, but it has been fettled.

" Before I mention the cafe where it was folemnly adjudged, I would take notice, that neither Lord Coke, Lord Hale, nor Mr. Hawkins, all of them very able writers upon the Crown Law, have confidered fuch a charge as is contended for to be effential. In the trial of the Seven Bithops, though they were committed upon a fimilar warrant, their Counfel did not make the fame objection. In referring to that great cafe, I am not to be underfood as intending to give any weight to the determination of the Judges who fat upon the Bench in that caufe ; I rely only on the filence of the defendants' Counfel, who were all of them lovers of liberty, and the greateft Lawyers of that age. We have icen precedents of Commitments returned upon Habeas Corpus into the King's Bench, where the warrants h ve been all of the fame form, and no such objection taken. But the very point was determined in the cafe of Sir William Wyndham (3d Vin. Ab. 530. 535. Stra. 2.), who was committed for High Treafon generally, and not on the charge of any body flated in the commitment.—2d of Hawk. Pl. Cr. 120. Ch. 17, Sec. 17. refers to the cafe of Sir Wm. Wyndham, and fays, " It is fafer to fet forth that the party is charged upon oath, but that is not nesettary?' Thus ftands the point on " The other objection was, that the libel itfelf ought to be fet forth in bac verba; but upon that point to owe are all of opinion that the warrant is good. It was urged, that the specific cause of the detention ought to be frated with certainty, and therefore if a man be committed for ielony, the warrant muft briefly mention the fpecies of felony. Now the fpecies of every offence muft be collected by the Magistrate out of the evidence-but he is not bound to fet forth the evidence, he is answerable only for the inference he deduces from As to a Libel, the evidence is partly It. Internal and partiv external. The paper itlelf may not be complete and conclufive evidence, for it may be dark and unintelligible without the incuendoes, which are the external evidence. There is no other name but that of Libel applicable to the offence of libelling, and we know the offence fpecifically by that name, as we know the offences of horfeficaling, forgery, &c. by the names which the law has annexed to them.

" But two reafons were urged why the Libel ought to be ftated. Firft, it was faid, that without it the Court cannot judge whether it be a Libel or not. The answer 1s, "That the Court ought not in this proceeding to give any judgment of that fort, as it would tend to prejudication, to take away the office of a Jury. and to create an improper influence." The other reafon was, that unlefs the Libel be ftated, the Court cannot be able to determine on the quantity of bail. I answer, that regard to the nature of the offence is the only rule in bailing. As to the offence of a Libel, it is an high mildemeanor, and a good bail (having regard to the quality of the offender) should be required. But if the Libel itself was stated, we could have no other measure of bailing than this : befide, there has been no cafe fnewn to warrant this reafon, and it was not urged in the cafe of the Seven Bishops.

"But then it remains to be confidered. whether Mr. Wilkes ought not to be discharged. The King's Counfel have thought fit to admit that he was a Member of the Houfe of Commons, and we are bound to take notice of it. In the cafe of the Seven Bifhops. the Court took notice of their privilege, from their description in the warrant. In the present case there is no fuit depending ; here no writ of privilege can therefore iffue : no plea of privilege can be received; it refts, and must reft, on the admittion of the Counfel of the Crown; -it is fairly before us upon that admiffion, and we are bound to deter. mine it.

" In Lord Coke, 4th Inft. 24, 25. after fhewing that privilege of Parliament is conufable at Common Law, he fays, " that privilege generally holds, unlets it be in three cafes, viz. Treafor, Felony, and the Peace." We have not been able to have recourfe to the original record, but in Cotton's Abridgement, fol. 596, you will find my Lord Coke was right. The cafe I would refer to is that of William Lake, 9th of Hen. VI. who being a Member's fervant, and taken in execution for debt, was delivered wered by the privilege of the Houfe of Commons: The book adds (and for that purpofe I refer to it), "Wherein it is to be noted, that there is no caufe to arrett any fuch man, but for Treafon. Felony, and the Peace." In the trial of the Seven Bilhops the words "the Peace" are explained to mean "furety of the Peace."

" In the cafe of the King againft Sir T. Calpepper, reported in the 12. Mod. ro8. Lord Holt fays, "That whereas it is fuid in our books, that Privilege of Parliament was not allowable in Treafon, Felony, or breach of the Peace, it must be intended when furety of the Peace is defined, that it fhall not protect a man againft a forplicavit, but it holds as well in cafe of indictment, information for breach of the peace, as in cafe of actions.

" In the cafe of Lord Tankerville, a faw years ago, which, though not reported m any Law-book, is upon record an Parliament, it was held that bribery, being only a confructive, and not an atimat breach of the peace, thould not outh him of his privilege. There is no difference between the two Houfes of Parliament in refpect of privilege. The flatures of is and is Will. 111. ch. 3. and 2 and 3 of Anne, ch. 18. fpeak of the privilege of Parliament in reference net to one Houfe in particular, but to both Houfes.

"What then is the prefent cafe ? Mr. Wilkes, a Member of the Houfe of Commons, is committed for being the author and publisher of an infamcus and feditions libel. Is a libel ip/o facto in itfelf an actual breach of the peace ? -Dalton in his Justice of the Peace, for 289. defines a Libel " as a thing acuding to the breach of the peace.' In Sir Baprift Hicks' cafe, Hob. 224. it is called a providention to a breach of the place. In Lev. 139, The King against Summers, it was held to be an offence conufable before Juffices, becaufe it tended to a breach of the peace. In Hawk. Pl. of the Crown, 193. ch. The fee. ; it is called " athing directly a a ling to a breach of the public peace." Now that That which only tends to a breach with c peace, is not an actual breach of it, is too plain a proposition to admit of argument. But if it was admitted that The was a breach of the peace, ftill privilege cannot be excluded, unlefs it require furety of the peace, and there has been no precedent but that of the Seven Bishops cited to shew that furcties of the peace are requirable from a libeller; and as to the opinion of the three Judges in that cafe, it only ferves to shew me miserable state of justice in those days. Allybone, one of the three, was a rigid and professed P pift ; Wright and Holloway, I am much afraid, w re placed there for doing jobs ; and Powell, the only honeft man upon the Bench, gave no opinion at all. Perhaps it implies an abfurdity to demand furcties of the peace from a libeller. However, what was done in the cafe of the Seven Bifhons I am bold to deny was Law.

"Upon he whole, though it flould be admitted that fureties of the peace are requirable from Mr. Wilkes, fiil his privilege of Parliament will not be taken away till fureties have been demanded and refufed —Let him be difcharged *."

Thus was the point of privilege determined by this able and upright Judge, and Mr. Wilkes was immediately difeharged, to the fatisfaction of a moft numerous and anxious audience, who teffified their joy by universal and repeated fhouts of applaufe.

Mr. Wilkes, after this liberation, it is well known, complained to the Houfe of Commons of a breach of privilege, by the imprifonment of his perfon, &c.; but not content with this, he commenced an action in the Court of Common Pleas againft Robert Wood, Efg. the Under Secretary of State, for feizing his papers; and on the 26th December 1763, this caufe was tried before the Lord Chief Juffice Pratt and a Special Jury, at the defendant's defire; when, after a hearing of near fifteen hours, a verdict was given for Mr. Wilkes, with One Thouland Powerds damages, and full coits of fuit.

On this important occasion the Lord Chief Juftice, it is reported, clofed his charge to the Jury in the following words:

"This warrant is unconflitutional, illegal, and abfolutely void;—it is a General Warrant directed to four M. f.fengers to take upany perfons, without naming or deferibing them with any certainty, and to bring them, together with their papers. pute any one of the Mellengers, or any even from the lowest of the people to take examinations, to commit or releafe, and in fine to do every act which the highest judicial Officers the Law knows can do or order. There is no authority in our Law-books that mention these kinds of Warrants, but, in express terms, condemn them."

" Upon the matureft confideration I am bold to fay, that this Warrant is illegal; but I am far from wishing a matter of this confequence fhould reft folely upon my opinion; I an only one of T welve, whole opinions I am defirous should be taken in this matter, and I am very willing to allow myfelf the meaneft of the Twelve. There is allo a still higher Court, before which this matter might be canvaffed; and whofe etermination is final. And here I

THOUGHTS ON ANNIHILATION.

THAT many of those perfous who may properly be called the esprits forts of antiquity, fuch men as Cæfar for inftance, should have furveyed Anmihilation with fuch calm indifference, appears extraordinary to us, who are accustomed to confider the close of this life as the beginning of another .-- They may poffibly have employed fomething like the following reafoning.

Nothing feems more clear than that we cannot possibly be interested in any event, of which, and of whofe effects, we must ever remain unconfcious .--Should any one be inclined to difpute this principle, I must frankly confeis that I am unable to prove it, fince I am unable to produce any proposition more obvious than that which I would prove. Admitting then that we are not interefted in any fuch events, let us examine whether Annihilation is not precifely an event of this nature. By Annihilation is certainly meant a total extinction of all confcioufnels. Now that whoever dreads this extinction, does not do fo, we may venture to affume, from the apprehension of any peculiar pain which will attend that momentous event. The agonies of death must be endured inevitably, whether we furvive them or not; and we have no reafon to think that the extinction of the vital principle will aggravate those agonies. Annihilation must be dreaded, therefore, from the confequences which H produces. But what are those confequences ? A total suppression of all con-cannot help observing the happiness of our Conftitution in admitting those appeals, in confequence of which material points are determined on the most mature confideration, and with the greateft folemnity. To this admirable delay of the Law (for in this cafe the Law's delay may be ftiled admirable) I believe it is chiefly owing, that we potfels the best digested and most excellent body of Laws which any nation on the face of the Globe, whether ancient or modern, could ever boaft of. If these higher jurifdictions should declare my opinion erroncous, I fubmit, as will become me, and kifs the rod ; but I must fay, I shall always confider it as a rod of iron for the chaftisement of the people of Great Britain."

fcioufacis, not only of the event itfelf. and of its effects, but of all events and all effects whatever. Since, therefore, there is nothing to be dreaded in the event itfelf, abstractedly confidered, and fince it totally deftroys all confcioufnefs of its effects, Annihilation is evidently one of those events in which we are no more interested than we are in what is. transacting at Jupiter or Saturn, or in the remotest regions of space.

But it deprives us of a long and happy existence, and is therefore an evil, a tremendous evil, at which the boldeft heart must be appalled .- Can there be any evil which is not felt ? and can Annihilation be felt ? Let us suppose a being in the fruition of the most exquisite joys of which his nature is fusceptible, that he promifes himfelf a continuation of thefe joys throughout the endlefs duration of time, and that in the midth of his career he is fuddenly extinguithed. Is he difappointed ? He feels no difappointment. Is he injured ? He feels no injury. It is a lofs; you fay, he lofes eternal happinefs | But what fignifies a lofs which is not felt; and he feels no more. I could reconcile fuch an event to the character of infinite benevolence; the being was happy while he exifted, and when he ccafed to be happy, he ceased to exist.

In Annihilation, therefore, confidered as an event, there is nothing either defirable or terrible; it is neither an evil nor a bleffing; it is a matter of perfect indifference. Bur it will be faid, that that the expectation of this event is dreadful; that the proped of cealing to exilt, of parting for ever with all that we hold dear in the world, of bidding an eternal adicu to all our fondeft pleafures, our most favourite purfuits, our tenderest connections, by arming death with tenfold terrors, must embitter every enjoyment of life, and cloud the defponding brow with defpair —

-----For who would tole, Tho' full of pain, this intellectual being, Thofe thoughts that wander through eternity,

To perith rather, fwallow'd up and loft, In the wide womb of uncreated night, Devoid of lenfe and motion ?

In answer to this representation it might be fufficient to observe, that if Annihilation is really an indifferent event, of whole operation and effects we muß ever remain unconfcious, to expect it with terror must be a most egregious absurdity, fince what can be more abfurd, than to dread, as an evil, what we know is no evil at all! I am informed, that ten years hence an atom of fand will be blown from the fummit Am I grieved at this of Teneriff. event? Certainly not, fince I am perfuaded I shall never fuffer from its effects; and yet there is a pothibility, a remote poffibility, that it may ultimately afflict me with the greateft of evils; the fate of millions has, in fact, depended on as trifling a caufe. Shall I then expect this event with carelefs indifference, and yet deplore the neceffity of Annihilation, whofe effects I am abfolutely certain I fhall never feel!-But we must bid an eternal adieu to all our fondest pleasures, our most favourite pursuits, our tenderest connections .-We must indeed cease to feel the enjoyments which these objects inspire; but the moment we ceafe to feel them, we shall cease to want them; they will be no longer objects of enjoyment. While I exift I may enjoy them, and when I ceafe to exift, the defire of enjoying them, the remembrance of having enjoyed them, and the ability to enjoy them, are extinguished at the fame inftant. I am informed that I shall foon be deprived of my fight, but at the fame time I am affured that I shall fuffer no politive pain from the want of it, and that with my fight I fhall lofe all memory of having ever enjoyed it, and all knowledge that any fuch fource of enjoyment exifts. Should I grieve at the profpect of this event as at an impending evil? I certainly frould not. I thould reflect, that nothing can be an evil but the infliction of positive pain, or the deprivation of happinefs, and that both these caufes of evil are excluded in the approaching event, fince I shall neither feel any positive pain, nor be confcious of any diminution of happinefs. I should confider that, in fact, whoever dreads the extinction of fight, dreads that event, because he knows that it will be attended with a painful fensation ; that this painful fenfation (on the supposition that no postive evil will refult from the lofs) can only arife from a confcioufnefs that he once possessed a source of enjoyment of which he is no longer mafter; but that if he were deprived of the confcioufnefs of his lofs, he would have no more rea-" fon to grieve at this event, than I have to lament my hard fate becaufe I have fome idea, however vague, that other beings are happier than myfelf. But what has been obferved refpecting the privation of one sense, may be extended to two, to three, to all, to exiftence itfelf. Nay, the matter is fill ftronger and clearer in the cafe of Annihilation. fince it is abfolutely impoffible that I fhould feel any politive evil, or be confcious of any deprivation of happinels on the contingency of that event.

The fentiment of terror which attends our apprehensions of Annihilation feems, indeed, to refult from a most egregious fallacy. In the extinc-tion of existence we picture to ourfelves a dark and difinal abyfs into which we must inevitably plunge, and where we must ever remain, in a state of comfortless despair, secluded from those pleafures to which we were once to ftrongly attached, and difappointed of those profpects which we once fo fondly indulged, while other and happier beings, the productions of unborn ages, are bufied in those stations, and participating in those delights which we are no longer capacitated to fill or to enjoy ! We forget, that after Annihilation we thall no longer be confcious of darknels or horror; that all recollection of paft enjoyments or future prospects, all knowledge of what is transacting in the univerfe, all joy and forrow, all our hopes and fears, will be for ever buried in oblivion.

But, to live for ever, and be happy, is, it will be faid, after all, unqueftionably better than to ceafe to exist Most cer-

tertainly; but this only proves, that the former is a bleffing, and not, that the latter is an evil; we may wifh for the first state, but we furely should not dread the last. To live for ever, and be wretched, is the greatet of evils; to live for ever, and be happy, is the greateft of bleffings; not to exift at all is equally removed from both thefe extremes; we fhould deprecate the firft ftate, we fhould implore the fecond, we fhould regard the lait with carelefs indifference.

A LETTER FROM THE ABBE CESSAROTTI (THE ITALIAN TRANSLAT TOR OF OSSIAN'S POEMS) TO MR. MACPHERSON.

UNIVERSITED AND

SIR,

DERMIT me and all Italy to congratulate you on your happy difcovery of a new poetie world, and on the precious treafures with which you enriched elegant literature. you have every claim on the gratitude of your country, and the Public owes you much, for your travels and other works; it is better than to have brought us a barren plant or a rufty medal - No : I cannot recover my extacy : your Offian delights me; Morven is become my Parnaffus, and Laura my Hippocrene. I always rave of your heroes; I amuse myfelf with those admirable fons of the fong; I follow them from hill to hill; and your rocks, covered with tufted oaks and fogs; your formy heavens, roaring torrents, barten defarts, your meadows which are only adorned with thiftles, all that great and gloomy spectacle is more delightful to my fight than the ifland of Calypfo, or the gardens of Alcinous. The preference of antient and modern poetry has been disputed a long time, perhaps with more envy than candour. Offian, I believe, will have the superiority in the first, without letting the flick lers of the antients gain by it : it flews, by its example, how much natural and fentimental poetry exceeds confidered and tudied poetry, which feems to be the lot of the modern poets; but if it demonstrate the superiority of antient poetry, it shews us also the defects of the antient poets better than all the critics. Scotland has discovered to us a Homer, who neither flumbers nor babbles, neither rough nor languid. ever sublime and simple, rapid, concise, even, and diverfified :- but it does not belong to me to make the eulogy of Offian to him who has known fo well how to translate him with fo much force and precision as to be taken for himfelf : I will rather fay, Sir, that, in following your steps, I mean, allo, to convey this copy of verses into my mothertongue, that is to fay, into Italian blank verie, though I do not flatter myfelf of approaching the inimitable beauties of Vol. XXVI.

this great genius; but I hope by these means to fill up better the spirit of my model, and to adopt its forms .- But I must fay more, Sir; do you know that this poet has excited here terrible fquabbles ?- The antiquity of Offian has here many unbelievers, particularly among the learned : they altercate, they fly into passions, they try one in all forms, and they make game of me, who ingenuoufly yield to the fnare, and believe it antient on your word : in truth, it would not be an eafy talk to impofe upon those gentlemen, they are almost all in the state of those Thessalians, who, as Simonides faid of them, were too foolish to be the dupes of poetical illufions. Woe to all those who argue but for want of fentiment! However, thefe are fincere : there are others who do not act fo ingenuoufly, who fay that Offian is a Barbarian, he is ignorant of Greek and Latin, he knows not the mysteries of mythology, he has not read the Poetics of Aristotle, and he dares make epic poems, and, what is worfe, without machinery and without allegory. Neverthelefs, they cry him up; they dare compare him with Homer but the comparison does not always turn to the advantage of the Greek poet.-It is a pity --What can one do?-One need but fuppofe that this work is invented by a modern, to make it immediately fall to the ground. For you know very well, Sir, that those critics have demonstrated, that the moderns will never make any thing worth while, unters they plunder the antients. One may in vain fix their attention to the brilliant beautics of this poetry, and they are able to fee nothing in it ; they tell you, as a felf-fufficient anfwer, -it Among those perfons fo is modern. preposseffed with their foolish prejudices, there are fome of good fenfe and wit, to whom all this conteff is perfectly indifferent ; who, befides, would not be forry to be indebted to our own time for this excellent production; and who would find much more fire of mind in 10 D a maa modern who would have known how to write after the manner of Offian, than as Offian himfelf. For my part, if I were allowed to doubt after your evidence, I should tell you, Sir, that as I obferve in this poefy a dignity and fimplicity which of themselves bear the ftrongeft impression of nature, I find in it, alfo, fuch a delicacy of wit, a difpo-fition fo gently irregular, fo wife a circumspection in the boldest flights, fo conftant and copious a precifion, fo just an accuracy to feize that precious medium fo difficult to keep; in fhort, fo delicate and fo judicious a choice of objects and characters, that all this feems to indicate the most confummate art in knowing how to purge nature without touching it : whatever one may think of it, it is in every fense furprising ; but we know that modern Britain is fruit-

MR. EDITOR,

MONSIGNOR BENEDICT STAY (who in some late publications has been erroneoufly filed a native of Germany) was born at Ragufa in Illyria, of an antient and respectable family; and, when very young, wrote a Latin poem in fix books on the System of Defcartes, in which elegant performance are many instructive truths of moral and natural philosophy. This work was printed in one volume at Venice in the year 1744, but the author on his arrival at Rome, was perfuaded to undertake the arduous task of rendering into Lucretian verse the noble System of Philosophy introduced by our immortal Newton. This he executed in a ftyle fo mafterly and pleafing, that it is univerfally allowed to be the best Didactic Poem in the Latin Language. The first volume was printed at Rome in 1755, containing Three Books, with a Supplement and Annotations, by the celebrated Boscovich, an intimate friend and countryman of the Author. The fecond volume was in the fame manner published in 1760, but the publication of the last four books was deferred for many years on account of the Notes, till at length Abate Boscovich brought them with him on his return to Italy, after a long absence, but was prevented by death from finishing the Supple-The laft volume, containing ment. thefe Four Books, with Annotations, was printed at Rome in 1792, and at the fame time was published another edition in one volume, including the ful in wonderful wits; and it may be doubted whether Scotland in the third century was not. But for reafons, fcruple, or indulgence for the weaknefs of others, I cannot help, Sir, making an enquiry of you (which I beg you will not think prefuming): candidly, Sir, am 1 to admire you as a man full of knowledge and wit, or am I to venerate you as the greatest painter in nature ?-If it is fo, I shall be far from being angry, like Scaliger with Muret. Let Offian be antient or not, he will always be fo by his file: those who judge of him by this fide may be very fure of not being mistaken .- However, Sir, if my boldness or prefumption will obtain me the honour of an answer from you, I shall always think that I have gained much by it.

whole poem, in ten books without notes.

It is fearcely poffible to conceive with what purity of diction, and with how much perfpicuity and precision, the profound truths unveiled to us by Newton, are explained and exemplified, while the various epifodes, introduced at the commencement and conclusion of each book, form the most animated and interefting pictures of focial and political life. Amongst these, a sketch of the different forms of government, the effects of fire, the description of a Volcano, and the difcovery of Herculaneum, are peculiarly pleafing ; but it would be an endlefs talk to enumerate the various beauties of this learned work.

It must be grateful to every lover of science and literature to be informed that the respectable Prelate, its Author, ftill enjoys health and univerfal efteem in one of the most active and important. employments at Rome, that of Secretary of the Briefs to Princes, a post to which he was raifed in 1769, after having been seven years Secretary for Latin Episitles. His judgment, integrity, and indefatigable diligence in the exercise of his duty, are objects of general admiration; and all who are acquainted with his private life confesa that his virtues as a man are equal to his talents as a Poet, a Philosopher, and a Statelman.

The following lines were written, as a very fmail tribute of refpect and efteem effeem for this truly great Author, in a blank leaf of his laft edition of the Newtonian Philofophy, and the claffical reader will be pleafed to fee them elegantly translated into the language of antient Rome.

IN this immortal work appear combin'd The various efforts of the human mind; With ev'ry charm of antient learning tranght, And all the truths by modern feience taught. O Srax! thou glory of Illyria's thores, Whofe lofty genius Nature's power explores, Whofe foul with twofold infpiration glows; (Such gifts indulgent Providence beftows) United thine in each inftructive page The Roman Poet, and the Britifh Sage.

AN ACCOUNT OF HENRY BROCKE, Esq.

THOUGH this Author has been dead but eleven years, many difficulties have arifen in the attempt to procure materials for his Life. The reafon is this: he lived to fo advanced an age, that most of his contemporaries departed before him; and of his numerous offspring but one daughter furvives *, who being the child of his old age, remembers nothing of her father previous to his retirement from the world, and knows little more of him than that he bore the infirmities and misfortunes of his declining years with the heroifm of true Christianity, and that he was poffeffed of virtues and feelings which fhone forth to the laft moments of his life, unimpaired by the diffractions of pair, and unfhaken amid the ruins of genius.

From an old contemporary and relation, we learn the following circumftances of him :

That he was born in the year 1706: his father, the Rev. William Brooke of Kantavan, Rector of the parifhes of Killinkare, Mullough, Mybullough, and Licowie—a man of great talents and amiable worth, and one of those who were chosen members of the convocation proposed to be held in the year

: his mother was a Digby. He was educated at Dr. Sheridan's School, fent early to Dublin College, and from thence removed to the Temple in his feventeenth year. There the engaging fweetnefs of his temper and peculiar vivacity of his genius, caught the notice and eltern of almoit all then in London, who were themfelves remarkable for talents and for learning: Switt prophefied wonders of him-Pope affecINGENIUM, quod res naturæ invadere cœcas, tionately loved him. Thus flattered and encouraged, he returned to Ireland to fettle his affairs and be called to the bar.

The illnefs of an aunt whom he tenderly loved cut fhort the paternal carefles and welcome, and haftened him to Weftmeath to receive her laft adieus. This lady, who had always been paffionately fond of her amiable nephew, evinced in her dying moments the moft implicit and firm reliance on his honour and worth : the committed to his guardianfhip her daughter, a fine lively and beautiful girl, of between eleven and twelve, but flightly portioned, and therefore in ftill the greater need of a protector, and then died in peace.

He efcorted his mourning ward to Dublin, where his father and mother then were, and placed her at a boarding-school, Here she improved in beauty and accomplishments : the visits of her guardian were frequent, and love ftole on their young hearts, unperceived, indeed, by themfelves, but plainly apparent to the schoolfellows of Mils Means. whofe obfervations and raillery, quickened, perhaps, by jealoufy, frequently drew tears of embarrafiment and vexation from her eyes. She complained of this to her coulin -- but he was too much ermoured to discontinue his attentiers-and fhe loved him too much, to facrifice his company to prudential confiderations ; the confequence was, they married each other fecretly ; and upon difcovery, were again married in prefence of his father and mother ; and Mrs. Brooke had her first shild before the was fourteen.

Here

* This lady died in the course of the laft year.

Here was an end for a while to bufinefs-to ambition-to every thing hut love: the enthufiafm of youthful fondnefs wrapt every other object from their view; and it was not till after the birth of their third child, that Mr. Brooke could be prevailed on, by the prefling folicitations of his friends, to think of getting forward in a line of life that might enable him to make handfome provision for a family fo prematurely brought on.

He went a fecond time to London; but poetry was as fatal there, as love had been in Ircland. The ftudy of the law appeared dryer than ever: he renewed his intimacy with the belles lettres and their proteilors; and he wrote his poem of Univerfal Beauty under the eye and criticifm of Mr. Pope, who prophefied the expansion of his genius and fame, from a beginning fo very wonderful in fo very young a man.

Soon, however, he was obliged to return-family affairs demanded his prefence. The number of his children now increafing faft, made increafe of fortune to be wilhed for. He therefore practifed as chamber counfel, while circumftances obliged him to remain in Ire-Ind.

In 1737 he went a third time to London, where his company was fought with avidity by the very first perfons and characters of the age. The amiable Lord Lyttelton foon diffinguished and cherished a mind and genius fo fimilar to his own-Pope received him with open arms-Mr. Pitt (the late Lord Chatham) was particularly fond of him, and introduced him to the Prince of Wales, who careffed him with uncommon familiarity, and prefented him with many elegant and valuable tokens of his friendship .- Here, flushed with ambition, glowing with emulation, and elevated with praise, his genius foared to its zenith, and inatched all its fire from the altar of Apollo, to animate the foremost production of human powershis tragedy of Guffavus Vafa.

Though in this play a candid enemy could have different onling exceptionable, yet Government took offence at the fpirit of liberty which it breathed. They clofed the theatres against it, but could not prevent its publication: the prefs was still open; and his friends, enraged at the treatment he received, work the management of his tragedy into their own hands, and fubscriptions poured in upon it in fuch a golden tide as exceeded his moft fanguine ideas and hopes. The oppofition of Government, the exertions of his friends, and the publication of his play, noifed abroad his reputation a thoufand fold, and confirmed his coufidence of fuccefs: he took a houfe at Twickenham, near to Mr. Pope's, for the advantage of his intimacy and friendfhip, furnifhed it genteelly, hired fervants, and fent for Mrs. Brooke, who followed him to London, and was propofed by the Prince to be nurfe to his prefent Majefty, of whom the Princefs was then pregnant.

Thus every with was gratified, and every, prospect smiled, in love and in friendship, in fortune and in fame-all was flattering, and all was gay. But this bright fky was foon and fuddenly overcaft : he was feized with a violen: and unconquerable ague-the phyfician gave him over, and he was ordered, as a last but forlorn hope, to return to his native air. He did fo, and recovered, proposing immediately to go back to London, and refume the fociety and advantages he had left behind : but unfortunately this defign was never put in execution; nor could his friends ever draw from him the true reason of a conduct fo very unaccountable. To fome particular intimates, however, he acknowledged his motive; it was this:

Party, while he was in London, ran extremely high. The heart of his beloved patron, the Prince of Wales, went with the people, of whom he was the darling, and detefted the venal meafures of the Ministry. Mr. Brooke was thought to have an eye to this, in his play of Guftavus Vafa; and that was the chief cause of its being perfecuted by Government. But his loyal foul, confcious of its own integrity, was irritated at the undeferved treatment he had received, and openly avowed his refentment. Soon after, the King broke publicly with his fon, and the Prince withdrew himfelf from Court, and as publicly professed himfelf averie to a Ministry which he looked upon to be enemies both to Country and to King. The breach grew every day wider; and it was feared by many that a civil war might enfue.

Mr. Brooke, who was paffionately attached to his Prince, had his ears filled with exaggerated flories of the injurious treatment he met with, and was fuppofed too tamely to endure. He was enraged: he openly efpoufed his patron's quartel, and determined to exert all his powers to thunder forth his virtues and his wrongs to the world.

Mrs. Brooke, aware of the imprudent zeal of her hufband, and trembling for his fafety, was terrified at his refolution, and dreaded nothing fo much as the thought of his returning to London; the very mention of it threw her into tears, and all the agonics of despair. In thort, the at last conquered, and prevailed with him to lay alide the lifted pen-to dispose of his house in Twickenham-difmifs his fervants-and determine to remain in his native country, lafe from the rage of party, and all the dangers of ambition. In vain did his friends, on both fides of the water, remonstrate to him on the madness of relinquishing all the bright prospects that Smiled fo fair and fo flattering before him. They could fay no more to him than he was confcious of himfelf; yet, n spite of all that friends, interest, or glory could urge, he fill remained in Ireland----

- " Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
- " But fondly overcome of female charm."

During this period of his life, he kept up a conftant literary correspondence with most of the geniuses of the age; but unfortunately all these letters were confumed, with many other valuable papers and effects, by an accidental fire. Two of them from Mr. Pope are particularly to be lamented, wherein his character appeared in a light peculiarly amiable. In one of them he profeffed himfelf in heart a Protestant, but apologized for not publicly conforming, by alledging, that it would render the eve of his mother's life unhappy. In another very long one, he endeavoured to perfuade Mr. Brooke to take orders, as being a profettion better fuited to his principles, his disposition, and his genius, than that of the law, and alto lefs injurious to his health.

Why he declined this advice of his friend is not now known; nor can we collect any material incident to fill up a long interregnum which here muft be left in his life. While barrack-mafter under Lord Chefterfield—while writer of the Farmer's Letters, &c. he paffed, no doubt, through many bufy and interefting fcenes; but we know little that can be related with certainty Concerning him.

Wearied, at length, with fruitless efforts to arouse the flumbering genius of his country—difgufted with her ingratitude—and fick of her venaity, he withdrew to his paternal feat, and there in the fociety of the Mufes, and the peaceful bofom of domefic love, confoled himfelf for loft advantages and difappointed hopes. An only brother, whom he tenderly loved, accompanied his retirement, with a family almoft as numerous as his own; and there, for many years, they lived together with uninterrupted harmony and affection : the nephew was as dear as the fom—the uncle as revered as the father—and the fifter-in-law almoft as beloved as the wife.

Here he devoted himfelf wholly to the Muses. He wrote feveral of his fineft tragedies, and formed golden hopes of their fuccels upon the English frage, from his interest with Mr. Garrick, who profefied for him (while he lived in London) the highest effecem: but here he was greatly deceived, for Garrick was no longer, as formerly, his friend.

In 1774 he had preffed him earneftly to write for the stage, and offered to enter into articles with him for a shilling a line for all he fould write during life, provided that he wrote for him alone. This Garrick looked upon as an extraordinary compliment to Mr. Brooke's abilities; but he could not, however, bring him over to his opinion, nor prevail with him to accept of his offer; on the contrary, he rejected it with fome degree of haughtinefs-for which Garrick never forgave him. He was then in the full and flattering career to fortune and to fame, and would have thought it a difgrace to hire out his talents, and tie himfelf down to neceffity.

The Irifh ftage was ftill open; he tried it, and was tolerably fuccefsful, but not equal to his hopes and his occafions. Ever too fanguine in expectations and projects—generous to profufion—and thoughtlefs of the morrow, his hand was as open as his heart was feeling: no friend paffed by him uncherithed—no diffrefs unrelieved. In fhort, he was compelled to mortgage', and at laft to fell, the

He left the country, and rented a houfe and domain in Kildare, where he refided for a few years.

But his heart Aill hovered round the fcenes fcenes of his happiest hours : he left Kildare, aud took and improved a farm in the vicinity of his once-loved habitation. This, however, he intended for a fummer refidence only, but was afterwards obliged to fettle entirely there, on account of Mrs. Brooke's declining health, which did not permit her to return to Dublin. Shortly after, fhe died, and with her all his happinefs, and the better part of his exiltence, fled; for his intellects n.ver after recovered the shock of this separation, after a union of near fifty years, enjoyed with a harmony of affection which misfortune ftrove in vain to empitter -which no length of time could fatiate -nor any thing interrupt but death.

Previous to this laft calamity the lofs of a favourite child (the feventeenth deceased) gave a fevere blow to his conflitution) already weakened by long tludy, and beginning to bend beneath the preffure of years. The agitation of his mind brought on, with extreme violence, a megrim, to which he had at times been a little fubject from his youth ; and the death of his wife completing what that had begun, reduced him, for a length of time, to a flate of aimoft total imbecility. The care of the phyficians, indeed, in some measure restored him, but still the powers of his mind were decayed, and his genius flashed but by fits.

This, indeed, is too evidently perceivable in those of his works which were written after the wheels of his mental chariot began to drive heavily. In the latter volumes of " The Fool of Quality," and his fubfequent novel of " Juliet Grenville," we trace, with a mixture of regret and awe, the magniticent ruins of genus.

Both thefe books were written with a

NOTES UPON W. M.'s TREATISE ON PRIVATE EDUCATION *.

BY AN OLD SCHOOLMASTER.

" If thou he wife, thou shalt be wife for thyfelf ; but if theu feornest, than alone shalt bear it." PROVERBS. trained in the fervice, or elfe, in general,

THERE is too much of declamation and of Latin in this Treatife. Declamation proves nothing; and Latin terves only to make ignorant perfons think how learned that perion mult be el at quotes it. The public reacher is more likely to be a good scholar, and a better niafter, than the private one, as the one appoints himfelf, the other is a pointed by others. The private tu-or has no experience of his own abilities; the public teacher is either view to moral and religious improvement. A mere novel could never have been plasned by a heart and head like his; but he knew that fystem is coldly received, and a fet of rules for thought or conduct, would be little relithed or read: he therefore choic his ftory purely as a conduit for infiruction; and mast faccessfully he chose it; at once he charms, elevates, and melts the foul ! If I may use the expression, he steals us into goodness, and cheats us into improvement; and while we think he only means to amuse the imagination, he informs the understanding, corrects the judgment, and mends the heart. The falcinating powers of his genius lay the irritation of the mental nerve afleep, while, with a kind and skilful hand, he probes the mental wound ; or, as he makes his Taffo thus clegantly fpeak in English-

"His bitter fo the friendly leech conceals,

And with the fraud of latent med'cine hcals;

To the fick tafte he promises delight,

And obvious freets the infant lip invite :

- Health, ambush'd in the potton, is imbib'd,
- For man must even to happiness be brib'd."

Mr. Brooke seems never for a moment to lose fight of this great end. It was, indeed, his character, and, of courfe, is diffused in his works, which breathe throughout the vital fpirit of piety and benevolence, and contain not a fingle line which virtue and religion need blush to own.

Should he be unfit for what he undertakes, his unfitnefs foon becomes known, and he is displaced. The private tutor goes on, thould he be unfit, mankind in general not being very quick-fighted in finding out their own defects, more especially when the dilcovery is attended with lois of emolument. The private tutor has not equal experience in finding out the difpon-of some estimation in an University.

tions of young perfons as the public tutor has, and he has more interest to deceive the parent, as he has no emolument but what he receives from the parent. One great mischief of private education is, that it is confined to the fons of the nobility, or to the fons of those of large fortunes-the great and the rich. All government has fear for its effence; the man fears pains and penalties for his crimes and vices, the boy fears the rod for his faults, or at least should fear it. If, however, the magifirate or the mafter know not how to temper their punishments, they are equally tyrants. The abufe, however, of any thing is not to be pleaded against its use. An advertisement from a teacher of a private feminary came out a few years ago, intended, most pro-bably, for mothers, thus penned :--" Sweet babes ! their rol fhall be a rod of roles; the thorns shall be removed." Public education does not originally corrupt boys; it may, perhaps, fometimes give to the corrupt fome opportunities of gratification, which they will get at in a more private, and, of courfe, a more dangerous way. Shame does not touch the foul but hy reflection. In private education boys have nothing round them to reflect it. The imputation of cowardice, meannefs, felfifinefs, floth. and tyranny, is felt in public fchools as in public life. To ftudy, to think, and to act in public, must furely be necessary to qualify those who are intended for the tumult of public life, All public life is in a degree tumultuous-the officiating in a Church, pleading in Court of Justice, the Parliament House, the Universities, County Meetings, Parifh Meetings, Holpital Meetings, and even common company and conversation are to a certain point. Composition and quantity are, in general, taught with more effect in a public than in a private school. Where, indeed, the mafter is a fcholar, and has been well and regularly brought up, as in fome few of the private ichools near London, that observation does not apply, yet there is ftill fome power of mind given by numbers, which a few boys cannot fupply. With refpect to quantity, indeed, and composition, a very late inftance, by a gentleman, who not only educates, but was educated at a very private fchool, fhews that thefe two effentials of a well grounded learning may be taught with great effect *. EMERITUS.

OBSERVATIONS CONCERNING THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE HUMAN MIND.

MAN, as possessing various properties in common with other species of animals who inhabit the earth, forms a fubject of natural history, but the re-fearches of the naturalist have only extended to the mere animal part of man: the peculiar conformation of his body, the varieties in the species, its reproduction by the ordinary process of generation, the period of human life, and the probable influence of climate on the figure, the colour, and the conftitution of mankind, are the circumftances to which, in general, the writers on natural history have confined their attention; while the properties of the human mind, those superior endowments which most highly diferimihate the fpecies, and which conffitute the most noble part of its nature, have been confidered as foreign to that fub-Ject, and as forming a diftinct branch of fludy-a branch of fludy which in the prefeut day feems to be the ob-ject of almost universal distaste and neglect. Under the obnoxious name of Metaphyfics, the philosophy of the mind fiands feparated from every other fubject of human enquiry, as a dark and decary fludy, uncertain in its principles, and in the purfuit equally unpleafant and unprofitable. Men of fenfibility and genius turn from it with contempt and difguft, and reprefent it as having a teudency to introduce into the mind a gloomy and feeptical confusion, and to render it unfufceptible of the pleafures which arife from refined tafte and elegant differment.

Should we trace the annals of feience, it might perhaps appear, blat, the powerful influence of fabion has extended even to the objects of learned diffcution. Some important diffcovery in phyfics, or the predilection of fome celebrated patron of feience for a particular fubject, may be fufficient to turn for a time the general tide of enquiry into one channel, and to ftamp a mode on the fludy of the day. How far fuch a caufe may have operated in the prefent cafe, I pretend not to determine, and we may certainly find a more fpecious foundation for the obloquy under which the feience of the mind at prefent labours. It may be allowed, that the various different fyftems and irreconcileable theories of the mind, which have fucceffively been obtruded on the world, have, not without fome appearance of reafon, brought the fludy into diffepute, in an age which juftly rejects all hypothefis, and admits no principle that will not fandthe fevereft teft of experiment.

But whatever may have been the caufe which has produced this almost univerfal difguft, the importance and utility of the fubject itfelf will fcarcely be denied by any who duly confider the relation which it bears to every other department of fcience. It is fuch a refearch alone that will lay open to the critic the true principles of the fine arts ; which will discover to the writer on Ethics the genuine fource of moral diffinction; or which can enable the philosopher to determine what truth is, to trace fcience to its original germ, and to unfold the first general principles of human knowledge.

But, to form a general fystem of mental philosophy; to develope the various powers and faculties of the human mind; to inveftigate the laws, the extent, and the limits of peception ; to explain with precision the general principles of affociation ; to trace the fource of human paffion, fentiment, and emotion, and to point out the influence of the active and perceptive powers of the mind on the formation of character, on the arts, and on the general bufinefs and happinefs of human life, constitute a plan, the execution of which is fcarcely to be expected from any individual, even of the first order of talents. And, notwithstanding the many volumes which have been written on this subject, ftill fo imperfect is the theory of the human mind, that fome of its most fimple phœnomena have been accounted for, by different writers, on principles totally inconfistent one with the other; and we may note, at this day, three diftinct fystems, in which even the perception of external objects by the fenfes, is explained by means each varying effentially from the others.

Of thefe, two are of fome ftanding, the third is but recent. The first may be called the philosophy of Mr. Locke, as explained in his "Effay on the Underftanding;" for notwithstanding fome of the principles of this fystem may, perhaps, be traced to a high antiquity, or found in the writings of iome modern foreigners, yet as Mr. Locke's "Effay on the Underftanding" has become, in fome degree, a claffical book in this country, we may, in conformity with the general fentiment, confider him as the parent of this theory. To detail the particular principles of a philofophy fo generally known, would be altogether fuperfluous, and I fhall only point out that leading feature by which it is diftingufhed from the other theories I mean to notice.

It appears from the writings of this philosopher, that he was fensible we have no direct absolute proof of the existence of external material objects independent of the mind, and he was contented to admit this exiftence on the tekimony of the fenses; or rather, we should fay, he took it for granted, not being able to fhake off that perfusion of external existence, which is fo universal among mankind, and which had taken poffettion of his mind before he commenced to be a philosopher. But from an attentive observation of the phoenomena of his own mind, he was convinced that tafte, odour, found, heat and cold, and colour, were only fenfatious, or certain effects produced on the mind through the medium of the organs of fenfe, and not qualities exifting externally in bodies. Confidering, however, the external bodies as the cautie or occafion of exciting there effects, by their action on the nerves or organs of fenfe, he called them the fecondary qualicies of body; while, to extension, figure, folidity, &c. he gave the name of primary qualities, as being effential to body, which cannot be conceived to exift without them. But fince thefe primary qualities can only be perceived or conceived in conjunction with or by the means of fenfation, or the fecondary qualities above-mentioned, he admitted, that the immediate objects of human perception were not the external objects themfelves, but only ideas, or transcripts, or refemblances of them in the mind; thus fuppofing two diffinct fets of things, the one the ideas immediately perceived, the other their external apchetypes, or the material objects faid to be perceived by the intervention of the ideas. This system may, therefore, not improperly be diftinguished by calling it the theory of double existence.

LONDON REVIEW AND LITERARY JOURNAL,

Fer JULY 1794.

Quid Sut turpe, quid utile, quid dulce, quid non.

Graphic Illustrations of Hogarth from Pictures, Drawings, and fcarce Prints in the Poffethon of Samuel Ireland, Author of this Work, of a Picturefque Tour through Holland, Brabant, &c. and of the Picturefque Beauties of the Rivers Thames and Medway. 4to. Price 21. 55. Faulder and Egerton.

THE very rapid fale of the two volumes of Hogarth Illustrated, written by Mr. John Ireland and published for Meffrs Boydell, may, perhaps, have been one inducement to Mr. Samuel Ireland publishing this volume, which 15 however upon a plan materially different; the professed obj & of the former being to illustrate only fuch prints as have intrinfic merit, without any regard to those early productions that have little except their fearcity to recommend them. We would not by this be fuppofed to throw any flight on the early productions of fo admirable an artift,-to use the author's own words .- As specimens for cabinet use, and for the collector of Hogarth's prints, they are curious and ufeful : but when we are told that thirty-three Imall prints, for engraving of which the artist did not probably receive the half of thirty-three pounds, have fold for more than two hundred and feventy, we are inclined to put three notes of admiration at the end of the fentence.

In the volume there are fixty prints, fome of them engraved by Mr. Ireland, and others by his daughters: the Shop-Bill for Samuel Hardy, in the manner of Callot, appears to be the work of a practifed artift. The five from Bever's Military Punifhments, two from Paradife Loft, and fome others, give a very good idea of the originals. The fmall oval from the Rape of the Lock is onby an outline, taken, as the author in-Vol. XXVI.

forms us, from a tracing which he made at Strawberry Hill, by the permiffion of the prefent Lord Orford. Of this print (which by the way once fold for thirty-three pounds) we believe there are only three, viz. the abovementioned, a fecond in the poffeilion of Mr. Steevens, and a third in that of M. John Ireland. The Shop-Bill for Richard Lee unquestionably bears a ftrong resemblance to The Modern Midnight Conversation; but as that was publithed about the year 1728, is it not barely poffible that the hint for this may have been fuggefied by it, and be the production of fome contemporary engraver? The Shop-Bill reprefent-ing the Commerce of Florence, &c. is extremely well imagined. The four prints in aquatinta, faid to be por-traits of Martin Folkes, Pope, Addifon, &c. do not give an idea of Ho-garth's manner. That which is faid to be Martin Folkes, bears a trong refemblance to what Doctor Johnfon was in the younger part of his life. In the Ticket of James Figg the Prize-Fighter we do not discern any thing like Hogarth's manner. His name is under it ;-but we cannot think with Mr. Ireland that it is probable Sympfon, by whom it is etched, could infert Hogarib fecit from ignorance. He might possibly have a lefs excufable motive; he knew that the name would add to the fale, and therefore infert-ed it. Of The Complicated Richardian we are inclined to entertain a fimilar E opinion :

opinion ;-but be that as it may, the fubject and manner of treating it is too naufeous to lay before the public. Neither The Oratory Chapel nor Palquin are worthy of Hogarth; as well as Joe Miller's Ticket, which is fomewhat better executed: they bear a diftant refemblance to an eighth print to Apuleins, which we have feen handed about as the work of this great artift, but which is a manifest, and we fuspect a modern, imposition. The Falle Perspective Exemplified, though in some particulars inferior to that which is inferted in Kirby's book, has great merit; and the head of Theodore Gardelle, which was touched by Hogarth, is highly characteristic. That, as well as some of the other prints in this volume, was published a few years fince, without any explanatory letter-press.

With respect to the paper and printing, this, like Mr. Ireland's other publications, is entitled to praife; but tho' it has been advertised as properly making a third volume to Mr. John Ireland's two volumes, with another title, Graphic Illustrations, with a different fized type and a different fized paper, we do not discover how it can be properly confidered in that light. Belides, it has been announced to the public, that Mr. John Ireland has, fince his fecond edition was printed, obtained a great number of manufcripts, &c. that were in Mr. Hogarth's possession when he died, and is now arranging them for a third and last volume to his own work.

Concerning Button's Coffee-Houfe, Spiller and Milward the players, and the eccentric Orator Herly, this volume contains many entertaining anecdotes. Some extracts from Mr. Ireland's account of the laft will afford a fpecimen of the manner in which the fubjects are treated.

" This fingular character, John Henly, was born at Melton Mowbray, Leicefterfhire, in 1691, of which parifh his father and grandfather were both vicars. Having paffed his exercifes at Cambridge he returned to his native place, and from an affiftant became mafter of the febool there, which he raifed from an obfeure to a flourithing flate. Here he obtained much applaule from his mode of improving elecution by public orations, and repeating paffages from the claffics every morning and evening. He likewife begun here his Universal Grammar, in which he completed ten languages, with a proper introduction to every tongue. The eccentricity of his mind did not, however, fuffer him to remain long in this state of retirement; for, after having obtained his degree of Master of Arts, he formed a speedy resolution of visiting London, and, as he fays, "left the fields and swains of Arcadia to visit the great city," which he accomplished, and quitted his native place with the regret of his neighbours and fchool, as appears by his departure being accompanied with letters of recommendation. both from the clergy and laity of the first consequence. In London he published fome translations from Pliny, the Abbe Vertot, Montfaucon, &c. and had for his patron the Earl of Maccleffield, from whom he had a benefice of eighty pounds a year.

"He had befides a Lectureship in the City, where he frequently preached charity fermons, obtained more relief for the poor, and was perhaps more generally followed than any preacher of his time.

"Thefe advantages he voluntarily gave up, choofing rather to rely "on the public as the more hofpitable protectors of learning and feience than fome of the upper world in his own order." His addreffes to the public were commenced at his own Oratory Chapel in Portfmouth-ftreet, Lincoln's Inn Fields; where fometimes he broke jefts, and fometimes that bread which he called the primitive cucharift. The room that was his chapel is yet ftanding, and is ufed as a ware-room for upholfterers goods. There he lectured two days in the week upon theology, and on one other day, Wednefday, upon other feiences."—

——" The late Duke of Newcafile, when fecretary of flate, was applied to by the Orator to render him a fervice; which not being complied with, he, in a petulant way, replied, " Remember I bave a pen;" to which the Duke retorted, " And my brother (meaning Harry Pelham) fhall mend that fer for you."

A Letter to the Right Hon. Earl Stanhope, in which the Neceffity of the War is confidered, and the Conduct and Views of Great Britain and her Allies vindicated. 8vo. 2s. 6d. Miller.

THE complexion of the times at prefent is fuch, that it is highly reasonable the attention of every confiderate man should be deeply engaged, as this writer observes, both upon the paifing circumftances, and alfo upon the conduct and language of men of emipence. The figure which the Noble Perfon to whom this pamphlet is addreffed, has lately made in the Senate, having excited no fmall degree of notice, it is not to be wondered at that he should be made the subject of public remonstrance. The Author of this epifile treats him very freely in a mingled firain of pointed irony and ferious expostulation. He enters upon a difcuilion of the merits of the war; examines its origin very carefully; and from the conduct of the French proves the aggression in this contest to be entirely on their fide, and confequently a zealous opposition on our's to have The evibeen abfolutely necessary. dences of their hoftile views against this country are fhewn to be many, and they are here brought forward in a ftrong and forcible point of view.

Our Author next confiders the progrefs of the war during the laft campaign, from which he infers that the advantages in favour of the Allies have been neither few nor inconfiderable. He rifes into a clofe invettigation of the object of the war, which he maintains has not been obtained; "for," as he juftly obferves, "the object of the war is the fecurity of Europe. This fecurity," fays he, "cannot fubfit while a fyftem continues in fuch a country as France, the very primary principle of which is hoftile to every political conftitution, and every duty of religion."

Noticing the propoled negociation for peace with France, by a preparatory acknowledgment of her Republican Government, this writer glows with indignation, and his animadverfion upon the measure is in a high firain of animation. The fuppoled great refources of our enemy, and which have been fo much dwelt upon, are here very minutely examined, and proved not to be fo formidable as reprefented.

Speaking of the enthufiafm by which the people of France are actuated, the Letter-writer acutely remarks, that "Enthusiafm, in general, deftroys itfelf by the violence of its own efforts. It may, indeed, occafion a lofs to the objects of its animofity; it may violently break in pieces well-organized and regulated focieties, and produce dreadful calamities for a time: but the moment of relaxation owing to exceflive fatigue, and that of reflexion after intemperate intoxication, muff eventually fueceed."

The following picture and contraft are fo well drawn and oppofed, that we truft our Readers will readily excufe us for giving the whole at length. « I shall here be told, perhaps," fays our Author, " that the fweeping fuccefs and unabated fanaticism of the Saracens, like a cloud of deftroying locufts, ceafed not until they had covered a large part of Afia, of Africa, and of Europe. That the fwords of regular and valiant foldiers, with the banner of the Crofs. were, in vain, opposed to the ravages of these enthusiastic sons of the defert. That disciplined armies fell before them like grafs, and that the Crefcent of the Impostor furmounted the Cross of Chrift on the magnificent temple of Constantinople. Defponding, though well-intentioned minds will fuggeft this as a powerful instance of the force of enthufialm, and their glocmy fears wi'l draw from it alarming conclusions parallel to the prefent fituation of Europe. But who were the Saracens? and what was their enthufiaim ?

" They were the wild inhabitants of a wild climate; robbers by inheritance, and rovers by necessity. Mahomet taught them doctr nes that exactly fuited their flate and inclination. He made the ignorant barbarians believe that the fuccefs of their arms was the criterion of the approbation of Heaven; that the property of the infidels was the right of the faithful; that the gratification of the brutal appetites to excels was meritorious; and that to fall in battle was a certain pallage to a paradifaical flate, as irrational in the nature of its delights as it was alluring to fenfual minds. But the grand principle which gave force t all thefe was the belief of predeflination to the extremest verge of al furdity. This carried these hardy and ferocious marauders forth from their native wilds, to poffefs themfelves of fertile plains and E 2 magnificent magnificent cities. No fimilarity, however, is to be difcerned between the enthusiasm of the Saracens and that of the French. The first was of a religious caft, and rendered them fearless of death. The latter are totally devoid of any religious animation in their wretched cause, Their governors seem to have been of a different opinion from Mahomet, and infread of holding out the prospect of a glorious reward in a future state to their deluded followers, endeavour to annihilate the fear of death by an oppofite principle, and by reprefenting it as an eternal fleep."

The conduct of Britain and her Allies in the affair of Toulon is vindicated in a fpirited manner, and the temporary pofferflion of that harbour is thewn to have been of the greatest importance.

^{*} Our Author maintains, that we have fo far a right to interfere in the internal concerns of France, as to endeavour the cftablifhment of a monarchical fyftem, fimple in itfelf, and undefined as to the nature of its formation, and the extent of its powers." This leads him to a confideration of what he calls his Lordfhip's "favourite object, a democratic form of government." This fubject is difcuffed in a clofe and philotophical manner, and it is proved, that fuch a Government is inconfiftent with the prefent fiate of man.

He then examines, whether the Republican form is adapted to the manners or interefts of the French, and concludes it to be repugnant to both. Suppofing the Republic to be once effablifhed, he fays, " in fuch a condition the muft unavoidably be poor; and like a proud exotic, will wither away in a foil unfavourable to her mature, and amidit thofe whom the may probably defpife, but who will fiill flourifh in rich abundance around her."

An opportunity is here properly taken of pointing out the peculiar beauty of the British Constitution, and it is done with success.

Particular attention is paid to that philosophy which has been treated by Lord Stanhope as forming the Bafis of the French Revolution. The Author is extremely happy in illustrating this subject. True philosophy is well defined, and is admirably contrasted with the system which has been called by that respectable name in France. if Philosophy," it is objerved, " is a mild, gentle, and virtuous principle, having nothing to do with the bufy politics and the ambitious projects of arrogant mortals. She flies from the blocaly theatre. The fcaffold and the field of war are not fcenes for her contemplation, unlefs it be to caft a pitying eye upon the follies of man."

A real philosopher is here placed in the act of conlidering the involved fubject of political fociety and forms of government. This part of the work deferves a fericus perufal by all thofe who are fo warm for what they call political reformation. We have feldom feen this important point more threwdly difcuffed.

The French clergy are vindicated from the centure which his Lordfhip threw upon them, in animated and very pointed terms. The Author confiders the diforders of France as proceeding in a great degree from the declention of religious principle there, but he exculpates the clergy from any fhare in that apoftacy. He attributes the evil to the increase of feepticilin, rendered fashionable by the farcatiic Voltaire, the visionary Rouffeau, the fophiftic D'Alembert, and the fentual Helvetius.

D'Alembert, and the fenfual Helvetius. "In vain," fays he, "do I turn my eyes towards France, to obferve there any traces of Philosophy or Religion. Those gentle fpirits have long fince departed from a region filled with the clash of anarchy, the founds of blafphemy, the crises of the oppressed, and deluged deep in human gore."

His Lordship's spirited and sensible correspondent thus apologizes for the freedom of his flyle: " If in this addreis I have expressed myself in bold language, the magnitude of the fubject, and the complexion of the times, will form an ample apology. The opponents of established lystems, the bold projectors of reform, are by no means mild in their language, or sparing in their invectives. Philosophical moderation is as little apparent in the guidance of their pens, as it is in their fpeeches or actions. Shall the friends of good order and religion, then, be fupine in their conduct, and courtly in their speech, when the enemy is at the gates, and even within the very citadel; when the found of their hammers and axes is heard at the foundations, and deftruction is all the cry."

Having first given our recommendation of this pamphlet as containing an admirable mixture of logical reasoning, and rhetorical declamation, we fhall extract the Author's conclusion :--" Viewing the queftion in all its parts; looking to the caufe, the progrefs, the present preparations, and the probable iffue of the war; examining every particular circumstance that has been brought forward relating to it, either

Familiar Letters on a Variety of Subjects, addreffed to a Friend, and inferibed to Mrs. Meftayer, of Berkshire. By the Rev. Edward Barry, M. D. Svo. 55. Payne, Mews-Gate.

DR. BARRY is Author of a volume of Sermons, and Theological, Philofophical, and Moral Effays. His Sermons have been defervedly well-received by the public. his Effays, in general, are written in a correct and nervous ftyle, and have fucceeded. The Letters, which have been but lately published, although not professedly written on subjects of immediate confequence to the public, yet comprehend, nevertheless, much matter of in-Aruction and entertainment, and are entitled to the praife of a peculiar eafe and elegance of ftyle, befides difcovering, what few productions of that kind do, much novelty of thought, and a pleafing manner of conveying it; and although he has given us but rather a ftinted allowance of letter-prefs for five thillings, we still with him a plentiful harveit of fale.

The Looker-On. A Periodical Paper. By the Rev. Simon Olive-Branch, A. M. 3 Vols. 12mo.

THESE Volumes contain a Periodical Paper, begun the 10th of March, 1792, and ending on February 1st, 1794. They contain 89 Numbers on various subjects of Literature, Tafte, Religion, and Politics, with a due proportion on lighter fubjects, the follies of mankind, and the ridiculous vagaries of fashion. These Papers never came to our notice until they appeared in their present form, a proof that performances of merit and utility do not always obtain the most extensive circulation. The Author, in imitation of The Spectator, introduces his readers to a Club of Humourists, who furnish fome part of the entertainment of the Volumes. We have read them with peculiar fatisfaction, and can recommend them, though not equal to the Addifons, Johnfons, or Hawkefworths, of former days, yet as not inferior to the Authors of The Mirror.

The paper and type are very good. and the dedicatory page wears the arms of the Lady to whom thefe Letters are infcribed.

ANECDOTES OF THE AUTHOR.

Dr. Barry, we understand, is a native of Briftol, and was incended for the practice of medicine, in which he is graduated; but preferring the calls of the gospel, he obtained episcopal ordination, and has ever fince been confidered as a popular preacher : but he, like the majority of his brethren who are without patrons among the great, has at present no permanent provision in the Church. We fincerely hope, however, that it may be foon otherwife, and that meanwhile his writings may be accompanied with profit to himfelf, and advantage to others.

They contain featiments friendly to Religion and Virtue, and well calculated, to use the Author'sown words, " to fuch as can be amufed without the facrifice of decency, or the profitution of language; who can be grave without chagrin, inquifitive without malice, merry without victims; who are interested in whatever touches bumanity, and can view with just forrow the follies and infirmities of our nature, but without any contractedness of heart, or unfocialness of fentiment." These Volumes are dutifully inferibed by the Editor " to his beft Benefactor and Patron, his much honoured Father, as a humble expression of his love, and a fill humbler tribute to manly virtue and unblemisted integrity of life, by WILLIAM ROBERTS, A.M. Hiero; or, The Condition of Royalty. A Conversation from the Greek of Xenophon. By the Translator of Antoninus's Meditations. Crown Octavo, 3s. Robinfon.

THIS publication appears with peculiar propriety at this time, in which the condition of Kings is much ferutinized into by perfons who have never been in that exalted flate, as in this dialogue of Xenophon's, a King is himfelf made to defcribe what is the happinefs and milery, what are the virtues and the vices of his peculiar fituation. The original has been long celebrated for the purity of its language, and the truch and acutenels of its oblervations. The Translator, an old and approved friend of the public, the Rev. Mr. GRAVES, has taken great care that neither of these excellencies should fuffer from his attempt to express them in the English language. His translation is faithful vet elegant ; and his Notes are learned, and explanatory of any difficulties that occur in understanding the original, either from the concifeness of its style. or from any reference to ancient cuftoms.

The Coalition ; or, The Opera Rehearfed. A Comedy. By the Author of The Spiritual Quixote. 8vo. 18. 6d. Robinfon.

THIS little piece, in spite of its title, has no reference to that celebrated Coalition in Politics which took place tome years ago in this country, to the eternal difgrace of the parties concerned in it. It contains a plain fimple ftory dramatized, and some characters (as the author expresses it) taken from the middle ranks and domestic life, rather than from the faihionable circles. Tho' in this drama we do not meet with broad comic humour, it contains a chaftity and fimplicity of ftyle, and a degree of moral fentiment, that reminds its readers

Sonnets (Third Edition), with other Poems. By the Rev. W. L. Bowles, A. M. late of Trinity College, Oxford. 8vo. 35. Dilly.

VX7E have already had occasion to notice the pentive Mufe of Mr. Bowles with approbation, and therefore fnall at this time mercly obferve, that the prefent work contains all the pieces hitherto published at different times by him, but whether with any additions is not within our recollection. The Sonnets, which bear the greatest proportion to the whole of the Volume, appear to have been written at various times and places, and were fuggefied by fuch local circumflances as occurred to the Author principally during his travels. They imprefs the reader with " no unpleafing melancholy," and fnew the mind of the writer in a very amuable point of view. As a specimen we shall select the following.

I Congratulate you, dear Sir, on the fuccefs of your application for halfpay. I wifh with all my heart that the benefit were more ample.

Do you know what are the requilites for the Charter-houfe ? what are the advantages accruing from an education there? Is it not, though on the Foundation, attended with expence to the parent? If it be, will that, Sir, anfwer your wifnes ? If you can fuggeft any thing to me that will, affure yourfelf I will do all in my power to ferve you and yours.

Brewers-Areet, 3d of Aug. 1769. Sin,

THE perfon about whom you defire information came to me near a year and a half ago, with his wife and daughter. They were recommended to me by the celebrated Monf. Diderot, who told me that Mad. Neuville was a relation of his wife; and he recommended her in the firongeft terms; but fpoke well allo of the hufband. Upon fo good an authority I placed her in Sir George Colebroke's family, as Gouvernante to his daughter, where the behaved very well during a twelvemonth, and then returned to her own country. I think I wrote you that it was entirely upon M. Diderot's recommendation I interefted myfelf in them; for they were totally unknown to me. About a month ago I received a letter from the hufband, defiring the loan of ten guineas, in addition to ten with which I had furnished them on their first arrival. But

FOR THE EUROPEAN MAGAZINE.

THE writer of the life of Archibald Bower, Esq. in your last volume, p. 261, mentions an attestation of Mrs. Bower, which he appears to have been unable to procure a copy of. 1 agree with him that in point of candour it ought to be produced; and therefore I fend you a copy of it from The London Chronicle, Oct. 11, 1766.

TO THE PRINTER.

SIR,

" I po not think it incumbent upon me to answer a Curious nameless writer (in one of the Daily Papers), particularly as he declares he fhall take filence for a fufficient proof of Mr. Bower dy ing a Papist. One might have expected that his Hiftory, fo lately finished, would have been a sufficient testimony of his principles: All I can add to it for the fatisfaction of Mr. Curious is, that for thefe seventeen years I have constantly lived with him, he always professed himfelf a Protestant, and acted conformable to that profession, as can be attested by every neighbourhood he has lived in. I can also atteit, that he most affuredly did not die in the communion with the Church of Rome; and not only no Prieft, but no Papift whatever came near him; fo far from it, that he requested a Clergyman to pray by him. I fent accordingly to the parish church for a proper person, who came at the time appointed; and a few days before his death, when a dignified Clergyman, his friend, came to visit him, the other Gentleman was again fent for, at Mr. Bower's requeft, and they joined their prayers, in which he was very devout.

" If to bear the fharpeft pains almost without a complaint, to fubmit with patience and refignation to the divine will, to be continually engaged in private prayer, and to declare that he had no thoughts but for eternity; if, I fay, these circumstances make an edifying departure, Mr. Bower's was certainly fuch, and remarked as fuch by the four as I did not think proper to comply. I heard nothing more of him. If he has done any thing fcandalous I think you ought to inform M. Diderot, that that honeft man may no longer be imposed on by people unwofthy of his protection. M. Diderot lives in the Rue Taranne, at Paris. As to Neuville, he is fo miferably poor that his creditors can expect no payment, and you will never probably see him more. I am, Sir, &c. DAVID HUME.

phyfical Gentlemen who attended him conftantly, and expressed their admiration in ftrong terms. I hope that account will be fufficient to fatisfy all impartial people, though it comes from a wife; indeed it could be expected from no other, as it cannot be fupposed that a man fuffering under fo dangerous and painful an illnefs should receive vi-DOROTHY BOWER. fitors.

Woodftock-ftreet, Oct. 8, 1766.

To this I shall add, from the same fource, October 9, 1766, the following anecdote, which does not appear to have been known to your biographer.

" The late Mr. Bower, Author of the Lives of the Popes, &c. was the fccond fon of a Gentleman in the county of Angus in Scotland, who profeffed the Roman Catholic Religion, in which Mr. Bower was educated and brought up at home and abroad. After his flight from Macerata, and his getting into Holland, he renounced the tenets of the Church of Rome, and embraced those of the Church of England. Amoug the first acts he did, as a Protestant, was to write to Scotland about his nephew, a minor and orphan, to know how his guardians were educating him; and finding he had been fent to the Scotch College at Douay, he immediately applied to the Court of Seffion in Scotland to have him brought back, and those concerned in fending him abroad punished according to law. The Court interposed, and he was not only brought back, but one of his guardians, and agent on the minor's eftate, was degraded for fix months from the exercise of his office as Clerk of the Signet (Attorney), for his confenting to the fending him abroad to be bred in the Romifh Religion. Mr. Bower continued to communicate with the Church of England till his death, which ought to fet afide fome little infinuations as if he had died in the bosom of the Church of Rome." I am, &c. C.D.

THIS learned and pious writer was for twenty years Minifler of Bemerton near Salifbury, a reftory now poffeffed by that affive and intelligent traveller the Rev. Mr. Coze. In the chancel of the church of Bemerton is the following fimple and elegant infeription to Mr. Norris, highly characteriflic of his difposition and turn of mind.

H. S. E.

JOHANNES NORRIS, Parochiæ hujús Rector; Ubi annos xx bene latuit Curæ Paftorali, & literis vacans. Qno in receffu fibi pofuit Latè jam per orbem fparfa Ingenii paris, & pietatis Monumenta. Obiit Anno Domini 1711, Ætatis 55.

Mr. Norris was the correspondent of the learned Dr. Henry More, Mrs. Aftell, and Lady Matham, Mr. Locke's intimate friend. Many of his letters to them have been printed. In a work of his entitled " The Theory and Regulation of Love," he has the following observation upon Friendship, which shews no less the acuteness of his head, than the integrity of his heart :-- " The friendships of wicked men are the most temporary and fhort-lived things in the world; they may be rather called confpinacies than friendships; and, bendes, their interests will draw them different ways, and fo diffract and divide their union; for vice is full of vanity and contradiction, fets one and the fame man at odds with himfelf, and much more with another. But now Virtue is a thing of onenels, fimplicity, and uniformity, and indeed the only folid foundation for Friendship." Bifhop Berkeley most probably had read with great attention Mr. Norris's two Treatifes entitled " An Effay toward the Theory of the Ideal and Intelligible World,"-Part I. 1701, and Part IL 1704. Octavo. Thefe Treatifes are now become very fcarce.

This excellent man was fo imprefied with the talents for argument and acutenefs of reafoning that David Barclay difplays in his Apology for the Quakers, that he fays fomewhere in his works, "That he would rather encounter ten Cardinal Bellarinines than one David Barclay."

Mr. Norris, who had written to prove that all the fenfations we feel and all the images we perceive are in idea only, was in his lifetime called the Ideal Norris, which by fome illiterate perfons was altered to the idle Norris, which very difgraceful appellation no man certainly ever deferved lefs than this pious and learned writer. Mr. Norris one day pufhing his fyftem pretty far at Bifhop Burnet's table at Salifbury, he was told, "Why. when you beat a dog he muft furely feel fomething, for he cries out ?" " So," faid Mr. Norris, " when you beat a hogf-head it rings." There the conversation ftopped. In the fecond courfe, however, in which there were minced-pies, a diffi of which this incomparable man was very fond, he defired to be helped to fome of them. The difh running fhort, Mrs. Burnet, with fome humour, distributed it all to the reft of her guefts, except to Mr. Norris, when making an action as if the was putting fomething upon Mr. Norris's plate, fhe faid, " Mr. Norris, let me help you to fome ideal minced-pye."

Dr. Harrington, the uncle of the prefent ingenious and learned Dr. Harrington, Phyfician, of Bath, knew this excellent man very well, and ufed to fay of him, that whenever he wifhed to purfucany of his abftract contemplations he ufed to retire into a dark room, and that his nerves were fo very tremblingly alive, that the mere buzzing of a fly would difturb him, and break in upon the filiation of his ideas *.

* There is no engraved portrait of this learned and venerable perfonage. It is indeed a d_jileratum in the collection of Englith Heads. Should any of the defcendants of this exceltent man pofiefs a portrait of him, they would do honour to the memory of their illuftrious anceftor, and give great fatisfaction to the virtuofi of their native country, if they were to favour the public with an engraving from it.

VOL. XXVI.

The church of Bemerton is extremely finall indeed, and is placed in the front of the parsonage. A failor paffing the church one day in a very hard shower of rain, during the time that Mr. Norris was Rector, thought it a very good joke to knock very loud at Mr. Norris's door, who was most probably at that time immerfed in fome profound moral or metaphyfical speculation. Mr. Norris, on hearing the noile, ran out of his fludy, frightened out of his wits, and, much confounded, opened the door, and afked the fa lor what he wanted. " Nothing, Sir," replied he, " but to defire you, for compafion's fake, to take the church into your houfe; I fear that it will be washed away elfe."

The parifh of Bemerton feems to have been highly diflinguifhed for the literature and piety of its Miniflers. The Rev. George Herbert, author of "The Church Porch," and fome other facred Poems, was Rector of Bemerton, according to Ifaac Walton, in his Life of that excellent man. He left on the chinney-piece of his parlour the following lines, addreffed to his fucceffors, he having himfelf rebuilt the Parlonage Houfe:

If thou chance for to find A houfe to thy mind, And built without coft, Be kind to the poor (As God gives thee flore) And then my labour's not loft.

The prefent Minifier of Bemerton, indeed, may truly fay the fame to his fucceffors, he having with great tafle and great liberality rendered the Parfonagehoufe and its domains a very comfortable and elegant retreat, from whence they, with the excellent Hooker, may

See from their mother Earth God's bleffings fpring,

And eat their bread in peace and privacy. To the Verses of Mr. Herbert a very unworthy inhabitant of the Parlonage House of Bemerton, in 1794, fubjoined thefe lines :

Thus the good Herbert pour'd his moral ftrain,

And lib'ral Coxe may echo it again.

Thefe walls the pious home-bred bard began

On plain fimplicity's exacteft plan,

- With each accomplifhment the trav'ller grac'd,
- Completes in all the luxury of take :

Bleft walls, for pleafure and for ufe det fign'd,

The offspring of their owner's varied mind.

MILTON.

The fentence with which this great man begins his celebrated answer to the "Eikon Bafilike" of the unfortunate Charles the First, is one of the grandest feutences, no lefs for the majestic flow of the period, than for the dignity of lentiment, that, perhaps, the whole English language can boait. " To descant on the misfortunes of a perfou falling from fo high a dignity (who hath alfo paid his final debt both to nature and to his faults), is neither of itself a thing commendable, nor the intention of this discourse. Neither was it fond ambition, or the vain defire to get a name, prefent or with pofterity, by writing against a King." How differently did this dignified Republican act from the prefent Republicanets of France; who after having butchered upon a scaffold one of the best disposed fovereigns that was ever granted to mankind-after having, without the least pretence to public justice, or even public utility, butchered his Queen and his fifter, the most innocent and the best of human beings (credite posteri), still continue in their harangues of pempous inanity, and in their writings of florid deraifonnent, to load the memory of this unfortunate prince with fcurrility worthy only of monkies let loofe from their keepers. Zanga, in " The Revenge," might have taught them.

- " We war not with the dead !
- " Is this the hand that fmote us? "Heavens how pale !"

LORD BACON,

in his "Effay upon Health and Long Life," fays, that on fome Philofopher's being aiked how he had arrived to the very advanced period of life which he then was, replied, "Intus melle, extra oleo"—By taking honey within, and oil without.—One of our Confuls in Egypt (a gentleman to whom his count: y has the higheft obligations, for the very early information with which he fupplied our fettlements in the Eaf: Indies with the information of the breaking out of the laft war with the French) imaginess that oil applied externally to the human oudy.

body, as in a fhirt dipped in that lubricating fubftance, would prevent the infection of that horrible calamity the plague; and as he lives in a country not a little annoyed by that dreadful vifitation, he has had but too frequent opportunities of making the experiment *. He himfelf, who is a very gouty man, has found the application of warm oil to his legs and feet, fwoln with that diforder, of great efficacy in leffening the duration of the fit, and in reducing the fwelling.

Some philosophers talk much of the conformancy of particular paffions to the mind of man, as if that confonancy were to make the indulgence of them lefs criminal. Lord Bacon, amongst the most strong and the most natural paffions to man, mentions the defire of intoxication as fo univerfally prevalent, that the methods of gratifying it, and very often in the most loathfome manner, have ever been discovered in the most favage and most remote regions of the earth. A Physician now living, not more respectable for his talents and his knowledge than his age, has obferved, that coffee and tea are the liquors of intoxication to elegant perfons. It has been faid, that the fame kind of disposition which leads to fermented liquors in men, leads the women to drink throng tea. Maupertuis, in one of his Effays, melancholily enough, makes this conclusion :-- " Mankind," layshe, "however differing in all other things, agree in this, ils ont tous cherche un remede au mal de vivre .--They have all been looking after a remedy against the mifery of existence." Pafcal, in his " Thoughts," fays, "We Fuuft all be uneafy here below :-- if we are not uneary, fo much the worfe for us.'

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS, KING OF SWEDEN.

This great General was certainly one of the heroes of the laft century a century abounding in heroes; his courage, his general force of mind, his infegrity, and his piety, well entitling him to that dignified appellation. In one of his letters to Louis XII. of France, who had written to him to express his forrow at being told that he was dejected on account of Wallenstein's successes in the field against him, he fays, " I am not fo ill at my eafe as my enemies with to give out. I have troops enough to oppofe to them, and troops which will never lofe their courage but with their life. We fkirmish together every day, and I think that Wallenstein begins now to experience what troops well disciplined and courageous can do, especially when they fight for fo noble a caufe as that of general Liberty, and defend Kings and Nations who are groaning under the yoke of tyranny and perfecution." When the town of Landshut in Bavaria furrendered to him at diferetion, the principal inhabitants of it fell down upon their knees before him when they prefented him with the keys of their town. "Rife, rife," faid he ; " it is your duty to fall upon your knees to God, and not to fo frail and fo feeble a mortal as I am." Gustavus, differently from our modern Generals, never engaged in any battle without first praying at the head of the troops he was about to lead towards the enemy, fometimes with, and fometimes without book. This done, he ufed to thunder out in a ftrong and energetic manner fome German hyinn or pfalm, in which he was followed by his whole army (The effect of the voices of thirty or forty thousand perfons finging in unifon was wonderful and terrible, appalling the enemy, yet encouraging and animating themfelves). Immediately before the battle of Lutzen, fo fatal to himfelf, but fo honourable to his army, he thundered out the translation of the forty-fixth Pfalm, made by Luther when he was a prifoner in the fortrefs of Coburg. that begins, "God is our ftrong caftle." The trumpets and drums immediately ftruck up, and were accompanied by the Ministers and all the foldiers in the army. To this fucceeded a Hymn made by Guftavus himfelf, which begun, " My dear little Army fear nothing, though thy numerous enemies have fworn thy ruin. The word given by the King for that day was, " God be with us." The Ministers of Louis the XIIth, King

* A celebrated LeQurer in Natural Philofophy fays, that when he was in Virginia, he Was fold, that in a certain diffrict of that province, an epidemic fever had been long ufed to Prevail, and to attack most of the inhabitants of it in fpite of every precaution that the medical men could fuggeft. Some Boftonians, however, coming to fettle there (whofe Conftant cufform in their own country is to wear flannel next to the fkin), it was observed that they efc., and the general infection, which they imagined to be owing to their method of cloathing themfelves. The inhabitants took the huit, and were never after-Wards fubjeft to their old difeafe.

of France, were defirous to infert in a treaty between their Sovereign and Guftavus, that the King of France had the King of Sweden under his protection. Gustavus spiritedly replied, " I have no occasion for any protection but that of God, and I defire no other .- After God I acknowledge no fuperior, and I wifh to owe the fuccels of my arms to my fword and my good conduct alone." In a conference he had with the Minister from our Court, Sir Henry Vane, whom he supposed to have been bribed by the Court of Spain, as Sir Harry was preffing him in a manner which he did not like, he faid to him in Latin, " Sir, 1 do not understand you, you talk Spanish." Guftavus always preferred foreign foldiers, who ferved voluntarily for pay, to those which were enlitted by the authority of Government in his own country. "A hound," faid he, "that is dragged by force to the field never hunts well." In one of his journies he was accosted by a Student in Latin, who defired him to permit him to ferve in his cavalry. "Be it fo, Sir," replied the King; " an indifferent fcholar may make a very good foldier. But why, Sir," replied the King, " do you with to difcontinue your ftudies?" " Why Sire," faid the Student, " I prefer arms to books." " Alas, young man," replied the King, who fpoke Latin very fluently, and who was a good Latin feholar, "I fee what it is—it is as Horace fays, tranflated Homer into French verfe, at the command of his Sovereign Francis the First, King of France. Mr. Pope, in the opinion of a celebrated Modern Critic, made great use of this translation, and even adopted fome of the mistakes of the Translator. M. de Salet was Valet de Chambre to Francis the First, who gave him an Abbev near Chartres, as a recompence for the pains he had taken to give his countrymen fome idea of the Prince of Epic Poets. Salet's Translation of Homer reaches no further than the Twelve First Books. The best edition of this work is that of Paris 1574, 8vo. It is not, however, the tranflation of one Poet by another Poet-the verification of it is very inharmonious, and the ftyle low and embarrassed.

ACCOUNT of the TRIAL of WARREN HASTINGS, Efg. (late GOVER-NOR GENERAL of BENGAL) before the HIGH COUKT of PARLIA-MENT for HIGH CRIMES and MISDEMEANORS.

FRIDAY, MAY 30.

MR. Burke began on this day by refrating what he faid yefterday, that Mr. Haftings, inflead of appearing in an humble and decent manner, had dared to accufe the Houfe of Commons of the bafeft ingratitude; that he had given them impeachment for impeachment.

After Mr. Burke had spent a considerable time in repeating what he had before faid on this subject, he went to another head that he had debated upon the laft day, and contended that Mr. Haftings was not founded in afferting, that the Government of India was arbitrary. It will be fufficient to fay, that Lord Cornwallis, in one of the Minutes alluded to by Mr. Burke, exprefly fays, that every thing of law, of police, and of regulation, tending to meliorate the condition of the people of Bengal, originated in the British Government; everything depending, prior to the British Administration, or caprice, the pleafure of the fovereign, or the perfon to whom he deputed his power. In Lord Cornwallis's evidence there is the following queftion and aniwer:

wer: Q. What is the general mode of proceeding against retractory Zemindars, according to the laws and customs of Indostan ?

A. It is difficult to deferibe the regular mode of proceeding in a defpotic government; but they are frequently confirmed and difpoffeffed.

We have now given the completeft poffible anfwer to three-fourths of Mr. Burke's fpeech.

The remainder of his fpeech was on the Benares Charge, without any thing new, except the virulence of his abufe. There were few Lords prefent, never twenty, and at one time not more than thirteen.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3.

The Court fat at two-prefent, ten Judges, fix Bishops, fixteen Peers, and the Dukes of Leeds and Gloucester.

The

The Peereffes were only twelve. The Peers galleries were very full of polite and elegant company.

Mr. Burke proceeded, in a speech of three hours, to reply to the observations of the Counfel on the fecond part of the Benares Charge; every fyllable of which he infifted had been fully and fubftantially proved to their Lordships. He then took a minute view of all the circumftances' attending Mr. Haftings's conduct in appointing Mr. Markham to superintend the education of the young Rajah; a youth of 19, under the ruition of a youth of 21. He then entered into a long detail of fums of money extorted and mifapplied. He charged Mr. Haftings with fetting up an arbitrary government; deftroying that which, un-der the fanction of the law, was only legal. He became, he faid, by the most unjust means, possessed of all power — "King-Thane-Glamis-Carodor"—he had them all :-And " most foully did he play for them." He was the modern Tamerlane of the East, and dealt rapine and destruction wherever his orders were conveyed.

Mr. Burke then began his obfervations upon the Charge against the Defendant which respected the Begums of Oude, and proceeded until five o'clock, when, coming to the conduct of Colonel Hannay, he faid, he found himfelf quite exhausted, and begged their Lordships indulgence until the next day of fitting.

At five the Court adjourned to the Upper Chamber, and ordered a meffage to the Commons, that they would proceed further upon the Trial on THURSDAY, JUNE 5.

The Peers galleries were very full and genteelly attended.

The Proceffion moved into the Hall at two.—Judges and Peers in number only twelve.

Mr. Burke entered into his general reply upon the Charge against the Defendant, for the cruelties and extortions committed upon the Begums of Oude. The Province he described to be a garden, nearly in the extent and population of England, with a net revenue of three millions and a half. He then gave the history of the Nabob Asoph Ul Dowlah, and infilted that, at the time of his death, the country was flourishing and happy, and the people fatisfied with the government. Immediately upon Mr. Hastings's appointment of the fuccessor, Asoph Ul

Dowla, the terms which he impofed upon that unfortunate Chief, and the heavy loans which he exacted, brought on the ruin of that Prince and his fubjects; and at laft ended in the wanton violation and fripping the Begums of the facred deposit of their treatures, which were placed there by hands of piety, for the support of a family of above four hundred perfors.

Mr. Burke begged to imprefs upon their Lordthips one principle, which ought never to be banifhed from their minds, viz. that the infiguificance of the prifoner ought not to induce their Lordthips to fuppofe him incapable of mitchief; for though his origin was low, mean, and vulgar—though he was trained in the molt bafe and fordid habits, yet, when invefted with a power to which his mind was not equal, he was capable of more complete, more extensive devaftation, than any of the greateft conquerors and tyrants who have oppreffed mankind.

Mr. Burke continued his fuoject in various points of view until five. He concluded with a general view of the various peculations and cruelties exercifed by the Civil and Military Oficers, who were all appointed by the Defendant, but that none of them had ever met the punifiment they deferved; and that Mr. Haftings was condemned by his own written opinions fent to the Directors.

Mr. Windham read feveral documents to prove all thele facts. After which, Mr. Burke drew h's deductions, that, from all the proofs, he entertained no doubt but that the High Court would agree with the affertion which he made at the commencement of the trial, namely, "That the Defendant was the Captain-General of Corruption." At five o'clock, Mr. Burke declared himfelf unable to proceed any further that day, on which their Lordhips adjourned to their own Chamber.

When the Lords retired, a Petition was prefented from Mr. Haftings to the Lords, in which he reminded their Lordfhips, that, when the Reply was poliponed laft year, it was flated, that in faG it would be no loss of time, as the Court might fit day by day fo as to finish it, and come to judgment carly in this Seffion; that, except the fhort delay by the examination of Lord Cornwallis, the whole of this year kad been taken up by the Managers in refly; reply; that he could not help being alarmed at the advanced flate of the Schön, compared with the progrefs made by the Managers in the Reply; and therefore he moft earnefily entreated that their Lordfhips would take kis upparalleled eafe into confideration, and that they would be fuitors to his Majefty, not to prorogue this Seffion until the Speech in Reply was finished, and until nothing but the Judgment should remain.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7.

At two the Lords came into the Court. The Judges and Peers prefent were nincteen. The galleries were very thin.

Mr. Burke proceeded on the Begum Charge To elucidate the fubject, he deferi ed the happy fituations of the provinces of Oude, Benares, and Gorruckpore, before Mr Hastings took them under his protection. Among the many bold metaphors and epithets which he used were the following :-" This worfe than Satan, for he thewed the kingdoms of the world to the Great Author of our facred religion, in order that he might enjoy them, but he (turning to the bar) gave the provinces of Hindoftan into the poffeffion of men appointed by himfelf, for the purpole of deftroying them."- (Mr. Haftings, at this expreffion, lifted up his eyes and hands). -Again, when he fpoke of the treafures deposited with the Begums which Mr. Haftings feized, Mr. Burke faid-" The prifoner at your bar, ftepping beyond even the Heathen mythology, was, in his own opinion, greater than JOVE, who was effected the immortal God of the Ancients; for Jove condeficended to embrace a trail woman in a flower of gold; but Mr. Haftings paid more *impressive allo*ration to the old Begums of Oude, for the purpose of feizing and stripping them of their gold !!!-Here (faid Mir. Burke) is the diffinction between the JOVE of the Ancients and the JOVE of the East Indies .- But your L rdlhips claffical knowledge will convey to you that the first was fabulous, and I trust that the evidence adduced will convince your Lordships the last is real."

After treating this fubject with much pleatantry, he adverted to, and turned into a ludierous point, the private correspondence of Mr. Hafrings. Sir Elliph Impey, and Mr. Middleton, which, he faid, was more like the correspondence of lovers than the writing of men of bufinefs : it even exceeded the platonic friendship of Pylades and Oreftes: they spoke in rapturous expressions of love of the private hords of the Old Begums, the youngeft of whom might have been grandmother to the oldeft of the three lovers, which hords they were determined to plunder, as highwaymen do the unfufpecting traveller. He faid that Sir Elijah Impey was fuppofed to act there in the character of a Judge, but he was nothing more than the mere tool of Mr. Haftings, and might be confidered, from his conduct, to be in a capacity more fervile than that of a bailiff's follower.

He then went minutely into what he called the plunder of the Begums, and continued fpeaking thereon until five o'clock, when the Court adjourned to their own Chamber.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE II.

Mr. Burke fpoke for three hours, and was as usual most farcastically fevere on the Oude bufinefs. In a letter read respecting some instructions given by the Governor-General, Mr. Burke called them orders. Mr. Haftings contradicted the Manager, and faid there was no fuch word in the letter as orders. The letter was read, and it appeared there was not; the term was a request. Mr. Haftings complained of the illiberal expressions of the Manager on all occasions. He faid he was fick of fuch vulgar abufe. This brought on a reply; and at five the Court adjourned to their own chamber, from whence they fent a meffage to the Commons, that they would further proceed on THURSDAY, JUNE 12.

The Peers boxes were again very full. At two the proceeding moved into the Court: the whole amounted to only 16, Judges and Peers. The galleries were very thin the whole day.

Mr. Burke took up the remaining part of the Begum Charge, namely, the treatment of the women and children of the late Nabob Sujah ul Dowla, and the feizure of the treafures of the Begums, the impriforment of her Minifters, and loading them with irons, to give fecurities for large fums and pay the fame, firipping the effects, cloaths, jewels, &c. from the Begums, by which means the numerous family in the Kherd Mahal (inner palace) which was dependent upon the Begums, wanted the mere neccffarics of life; and after fruitlefs fupplications and thricks of famine, they endeavoured to force their way out of the Palace, and break into the Market-place to beg for bread, but were driven back with blows by the Sepoys, who were armed with bludgeons. Several letters were read, written by Major Gilpin, Mr. Briftow, and Mr. Middleton, in order to fix the guilt of thefe tranfactions upon the Defendant. Mr. Burke concluded this Charge with an affecting appeal to the feelings and the paffions of their Lordfhips.

The principal occurrence of the day was an attempt to comment upon Charges, as collateral matter, which had been abandoned by the Houfe of Commons in a vote on the 4th of February 1791.

1791. The Lord Chancellor checked this informal procedure, and fignified his opinion, that what was not infifted upon in charge, could admit of no comment in reply.

Mr. Burke retorted this extraneous adduction upon the Counfel, who had, he contended, alfo brought matter irrelevant in their defence—But he defired to withdraw a few minutes with his Brother Managers. Mr. Windham attended him out, and Mr. Francis followed, of courfe, not to affift with his advice.

When they returned, Mr. Burke lamented very feelingly the hardfhip of his fituation—but he faid he was bound to believe he heard the judgment of that Houfe, when no one Peer arofe to diffent from his Lordfhip, to whofe fingle opinion, indeed, great weight was always attached, and to which he very chearfully deferred.

However, the facts he alluded to were upon the Journals; they were in the Managers record, and in that of the Counfel; and though abandoned in charge, yet, as alfented to by Mr. Haftings, would remain for ever evidence against him.

Mr. Windham read a variety of Papers, and Mr. Burke commented at confiderable length. Hyder Beg Khan brought forth a violent florm of invective, and the bufinel's of Oude was clofed by Mr. Burke's declaration, that he believed that province to be as much now as heretofore governed by Mr. Haftings

Mr. Burke then proceeded nearer home, and having historically painted the three claffes of inhabitants at Bengal, he considered what measures Mr. Haftings had taken to augment the wealth, fecure the territories, and moderate the government of the Mahouzedans, the landholders, and the Company's Servants.

Mr. Burke, after a few more obfervations on Oude, faid, he had fome new matter to offer to their Lordhips on the next day they would honour hira with their hearing; and on this the Court adjourned.

SATURDAY, JUNE 14.

The galleries were refpectably filled at one. In the Peereffes gallery were the Ducheffes of Leeds and Gordon; the Counteffes of Buckinghamfhire and Suffolk; Ladies Hampden, Dacres, Radnor, and twelve others. At half after two the proceffion moved into Court; Judges 7; Barons, Earls, and Vifcounts, 13; the Marquis Townfhend; the Dukes of Leeds and Gloncefter.

Mr. Burke began this day's fumming up with the latter part of the fixth article of impeachment, and the whole of the feventh, which relate cntirely to the peculations, frauds, and embezzlements charged to have beeza committed by the Defendant in the extensive provinces of Bengal, Bahar, and Orixa.

Having dwelt for a confiderable time on thefe points, he paffed to the 7th article, refpecting the collection of the revenues of the above province, which were granted to the Company in 755, by Shaw Alum, the Great Mogul; in animadverting on which, Mr. Barke alternately foared into the heights of fublimity, and frequently funk much below mediocrity. A proof of the latter was the comparison of Mr. Haftings with the keeper of a pig fiye wallowing in filth and corruption.

His principal object this day was to criminate Mr. Haltings on account of the appointment of the Begums, and the conduct of Sir John D'Oyly. He charged the Governor-General with having fet up the public appointments to fale. He made fome very farcaftic fimilies as to the connection between Mr. Haftings and the Begums, quoting Dean Swift's Progrefs of Love as applicable on the occafion.

The humour touching the Munny Begum flowed fomething in this way: "Age has its comforts—the confo-"lations of debility and uglinefs may "be found in brandy. The old lady "had therein a monopoly. She was a "great dealer in the article. But mark "the transition—a youth of fentiment " and " and love; an old age repoling upon " the brandy cafk."

He then ironically adverted to the perverse passions of great men for thrumpets. " Antony had his Cleopa-" tra, and Mr. Haftings his Munny " Begum-It might be fo; for aged, " Ihrivelled, bony deformity had its " relish for some palates: but, good " God ! no man ever fell in love with " his own Banyan."

Mr. Burke exerted all his feverity upon the fhameful practice of fending out youth to repair the honours of fhattered nobility bere, by the plunder of the East. [By the bye, this is the best ground for defending Mr. Haftings.]

To the general remark, that we should bate the Crime but love the Criminal, he replied, "it was a falfe " and pernicious maxim-Some vices " were their own punishment; the " evils of ambition but few could imi-" tate; but those of peculation were " open to the million. O, but we " fhould punifh the crime and pity the " criminal! What, am I to love Nero? " -Is Caligula to have my cordial " efteem ?- Am I to take Domitian to " my bofom :- No; I hate both the " Criminal and the Crime, and it is " virtue to do fo.

Being at length fatigued, Mr. Burke begged for another day to conclude, as what he had further to fay would be very fhort. The Lords, however, did not feem inclined to grant this requeft, feveral of them crying out, "Go on." However, on Mr. Burke's promifing to finish on Monday in an hour and a half at the furthest, their Lordships immediately adjourned to their own Chamber.

MONDAY, JUNE 16. Mr. Burke, at a little after two, addreffed their Lordships, and, returning them thanks for this other day they had granted him to finish, took a retrospective view of the British and Mahratta wars, of the Prefents Mr. Haftings had accepted, and of the means his Counfel had adopted to fubvert the evidence, by endeavouring to prove that those parts in the Impeachment, which the Managers, for the fake of brevity, had omitted, ought to be confirued as not fupportable by the Managers, and therefore favourable to Mr. Haftings .---After dwelling with confiderable energy for a long time on the Charges, in the grofs and detached parts, he, at laft, faid, he was come to his conclufion; but before he quitted the box, he fhould befeech their Lordfhips attention for a few moments.

Mr. Burke then made a folemn paufe; and gave his PERORATION, the beau-We can only give a faint idea.

" My Lords, the Commons wait the iffue of this cause with trembling folicitude. Twenty-two years have they been employed in it, feven of which have paffed in this Trial. They behold the dearest interests of their country deeply involved in it-they feel that the very existence of this Constitution depends upon it. Your Lordships juftice flands pre-eminent in the world, but it stands amidst a vast heap of ruins, which furround it in every cor-net of Europe. If you flacken justice, and thereby weaken the bands of fociety, the well-tempered authority of this Court, which I truft in God will continue to the end of time, must receive a fatal wound, that no balm can cure, that no time can reftore."

Here Mr. Burke entered into a comparifon between the dignity and juffice of the High Court and the late Parliament of Paris; the death-blow to which was given by Mirabeau; but for obvious reafons we omit it.

Mr. Burke then concluded his elaborate fpeech. " My Lords, it is not the criminality of the prifoner-it is not the claims of the Commons to demand judgment to be paffed upon him-it is net the honour and dignity of this Court, and the welfare of millions of the human race, that alone call upon you-When the devouring flames fhall have deftroyed this perithable globe, and it finks into the abyls of Nature, from whence it was commanded into existence by the great Author of it-then, my Lords, when all Nature, Kings and Judges themfelves, muft anfwer for their actions, there will be found what fuperfedes creation itfelf, namely, ETERNAL JUSTICE. It was the attribute of the Great God of Nature before worlds were; it will refide with him when they perifh; and the earthly portion of it committed to your care, is now folemnly deposited in your hands by the Commons of England .-I have done."

The Lords then adjourned to the Upper Chamber of Parliament; where, on MONDAY, JULY 7,

Lord Amherst moved, that the further Proceedings on the Trial of Mr. Haftings be put off till the fecond Tuefday in the next Seffion of Parliament. -Ordered.

LORDS. HOUSEOF

SATURDAY, MAY 17.

LORD GRENVIEWE fimilar to meffage from his Majefty, fimilar to ORD GRENVILLE delivered a that feat to the Houfe of Commons on May 12*; and moved, that it be taken into confideration on Monday.

The Duke of Grafton, Lord Lauderdale, and Lord Stanhope, opposed the motion, on the ground that no papers were laid before the Houle in proof of the allegations in the mellage. The latter noble Peer, in his ufual stile of oratory, talked of lettres de cachet and Baffiles as the effect of the fufpention of the Habeas Corpus Act; in confequence of which he might not, perhaps, have the opportunity to express his fentiments again in that Houle.

Lord Grenville mentioned an inftance In the year 1722, when that House proceeded merely on a meffage from his Majefty.

Lord Grenville's motion was carried Without a division.

MONDAY, MAY 19.

VOTE OF THANKS.

Lord Grenville moved a Vote of Thanks to Sir Charles Grey, Sir John Jervis, and the other officers and men in the Weft-Indies, for their gallant and meritorious fervices; which was unanimoufly agreed to.

Mr. Pitt brought up a Bill from the Commons to enable his Majefty to detain and fecure fuch perfons as he fufpects to be conspiring against his perfon and gevernment.

Mr. Wyndham brought a meffage from the Commons, together with a number of papers taken from certain Societies, and the report of the Committee of their House thereupon.

Lord Grenville conceived, that, after his Majeny's meffage, it was unneceflary for him, in the prefent cafe, to take up much of their Lordships' time, and therefore he should content himself with moving, " That a Committee of that House, confisting of nine noble Lords, should be appointed to examine those papers, and to report thereon; and that it be a Secret Committee."

Lord Stanhope objected to referring the papers to a Committee : in his opinion, they ought to be examined in the open face of day, that all their Lord-fhips, nay that the Public in England, should be informed, whether there was anything in them or not.

The Marquis of Lanfdowne expreffed himfelf highly gratified with the two motions he had heard made : by the first, because it shewed, that although Ministers had been backward in employing those officers, they now shewed a readinels to reward them according to their merit; and by the fecond, because he had never come down to that Houle to much depressed in mind as he had cone on this occasion, with the idea, that this Bill was to be urged on with the utmost precipitation, and to be read a firft, fecond, and third time, and to be paffed this day-a Bill that, in his opinion, threatened the annihilation of our Constitution. He hoped Ministers would yet reflect, and not introduce violent measures unnecessarily.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Lord Grenville next moved, "That a meffage be fent to the Commons, affuring them of the fenfe they had of a cordial correspondence with that House, and that their Lordships would return the papers they had fent up when required.' Ordered.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.

Pursuant to their Lordships' determination the preceding evening, the House met to-day to ballot for a Secret Committee to examine the papers feized from the Corresponding Societies, and prefented by Mr. Wyndham.

The ballot being made, the following Lords were found to form the faid Committee :

| Lord Chancellor | Lord Carnarvon |
|------------------|-------------------|
| Lord Privy Seal | Earl of Chatham |
| Duke of Leeds | Earl of Mansfield |
| Duke of Portland | Earl Hardwicke. |
| Earl of Carlifle | A |

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21. Their Lordthips' having met at twelve o'clock, in order to receive the report of the Secret Committee, chofen for examining the papers feized from the Corresponding Societies, the Committee presented the fame, which was read. A debace of much warmth occurred.

Lords Stanhope and Lauderdale oppofed it, on the ground that the data did rot warrant the deductions made by the Committee. The report was fupported by the feveral Noble Lords who had framed it. The refult was, that the report flould be taken into confideration the next day.

> THURSDAY, MAY 22. HABEAS CORPUS.

The report of the Committee of the Houfe of Commons on the papers laid before them by the King, and the report of the Committee of the Houfe of Lords concurring in fentiment and opinion with the former report, being read,

Lord Lauderdale role to fpeak to the order of the proceedings of the House, conceiving that the Secret Committee appointed by the Houfe to examine the papers, and the report of the Committee of the Houfe of Commons thereon, was not charged with the examination of those papers for the purpose of giving their opinions thereon in general terms, but for the purpose of making a statement of facts contained in those papers, and to lay an accurate and impartial report thereof before the House for their opinion : he was proceeding to argue, that the Committee had not done what he conceived they had been appointed to do, when he was called to order by

The Bilhop of Rochefter, who faid, that the report of the refpectable Committee to whom the papers were referred having been prefented and read to the Houfe yefterday morning, it was received by the Houfe with decided fatisfaction, ordered to lie on the table, and a motion made upon it; any obfervations on the fermality of the report were therefore perfectly out of order.

Lord Lauderdale faid, that had he been in the Houfe when the report was prefented, he would then, as he contended he had a right to de now, complain, that the Committee had not obferved the formality of the preceedings of the Houfe upon thefe occafions.

Lord Grenville thought, that as the Houfe were now called upon to debate one of the molt important fubjects that ever came before them, every matter that tended to retard their proceedings fhould be dife unteranced: The objections of the noble Lord to the formality of the Committee were fuch as he conceived did not deferve a conteft with any noble Lord; he would therefore difinite them without any more obfervatiou, and preis the attention of the Houfe to the fubject immediately before them-namely, the paffing of the Bill brought up from the Commons (which he hoped would go through all the forms that evening) to enable his Majefty to imprifon all fuch perfons as he had . reason to fuspect of treatonable intentions against his perfon and government .---This he would move upon one ground only, deduced from the reports of the Committees of the Lords and of the Commons, that there had long exifted, and there did now exift, a treafonable confpiracy for oppofing the Conffituted Author ties of the Country, for annihilating the Legiflative Bodies, and introducing in their room those scenes of anarchy and confusion which have fo long exifted in France. To prevent those dreadful events from taking place in this country, Parliament was called upon to imitate the example of their anceftors, who, in times of fimilar danger, had ftrengthened the Executive Power with extraordinary measures for the general fecurity of the country. The Habeas Corpus Act, which fecured the liberty of the fubject not criminated, had been frequently, if not conftantly fufpended upon all occafions of rebellion and confpiracies, even at and fince the time of the Revolution; at no period had there ever been more occasion for it than at prefent, or adopted with greater precaution .--- Formerly it was cuftomary, upon the bare intimation of the King that there exified a confpiracy against the Government, to pais a Bill fimilar to that now before the Houfe; now it had been the fubiect of investigation by both the branches of the Legiflature, and the clearest proofs appeared of the immediate necessity of adopting this measure, to prevent the total annihilation of the authority of Parliament, . and of every legiflative capacity invefted in the Government of this country.

His Lordship very ably animadverted on the proceedings of the Society for Conflictutional Information and the Loudon Corresponding Society, both which were founded, as he clearly demonstrated, upon the principles of the French Jacobins; and after making fevere obfervations on every particular point, he concluded with laying, that there was no time to be loft .- He trufted, that the wildom and prudence of the Houfe would fee the little cloud that threatened a great form, and avert by timely and ftrong measures the calamities justly to be apprehended from it. He then moved the first reading of the Pill

Bill-" To enable his Majefty to imprilon perfons whom he has reafon to fuspect of confpiring against his perfon and Government.

Lord Stanhope declared, that he differed fundamentally from the opinions expressed by the n ble Lord who spoke lait, and that he thould oppole the introduction of fuch an Act, as tending to reduce this country to the fame flate of fubjection in which France was previous to the Revolution.

Lord Spencer and Lord Kinnoul spoke in favour of the motion.

Lord Boringdon regarded the meafure as justified and called for by the peculiar emergency of the times; and expressed great furprize that any one should doubt of it, after hearing the report which had been just read.

Lord Thurlow defended the principle of the Bill. The evils which were faid to have refulted from former fufpentions of the Habeas Corpus Act were not lo great as they are reprefented. The prefent Bill went only to impower his Majefty's Ministers to imprison for a certain time certain disaffected and fedicious people.

This Bill was called a fuspension of the Habeas Corpus Act; he was not furprifed that feveral Noble Lords in that Houfe, when speaking of the Bill, made ule of the word fuspension, because it was to be found in their Lordships' Journals on refolutions of a fimilar nature; but this was not a suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act; it went to fulpend no laws, nor yet to trench on the privileges of either Houfe of Parliament.

The propriety of fulpending this Act might be eafily feen on emergent occafions : for inftance, if an infurrection took place in a country, worked by flow and dark degrees, Executive Government would not have it perhaps immediately in their power to trace it through all its mazes. In fuch a fituation it would be necessary to feize on suspected perfons, which if not brought to juffice at the general gaol-delivery might be acquitted, and if he could prove his innocence the law held out a remedy to him-He should, therefore, repcat it once for all, that if the Privy Council, or any other Magistrate, should commit 2 man to prifon on suspicion of treason, or rank fedition, and if that perion could prove his innocence afterwards, he could bring an action against the Secretary of State, or the Magistrate who had committed him. The only difference was, that a perfon fo committed could not be bailed, or brought to trial, unlefs by the permiffion of the Privy Council. If pe fons out of doors had acted on any fonciful opinion relative to a Reform in Parliament which had been fcouted in that Houfe, he thought that opinion thould not escape with impunity, any more than its fucceffors. He trufted, however, that if this power should devolve into the hands of the Privy Council, that they would make fuch use of it only as would do justice to the public, and that they would deal impartially withali-that they would not be actuated by any thing that bordered on malice or caprice, and that the Magistrate would not commit unless a firong cafe was made out. He was perfuaded they would act like men who had a character at ftake, and the real good of their country at heart. As for himfelf, he would as foon truft his perfonal liberty in the hands of the Secretary of State for the Home Department as any man exifting, and confider himfelf as fecure in that fituation as if the Habcas Corpus Act remained in its full force. His Lordfhip then entered into a hiftory of the Habeas Corpus Act, from the time of James the First to the days of Charles the Second, and was forry to find, that in every struggle to obtain it it fmelt too much of party. It was undoubtedly very proper that that House and the Judges of the Land should be reverenced by the people. He did not mean a forced reverence, but a willing tribute. arifing from the impartiality of their characters. This tended more than a little to create an effeem for the laws which they difavowed, and of courfe to keep the bands of fociety together; and having faid this, he was forry to acquaint their Lordships, that as he was entering the Houfe that day a pamphlet was put into his hand, containing the groffeft libels on their Lordships and the Judges of the Land, with respect to a trial pending before their Lordships (Mr. Haftings's Trial we fuppofe); and he hoped, for the dignity of that House, and the character of the Judges, that it would not escape the animadversion of their Lordthips.

The Lord Chancellor Inewed, in. ftrong language, the necessity of the present Bill. It was true, that those different Societies avowed and profeffed that their object was a Parliamentary Reform, but it was perfectly clear that this this was to overturn the Conftitution of this country. They had no conception of condescending to apply to Parliament for a Reform, but they themfelves propofed to effect a Reform that was fuited to their own tafte, Notwithstanding all that had been faid against the measure, it was no more than had been propofed by the belt Ministers, or than had been adopted by the best Parliaments, in the wifeft, pureft, and best times of the hiftory of this country, and our rights and liberties had not fuffered the least injury from it.

The queftion of adjournment being moved by Lord Lauderdale, there appeared

FRIDAY, MAY 23.

The Royal Affent was given by commiffion to a number of public and private Bills, among which was the Bill for the Sufpension of the Habeas Corpus Act. Read the Bills upon the table, and adjourned to

MONDAY, MAY 26.

The order of the day being read for taking into confideration the State of the Nation, the Marquis of Lanfdowne, in entering on the bufinefs, was very fevere on his Majefty's Minifters.

He centured them for having excited a general alarm throughout the country, for having encouraged fpies and informers, and for having countenanced severe and rigorous punishments. He affected to treat with ridicule the apprehenfions entertained, and faid, the idea that arms, of new and various constructions, had been found in the polfeffion of individuals, was absurd, becaule the people of England were too humane, even in cases of the laft extremity, to have recourse to inftruments of the horrid nature described. The external fate of the country, he faid, was much worfe than was reprefented : our losses had been uniformly diminished, and our fuccesses had always been exaggerated. There was a great degree of fufpicion among the allies; and the Datch in particular were extremely uneafy on account of our late succeffes in the West Indies. His Lordship asked, What probability we had of conquering the French ? This had properly been called a War of Kings; for it was a War carried on by fix Kings against millions of Kings-for in the free country of France every man felt himfelf to be a King !- He then adverted to the conduct held by this Country to Neutral States; which he blamed in every inftance as arbitrary and unjuftifiable; particularly to the Grand Duke of Tufcany and to Genoa. His Lordship came lastly to speak of the fystem adopted by Ministers with regard to America, the whole of which, he contended, was calculated to irritate that country. The first instance which he felected to prove this position was, the interference of Great Britain in order to effect a peace between Portugal and Algiers, after which the latter Power deelared war against America ; and he faid, it was fulpected that that war was in fome degree caufed by the intrigues of the English Cabinet. The Marguis then adverted to our non-performance of the Articles of Peace with America, by our retaining certain forts. But the point which he conceived of the greatest importance was, the Speech of Lord Dorchefter to the Indians, in which he states, that there is a probability that the peace between England and America would not continue more than a year. On this fubject he thought the House had a right to be informed ; he therefore moved, " That an Addrefs be prefented to his Majefty, praying him to lay before the Houle a copy of the instructions fent out to Lord Dorchefter, as far as related to his conduct to those Indians."

Lord Grenville faid, fo much of the noble Lord's fpeech was foreign to the real fubject, that he must folicit the pardon of the Houfe for making any reply to a confiderable part of it. The noble Lord had affected to treat with ridicule the just apprehensions entertained in this country; but after the opinions given by their Lordflips on this fubject, he should not think it neceffary to attempt to prove that which was fo extremely obvious, viz. the existence of a confpiracy in this country to introduce French principles. With respect to the external state of our affairs, he did not know where the noble Lord had been furnished with the materials for painting fo melancholy a picture ; but he thought he could depend upon the information information which Ministers received, and he was fure it differed in every particular from the account given by the noble Marquis. The next charge made by the noble Marquis was the conduct of this Country towards Neutral States; but here again, fo far was that noble Lord from stating facts accurately, that if Ministers had acted wrong, it was by having shewn too much lenity and moderation, and in not having been ready enough to enforce that firict conduct which we had a right to expect from Neutral States. The next point was, that the Algerines had been inftigated by the Court of London to make war with America. It was true, that Ministry had negociated a peace between Portugal, who was our ally, and the Algerines; but that they had excited the latter to make war on America was a most gross and unfounded calumny, and without the flightest foundation whatever, As to our having retained the Forts in America, it was perfectly true ; but the fact was, that they were kept on account of the non-performance of fome of the articles by the Americans. And with regard to the lass circumstance mentioned by the noble Marquis, viz. the speech of Lord Dorchester to the Indians, the only authority for it was a New-York Paper; but he would fay positively, that the Ministers had received no information whatever of fuch a circumstance having taken place; and therefore he should give his negative to the motion.

The Duke of Grafton withed to know, Whether Minifters would fay that, from the nature of the influctions fent out to Lord Dorchefter, they had no reafon to expect fuch a fpeech from him ?

Lord Sydney fpoke in very high terms of Lord Dorchefter, and faid, a newspaper report was no foundation for fuch a motion.

Lord Landerdale went over the fame grounds as the Marquis of Lanfdowne, and fupported the motion.

Lord Carlifle, Lord Mansfield, and Lord Carnarvon, fpoke thortly against the motion.

Lord Stanhope, in a very vehement manner, fupported it.

The Marquis of Lanfdowne replied, and perfifted in his motion.

Lord Grenville having faid a few words in explanation, the Houfe divided, Contents 9-Non-Contents 69-Majotity against the motion 60.- Adjourned, TUESDAY, MAY 27.

The Houle refolved itfelf into a Committee upon the Statute Labour Bill (the Bifhop of Bangor in the Chair).

Lord Stanhope agreed to the principle of the Bill, but objected to the manner in which it was framed.

A long conversation enfued between Lord Thurlow, Lord Radnor, Lord Coventry, and the Chancellor.—Upon Lord Stanhope objecting to the preamble the Houfe divided—Contents 4; Non-Contents 3.

The Bill then went through the Committee.

Adjourned.

FRIDAY, MAY 30.

The Duke of Bedford role to make his promifed motion. In a fpeech of confiderable length he cnumerated the whole of the proceedings relative to the present war ; and taking a view of our Continental affairs, he thence concluded. that it neither tended to the honour of the Crown, nor the benefit of the Conflitution. His Grace next took into confideration the fituation of affairs at home. He faid, the principles of the Conftitution had been broken, the laws violated, and every species of arbitrary and unjust profecution exercised fince the beginning of the Sethon. The first measure he noticed was, the affembling the Parliament without the ufual notifications prefcribed by the Conflication, except in cafes of an expected invation, or actual rebellion in the kingdom, cafes which he defied any noble Lord to prove did exist : then the landing and keeping in this country bodies of armed foreigners, contrary to the laws : thirdly, the fuspension of the Habcas Corpus Act, which had been hurried through the Houfe in a manner forbidden by the ftanding orders of the Houfe ; this laid the liberty of every man at the mercy of the Minister; it had been the confequence of forming focieties of fpics and informers, who difperfed themfelves into coffee houfes, and places where the lower claffes of people ufually refort, where, if they conceive they hear a fentiment of differentent-of a differentent occafioned by the opprettion of parifiofficers, perhaps by a feizure of the very tools by the exercise of which a man maintained a numerous family-a fentimont uttored in fuch a moment of difcontent was fufficient to imprifon him, accused of fedition or treason, and bring him to trial. His Grace concluded with moving moving fourteen refolutions, condemning the conduct of Ministers in the profecution of the war. The two which are most material were in substance: "That it appeared expedient to that House that it should recommend to his Majefty to adopt such measures as night lead to a negociation of peace."

" Or that if his Majefty in his wifdom thought it advifeable fill to profecute the war, that he would be most gracioufly pleafed to flate what the object of it was."

Lord Auckland made a fhort reply, in which he defended the conduct of Government, as well warranted by the neceffity of the cafe.

Earl Fitzwilliam fupported the principle of the war, and the conduct of Government. He thought, that every man who wifhed well to his country muft fee the neceffity there was of deftroying the modern fyftem of reform.

The Duke of Grafton went into a very long hiftory of the American war; from thence he proceeded to blame Minifters for having entered into the prefent war; and concluded by obferving, that he faw no danger to the Confitution from any quarter but from the continuance of the prefent meafures.

Earl Mansfield, in a speech of some length, condemned the motion. He entered into a difcullion as to making peace with France ; which, he declared, could not be done without deferting our Allies, our Constitution, and our wellbeing as a State. He knew not with whom or in what manner we were to treat. Much had been faid of this Country being the aggreffor in the prefent war :-- It would not be unfit to put this fact beyond all manner of doubt, by reading a short extract from a late work written by Monf. Neckar; in which, among other things, is a priwate letter to him from M. de Leffart, a Minister of France, but then confined as a prifoner at Orleans, and fince murdered; who fates, that France was certainly the aggreffor ; and though the Girondifts, the Jacobins, and the Mountain party had each of them accufed the other with bringing it forward, yet the fact always remained unrefuted, that one or other of these did it.

Lord Lauderdale fpoke at fome length in favour of the motion. The evils and anarchy in France, faid he, are made the pretence for every ftrong measure; but they were a mere phaniom of the brain. He concluded with declaring his utter diftruft of Miniftry, and giving the motion his hearty fupport.

Lord Hawkefbury faid, he did not fee how the noble Duke's refolutions could be adopted while France remained in its prefent deplorable condition. And as France had provoked the war, and had drawn us into it, it was just that we should avail ourfelves of those advantages which we had gained, and of which we were likely ultimately to be the gainers. He allo contended, that the reitoration of Monarchical Government in France was the only foundation on which the peace of Europe could be fecured and effablished.

The Marquis of Lanfdowne fupported the motion, and, in bis roay, drew a plifture of Great Britain and France, in which he reprefented the former as ruined and decayed, and the latter as firm, vigorous, and perfevering. He endeavoured to prove, that it was morally impoffible ever to reftore the ancient Monarchy to its former vigour.

Lord Grenville faid, with respect to the object of peace, no man more ardently wished for peace than he did ; but fuch a peace only as was fafe, juit, and honourable. When, on a former occasion, such a proposition had been made, it was demanded, and with great propriety, With whom we were to make that peace ? And we are told, With the Executive Council of France, or Coincil of Seven, in whom all the power of the State was deposited. Yet this very Council, in five months after, had been guillotined, and vanished from the Icene. Those who had fucceeded them had fhared a like fate, and fo precarious were the lives of their greateft men, that Barrere and Robefpierre had preferved cheir heads by the treacherous facrifice of Danton, their affociate in power, and their friend.

His Lordfhip infifted upon the impracticability of obtaining peace from that Government which had hitherto been eftablished in France; and faid, that every proposition which went to fuch a purpose was vain, and precluded every expectation that could be entertained, even by the most zealous advocates for a peace.

Lord Auckland then moved an adjournment; on which the Houfe divided :

For the adjournment 114 Ag unft it 11 Adjourned.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3.

Lord Stanhope propofed feveral attendments to the Statute Labour Bill, which were all rejected, and the Bill was paffed.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5.

The Duke of Clarence prefented a Petition from the Weil India Merchants against a claufe in the Slave Carrying Bill. The prayer of the petition was granted; and Mr. Law and Mr. Dallas were heard as Counfel against the claufe.

A long convertation afterwards enfued in the Committee between the Duke of Clarence, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Stanhope, Lord Grenville, &c. and after a variety of modifications had been pro-Pofed, the claufe at laft ftood, that in cafe of the defituction or detention of a thip by the natives of Africa, in confequence of any act of aggrefion committed by the Captain of fuch thip against them, in fuch cafe the owners thall not be entitled to recover their infurance on the thip. The Bill then went through the Committee, and was ordered to be reported. Adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6.

Read a third time, and passed, the French Property Bill; after which the House adjourned to

WEDNESDAY, JUNE II.

The Royal Affent was given by commiffion to fifteen public and nine private Bills. Among the former was the Infolvent Debtors Bill.

Lord Grenville gave notice, that on Priday next he should move the Thanks of the House to Earl Howe for his im-Portant fervices.

Lord Grenville next moved, that the Report of the Committee of Secrecy be taken into confideration on Friday.

Lord Lauderdale thought it would be better if both those subjects were not appointed for the same day.

Lord Grenville faid, he did not expect any opposition to his motion of thanks to the gallant Admiral; but if it thould Produce much difcuffion, their Lordfaips might then put off the other fubject.

Lord Lauderdale faid, no perfon could object to a Vote of Thanks to Lord Howe; but upon that motion for e hoble Lords might think proper to make fome obfervations upon the conduct of the naval campaign.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13.

Lord Grenville rofe in pursuance of the notice he had given, and moved,

"That the thanks of this Houfe be transmitted to Admiral Earl Howe, and the other Admirals in that engagement, with all their names, together with the Officers, &c." Then followed an acknowledgment to all the men who were in the action. The thanks to all the Officers to be transmitted by Lord Howe, and the thanks to the Lord Chancellor.—Thefe motions being read by Lord Grenville, the questions were put, and all of them passed nem. diff.

The order of the day was then read, for taking into confideration the report of the Secret Committee. The title of the report being read, Lord Grenville moved, "That an humble Addrefs be pretented to his Majefty, flating to his Majefty that their Lordfhips were fully convinced of the exiftence of a confpiracy in this kingdom, for the purpofe of fubverting the Confitution of this country ; and affuring his Majefty of their fteady and loyal fupport i" which was carried without a division.

His Lordship then gave notice, that he would, on Tuesday, move the Thanks of the House to Lord Hood.

TUESDAY, JUNE 17.

THANKS TO LORD HOOD.

Lord Grenville role, agreeably to his notice on a former day, and intimated, that what he had to fay on the prefent occafion would be very fhort. The conqueft of Corfica was a matter of eminent fervice to this country, and the antecedent bufinels at Toulon a grand froke againft the enemy. Thefe fervices required the acknowledgements of thofe for whom our navy and our army had rifked their lives; and he could not allow himfelf to have an idea, that any oppofition could be given to that which juffice dictated, and which gratitude commanded. His Lordfhip then moved the feveral refolutions.

Lord Lauderdale oppofed the motion. The advantages gained at Toulon and Corfica were, he faid, trivial; and after what Lord Howe had done, and the vote of thanks to that noble Admiral for his glorious victory, he thought the prefent motion would, in a great meafure, leffen the value of that vote. He allowed, that it was rather an ungracious matter at all times to oppofe a vote of thanks to any officer—but in the prefent inflance, he thought that the vote was rather a vote of approbation of the conduct of Minuitry than of praife to the neble Naval Lord.

Lord Grenville infifted, that the giving thanks to one Naval Commander could not take away the merit of another. He denied that the British faith had been broken at Toulon, and contended, that the most eminent fervices were performed there, as well as at Baftia.' It was the first time in 'his life, he faid, that he had ever heard of any Member in either House of Parliament permitting the fpirit of party to overrule the principle of gratitude, and deny to those who were defending our lives, our property, and our Conflicution, even the poor pittance of thanks. It was a political revolution in the fentiments of a British mind, to which he flould never give his affent.

The Duke of Bedford fupported Lord Lauderdale's idea, that the prefent vote of thacks would take away from the value of that recently voted to Earl Howe. As he did not wifh to put a negative upon the vote of thanks to any Britifh officer, he fhould therefore move the previous queftion.

Lord Hawkefbury extelled the fervices of Lord Hood, and adverted to the very high value Corfica would be of to us as a friendly port. He reprobated, in firong terms, all that had been faid againft the merits of Lord Hood.

The Lord Chancellor, in reply to fome obfervation which fell from the Oppofition refpecting Lord Hood's failing from Corfica to affift Lord Howe, obferved, that thofe who made ufe of fuch an idea knew little of the geography of the Mediterranean. Was Lord Hood to leave Toution and Corfico open to the reception of the French fleets, in order to affift Lord Howe, where no adfiftance was wanting? The refiftance to the prelent motion, he faid, originated in a ipirit of oppofition, for the fake of oppofition.

The queftion was then put on the motion for the previous queftion; when the numbers were :- Against it, 31-For it, 5--- Majority, 26.

The Lord Chancellor then proceeded to read the original motion of thanks, when he was interrupted by Lord Lauderdale, who infifted, that he had a right first to propole a motion of thanks to Colonel Villette, who was equally intilled to them as Lord Hood.

The noble Earl was immediately called to order by almost the whole House. He, however, persisted; and this produced a more violent altercation than was ever remembered. Lord Lauderdale was however, at length, compelled to withdraw his motion, but he moved an amendment to Lord Grenville's motion, which he had a right to do, to introduce the name of Colonel Villette.

Lord Sydney allowed he was a meritorious and deferving young Officer ; but if his name was introduced, fo muft all of the fame rank at Corfica. The Officers were all included in the motion before the Houfe, and that was perfectly fufficient.

The queflion was put on the amendment, and negatived.

The Duke of Bedford then moved, that the names of the other British Admirals at Corfica, be did not know vobo they were, should be inferted in the thanks.

This was also negatived, and the original motion for thanks was put and carried.

The following Proteft was afterwards entered :

" DISSENTIENT;

" 1. Becaufe it has not been the practice of this Houfe to vote Thanks to Officers commanding his Majefty's forces by fea or land, except on occafions where they have eminently advanced the honour, and promoted the interefts of their country, by the moft important and acknowledged fervices.

" 2. Becaufe by voting the thanks of this Houfe, except in fuch inflances, we diminifh the value of the moft honourable reward we have it in our power to confer, and leffen one of the beft incirements to future fervice.

" 3. Becaufe the reduction of Baftia does not in itfelf appear to us to be fuch a fervice as calls upon this Houfe for any extraordinary mark of approbation or applaufe.

"4. Becaule whatever the merit of that fervice may be, the other Admirals of the Fleet, and the Commanding Officers of his Majefty's Land Forces, much have had their fhare in it; and to refule thanking them, is had been ufual on fimilar occasions, appears to us to juftify an opinion that the vote of thanks to Lord Hood originated from fome metive of a private and perfonal nature, which it is improper for this Houle to countenance.

" 5. Becaufe even Minifters themfelves do not feem, in the first inftanceto have confidered that fervice as entitled to fuch a mark of approbation; for though accounts had been received of the reduction of Bastia previous to those of the victory obtained by the fleet under the command of Earl Howe, no intention was aunounced of moving a vote of thanks to Lord Hood, till this Houfe had paid the juft tribute of gratitude and honour for that moft important and fplendid victory.

"BEDFORD, DEREY, ALBEMARLE, THANET." LAUDERDALE,

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18. Their Lordfhips met principally for the purpofe of going up with the Addrefs voted on Friday to his Majefty; and after reading the Bill on the table, the Lord Chancellor, attended by about a dozen noble Peers, fet off to St. James's, where they delivered the Addrefs, which is as follows :

" Most Gracious Sovereign,

"We, your Majefty's moft dutiful and loyal fubjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in Parliament affembled, having taken into our moft ferious confideration the communications which your Majefty has been pleafed to make to us, refpecting defigns againft the public peace and lafety, carried on within this realm, think it our bounden duty, at this period, humbly to lay before your Majefty those fentiments to which we were led by the refult of that examination.

"We have feen with the utmoft concern and indignation, that there has exifted within this realm a feditious and traitorous confpiracy, directed to the fubverfion of the authority of your Majeity and your Parliament, and to the utter defruction of the eftablifhed Conftitution and Government of thefe your Majefty's kingdoms: and that for the execution of thofe wicked and detoftable defigns, means of open violence were preparing, and acts meditated, leading to all the horrors of infurrection, anarchy, and rebellion.

" That, with the fulleft conviction of thefe defigns, thus deilberately entertained, openly avowed, and on the. Very point of being attempted to be executed, we feel ourielves bound to express to your Mejefty our gratitude for the paternal care which your Majefty has fnewn for the deareft interefts of your people, in having taken fuch meafures as might beft tend to defeat all fuch purpoles, and to bring the authors and abettors of them to public juffice.

"We have, on our part, proceeded without delay, after the example of our Vo1. XXVI, anceftors, and under the just impression of the exigency of fuch a fituation, to vest in your Majesty, by law, fuch additional powers as seem best calculated to provide for the public peace and tranquillity : and we rely with confidence on your Majefty's employing all legal and conflicational means for the punishment of fuch crimes ; for the fuppression of the first appearance of any tumult or diforder connected with them; and generally, for the giving, as the circumstances manifestly require, full energy and vigour to the execution of the laws, by which all your Majefty's fubjects are equally protected, and from which alone they can derive the fecure enjoyment of property, of liberty, and of life itself.

" And we beg leave to affure your Majefty, that as we are determined to defend with refolution and vigour, against our foreign enemies, the rights of your Majefty's crown, and fafety and welfare of our country, and the exiftence of good order and civil fociety, fo we will, on every occafion, afford to your Majefty the fulleft fupport and affiftance in maintaining inviolate the free Constitution of these realms, in preferving internal peace and tranquillity, and in refifting the desperate purposes of those who would introduce among us the miferies which now prevail in France; fuch being the conduct which we feel to be due from us, as faithful and affectionate fubjects, and as men deeply impreffed with the value of the bleffings which we enjoy."

His Majefty was feated on the Throne, and was pleafed to deliver the following moft gracious answer:

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I receive with great fatisfaction this dutiful and loyal Addrefs.

" I could not doubt of the concern and indignation with which you would fee, from the communications which I directed to be made to you, the nature and extent of the treasonable confpiracy which has been carried on in this kingdom, and directed to the fubversion of the established Constitution and Government. You may be affured that nothing shall be wanting, on my part, to give due energy and vigour to the execution of the laws, in order to maintain our internal peace and tranquillity, and to preferve to my fubjects the bleffings of liberty and order. Your uniform conduct affords me the furest pledge that I fhall on all occafions receive receive from you that affiftance and fupport which may belt contribute to thele points, fo effential to the deareft interefts of my people, whole happinefs muft ever be the firft object of my withes."

FRIDAV, JUNE 20.

The Lord Chaucellor read the anfwer of Earl Howe to the vote of thanks paffed by their Lordfhips to that gallant Commander, and to the Officers and feamen under him, which he had, by the direction of the Houfe, commucated to Earl Howe, and which was as follows:

" MY LORD,

"Ack nowledging my obligations in refpect of the very flattering terms in which your Lordfhip has been pleafed to make known to me the highly effeemed honour conferred upon me by the unanimous refolution of thanks of the Houfe of Lords, fignified in your letter of the 14th inftant, I am to intreat that you will have the further goodnefs to alfure their Lordfhips of the deep imprefion I fhall ever retain of their condefcending notice. occasion confists in my good fortune; inafmuch as I held the chief command, when fo many refolute principal and fubordinate officers, as well as brave men ferving under their orders, were employed at that time in the fleet. And I must add, that if there is cause for triumph in the late defeat of the enemy at fea, it is truly the triumph of the Britifh failors, whofe animated and perfevering courage, I believe, has in no instance ever been exceeded : I shall therefore have a great increase of happinefs in obeying the commands of the House of Lords, by communicating to those feveral descriptions of persons the fenfe their Lordfhips have deigned to

" The merit I would affume on this express of their good conduct. I have the honour to remain, with the greatest refpect,

MY LORD,

Your Lordship's most obedient humble Servant,

HOWE."

The Queen Charlotte at Spithead, the 18th day of June 1794. To be continued.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

O^N the motion that the Bill for the fufpenfion of the Habeas Corpus Act be read a third time, the Houfe proceeded further on the difcuffion of the Bill, and at length divided upon the paffing of it, which was carried—Ayes, 146—Noes, 28—Majority, 113.

The Bill was then ordered to the Lords for their concurrence.

The Houfe then adjourned at three o'clock on Sunday morning.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.

Mr. Dundas rofe, and moved,

- 3dly, That the fame be prefented to Lieutenant-General Prefeott, and his Royal Highnefs Prince Edward, and the other Officers in that army.

The questions were then carried nem. con.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 21.

There being an infufficient number of Members to proceed to bufinefs, the Speaker adjourned the Houfe.

THURSDAY, MAY 22.

A new writ was ordered for Huntingdonfhire, vice Mr. Brown, Steward of the three Chiltern Hundreds.

A meffage was received from the Lords, that the Lords had appointed a Committee of Secrecy.

An inftruction was given to the Committee mittee of Secrecy, to communicate with the Committee of Secrecy of the Lords, and the Messenger from the Lords was acquainted therewith.

FRIDAY, MAY 23.

Mr. Burke vindicated the report published by the Managers for the Commons, against which he conceived fome reflections had been thrown out in another place. He professed himself ready at all times to stand forward in defence of that report. Adjourned to

MONDAY, MAY 26.

Mr. Hobart brought up the report of the Bill for the Relief of Infolvent Debtors.

Mr. Jekyll was defirous that the 17th of April flould fland in the Bill, inflead of the 1ft of January 1794. It was then propoled that the 12th of February be inferted in the Bill; which, after a converfation, in which the Mafter of the Rolls, Mr. Huffey, and Mr. Jekyll, hore a part, was agreed to.

The feveral other amendments were gone through, and the Bill ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. Sheridan, after making fome observations upon the conduct of Minifters, proceeded to read a paper that he held in his hand, and which, he faid, purported to be the answer of Lord Dorchefter to the Indians of Lower Canada. The paper admitted of little lefs than an idea of an approaching rupture with America, and as fuch he fhould move, " That an humble Addrefs be prefented to his Majesty, praying that his Majefty would be gracioufly pleafed to give directions that there be laid before this Houfe a copy of the Answer returned on the 10th of February 1794, by Lord Dorchefter, to the Indians of Lower Canada."

Mr. Dundas, in exprefs terms, declared, that it was the first time he had ever heard of fuch a paper being in existence; and fo far was this country from doing anything that might have the least tendency to create a rupture with America, that she did every thing in her power to fettle all the difputes that arofe between the Americans and the Indians.

After a few words from Mr. Fox, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Wilberforce, and Mr. Robinfon, the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. Sheridan brought forward his promifed motion for the repeal of tells, and moved for "Leave for a Bill to prevent certain qualifications, now called for by law, from being required in future of perfons bearing military offices."

Mr. Secretary Dundas obferved, that as the proposition involved the entire repeal of the Teft Act, on which the Heufe had often decided, he thought the best mode would be to offer the previous question, which he moved accordingly.

Mr. Fox fpoke with fome warmth in fupport of the mation, and contended for the unexampled loyalty of the Proteftant Differences, who at all times flood forward in fupport of the Confliction, and of the prefent Royal Family.

The previous queftion was then put and carried.

TUESDAY, MAY 27.

There being only feven Members prefent they adjourned.

FRIDAY, MAY 30.

Mr. Fox role to make his promifed motion on the fubject of the war, and entered at great length into the circumfances of the origin of it-the different alliances we had formed on account of it -the progrefs of the operations-the manner in which we had changed the grounds of it-all the different fucceffes and defeats-in fhort, every matter which could by any means be introduced with respect to the war ;- from all which he ventured to pronounce, that the objects which Ministers seemed to propofe to themfelves were abfolutely unattainable, and that nothing fhort of the impending ruin of the country was to be apprehended, if the prefent fystem was perfified in. He averred, that we were now farther from our object than at the commencement of the campaign; for, instead of being able to make an impreflive entrance into the interior of France, the Allies could not prevent the enemy from reducing their own frontier towns, and penetrating into their dominions.

That the objects of the war were changed, he faid, was evident, when the declarations of Ministers, at the commencement of the war, were compared with their subsequent manifestoes ; these were not more impolitic with refpect to offenfive operations against the enemy than they were unwife or unjuft on other grounds; for while the real grounds and objects of the war were not fully and explicitly declared, we could get no one fet of the great bodies of the Emigrants to join heartily with us. He should therefore, on the fcore of policy, even if the war on its prefent H 2 principles principles were to be perfifted in, recommend a candid and explicit avowal of its real object, and fhould include in his motion the necessity of adopting fuch a flep. After alluding to the fucceffes in the Weft-Indies, which, he faid, were chiefly to be afcribed to the abilities of the Officers employed in the fervice, and expreffing a hope that the fpeech attributed to Lord Dorchefter was a forgery, and that we might avoid the greatest of calamities, a rupture with America, Mr. Fox moved a ftring of refolutions, which tended to the cenfure of Ministers, in changing the objects of the war from what they had at first declared them to be ; reprefenting, that from a view of the events of the war, those objects were as unattainable as they were unjuft; and laftly, praying his Majefty to order fuch fteps to be taken as may bring about a speedy pacification, and at least to make fome explicit avowal of the object in continuing the war.

Mr. Jenkinson role to oppose the motion. He observed, that with respect to the principles on which the war was conducted, which were obvioufly juft and neceflary, the House had often decided ; as often had the real objects of the war been stated by Gentlemen on his fide of the Houfe, they were indemnity for the paft, as far as could be compaffed, and fecurity for the future. He contended, that it was practicable to overthrow the prefent Government of France, which was as odious as grievous to the great body of the people. No fecurity for this country could ever be had while the Jacobin Government exifted ; and as he confidered most of the Honourable Mover's arguments falle and fophifical, he moved the previous queftion.

Mr. Shevidan deprecated with warmth the fhameful and indecorous manner in which Ministers seemed inclined to get rid of the queffion, by making Mum the order of the day, and difregarding the very weighty arguments of his Honourable Friend. He ridiculed what were called the advantages gained by this country during the war, and bitterly inveighed against the late trick-the alarm of pretended confpiracies to overturn the Government, which he declared had no foundation but in the foul imaginations of Ministers. He concluded by telling the Lord Mayor, that if the Laws of England were affimilated to those of Scotland, he should have the pleafure of fending his Lordfhip to Botany-Bay, for having offered in the Guildhall of the City, a bet of 106 guineas to fix guineas, that within two months after the fulpenfion of the Habeas Corpus Bill, he (Mr. Sheridan) would be taken up.

^{*} The Lord Mayor (Mr. Le Mefurier) faid, that as the Honourable Gentleman's attorney had given him notice he should profecute him for a libel, he should fay nothing more on the business at prefent, than that he was missionermed.

Mr. Pitt, after afferting the utter impoffibility of our making a peace with the prefent rulers of France, and the abfolute necessity of our continuing the war, feverely remarked on the expression foul imaginations made use of by Mr. Sheridan, and the manner in which he had introduced the ftory of himfelf into the debate. Mr. Pitt faid, the Gentleman's abuse had no novelty or importance with him ; but there certainly was fome degree of novelty indeed in this mode of attack against a report originating from twenty one Members, to whofe character for honour and integrity he would not do any injury by comparing it with the quarter from which the attack was made.

Here Mr. Pitt was called to order by Mr. Courtenay, and the Speaker interfered, and in a certain degree cenfured the expreflions both of Mr. Pitt and Mr. Sheridan. Mr. Pitt then proceeded, and faid, he would readily make an apology,—but only where it was due —to the Speaker, and to the Houfe.

Mr. Sheridan faid, he did not feel himfelf much hurt that the Right Hon. Gentleman had excepted him out of the apology he had made to the Houfe. He would never afk from the Right Hon. Gentleman an apology for any provocation given within thofe walls, and he was very well convinced, that no provocation would ever be given to him without.

At one o'clock the Houfe divided. For the previous queftion, 228—Againft it, 55—Majority, 173.

MONDAY, JUNE 2.

Lord John Cavendifh and Evelyn James Stewart took the ufual oath; and their feats.

THURSDAY, JUNE 5.

At four o'clock the Speaker counted the Houle; and there being only fourteen Members prefent, he adjourned the Houfe.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer brought up the further report of the Committee of Secrecy, which he moved might be laid on the table. Granted.— He then moved, that it fhould be printed for the ufe of the Members, which was granted.—He then informed the Houfe, that there were fome other papers not yet ready, but which he would bring up to-morrow; and at the fame time gave notice, that he would on a future day move to take the whole into confideration.

MONDAY, JUNE 16.

Mr. Secretary Dundas, after commenting on the very great and fignal fervices which Lord Howe had rendered his country, in his late glorious victory over the French fleet, which, in his opinion, was fuperior to any victory ever gained by the Britifh arms at fea, moved, "That the Thanks of the Houfe be given to Admiral Earl Howe, for his very able and galiant conduct in the late brilliant and decifive victory gained over the French by the fleet under his command."

Mr. Fox was happy in the opportunity of rendering his tribute of praife to the noble and gallant Admiral, of whom (though he fometimes differed from him in political points) he always thought, that he was one of the greateft Naval Officers this country ever produced.

The Address was agreed to by the House nem. con.

A fimilar Addrefs of Thanks was ordered to be tranfmitted to the fubordinate Officers, and the feamen of the fleet.

It was ordered, that a monument fhould be erected to the memory of Captain Montague in Weftminfter-Abbey, and that the Houfe would make good the expences of the fame.

After the order being read for taking into confideration the report of the Secret Committee, transmitted to the House by the Lords, being also read,

Mr. Pitt introduced his motion for an Addrefs to the King, in the words of that voted by the Houfe of Lords *, by faying that, important as the fubject was, it required but very little to be faid by him on the fubject. The Report fpoke for itfelf. From that it clearly appeared, a fixed and determined defign exifted, and was about to be put in exegution, completely to fubvert the Government, and the very Conflicution of this country. If this was not meant by the feditious Societies, nothing was meant. But no perfon who read their refolutions with an upprejudiced mind could for a moment hefitate in perceiving the dangerous extent of their views. However covered by the flimfy pretext of Parliamentary Reform, and an alteration in one branch of the Legiflature only, they neceffarily and inevitably led to the deftruction of King, Lords, and Commons. A Convention had lately become the open and avowed measure to which thefe who dared to call themfelves the Friends of Freedom had looked for the complete fuccefs of their Ichemes. This proposed Convention, though it was not boldly and explicitly declared to be their intention to arrogate to themfeives Legiflative Power, yet. would have inevitably become poffeffed of it, if fuffered to exift ; and that by the fame fteps as the French Convention had gradually acquired that tyranny which they now exercifed. The defign that they should watch the Legislature, and the fteps taken towards affording them the means of refiftance, tended inevitably in the first instance to overawe, and next to superfede entirely. the prefent Reprefentatives of the Pecple. The art with which the principles had been diffeminated which finally led to the meeting of a Convention in this kingdom, together with the proceedings of those who had already met under that title, even to the ridiculous minutiæ of form in refemblance to that in a neighbouring country ; - thefe, and many other circumstances must convince the most incredulous what was the true aim and intention of thefe turbulent fpirits, however attempted to be difguifed or concealed by proteftations thrown out to miflead and deceive the common people, who were made the dupes of defigning leaders. We need only look to France to fee the effects which were neceffarily produced by an Affembly, which first artfully raifed and created a spirit which they then called the public will, and acted conformably to it. He concluded with faying, that he could not conceive any doubt could arife in the minds of a fingle Member of that House on the subject; and moved the Address which had been before voted by the House of Lords.

Mr. Lambton and Mr. Martin faid a few words, expressing their fentiments that the danger from those Societies was not fuch as to call for Parliamentary interference; but might be easily repelled, without any extraordinary exertions, by existing laws of the country.

Mr. Serjeant Watfon, Mr. Alderman Newnham, and Sir Watkin Lewes, declared, that the prefent crifis was fuch as to call for early and vigorous exertions to prevent the danger, which, according to the Report, threatened this kingdom.

Mr. Fox declared, that he confidered the Address in its present state as going too far at least, if not totally unuecessary. The queffion was not, Whether there were perfons in the country difaffected to our Government. There never was a period in the hiftory of this country when fuch perfons did not exift; and fometimes they had been perfons of much superior influence and property, and confequently more hoffile to the Conftitution of this country ; but the love of the People of England, and their attachment to the Conflicution, and to the illustrious family on the Throne, defeated all their machinations, allifted at different times by foreign Powers and foreign Princes.

The quefion now was, What they could do; and whether what they could do was of luch a nature as to require the extraordinary interpofition of Parliament, the laws in this country being in full force ? He thought Minifters ought not to come with an Addrefs for that which might be in iffue when the trials of thofe who had lately been taken up thould come on. No man could doubt of the loyalty of that Houfe--no maa could doubt of its readine is to profefs that loyalty--no man could entertain a doubt of the loyalty of the country at large.

Mr. Fox faid, that having thanked Lord Howe for his fuccels at fea, he fhould have been glad to have thanked him for reftoring the Habeas Corpus A&t. He could not fee any necelity for the Addrefs; nor could he think that the Report of the Secret Committee contained fuch evidence of a confpiracy as to fanction the refolution of that Houfe, affirming that a confpiracy exified to overturn the Government.— He blamed the alarm which was caufed by the word Convention. It was to a Convention thefe kingdoms owed their liberty, and the Houfe of Brunfwick obtained possession of the Throne .--He feared left Ministry were purfuing the plan adopted by the Government of France, by raifing falfe alarms to fecure to themfelves the whole power of the country. Mr. Fox attributed much of the difcontent in Scotland to the feverity of the laws, and the rigour of the profecutions. As to those who were confined in this country for Treafon or Sedition, he had no doubt if they were guilty they would be convicted by a Jury of their country. He had still lefs doubt, that if they were innocent they would be acquitted. He hoped few only were guilty. He dreaded puthing things to an extreme ; he withed to preferve the Conffitution and the happine's of the people ; he conceived, it was the right of Englishmen to meet, to confider their rights, to prefent petitions to the King or Parliament, &c. Thefe rights were facred, but were loft in most of the other Governments of Europe, where only the name remained, and where despotism prevailed. He recommended peace, not fo much under the hope that it would be accepted by France, as to prevent their receiving any affiftance from this country.

Mr. Fox concluded with an amendment to the Addrefs, by leaving out that part which related to the difcovery of a confpiracy.

Sir W. Dolben faid, he looked upon the prefent as a confpiracy of fo deep and dangerous a nature, that it was proper for Government to interfere. He was not one of those who believed there were no Republicans in this country. The Right Hon. Gentleman withed there fhould be a King, Lords, and Commons; but a paifive and obsdient King, an unrefitting House of Lords, and a rank Republican House of Commons.

The Attorney General obferved, that the difcontents in Scotland took place more than twelve months before the profecutions; they were not therefore the caufe, but the effects of them-

The Habeas Corpus Act remains in full force, except as to thole who were acculed of high treafen, or fulpested of treafonable practices. It had been afked, Had not the People of England a right to meet to difculs their rights, &c. He conceived, if a number of people were to meet on Hounflow Heath to dethrone the King, he had no difficulty in faying it would be HIGH TREASON-No man could read thefe papers with attention, attention, who would not clearly fee, that every man in this country was deeply concerned in having this confpiracy fuppreffed,

Mr. Fox explained.

Mr. Thompfon made a long harangue in defence of the Conflicutional Society.

Mr. Dent faid, that from what lay before the Houfe little doubt could now be entertained of the reality of the views and defigns of thofe Societies. And in thefe (catiments he was fupported by Mr. Wnarton in favour of the Addrefs.

The queftion was then put, and the Address carried without a division.

At half past eleven adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20.

The Houfe in a Committee went through the different provisions of the London Militia Bill, and having received the report agreed to the amendments made by the Committee.

After fome debate, the Bill was read a third time, and fent to the Lords. [By this a force of 600 difciplined men is fubfituted for the former number, 9000, of irregular trained-bands.]

THE MANAGERS OF THE IMPLACH-MENT.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a very able and elegant speech, defcanted on the talents and industry of the Managers of Mr. Haftings's Impeachment. He stated, that on all former occasions of Impeachment thanks had always been voted to the Managers for the Commons, and that the present had been fuch as peculiarly to call for that marked commendation.

remarked, that when they He confidered the long and almost unremitted labour, the magnitude of the object, the weight of the charge, the almost unbounded extent of the proofs, documents, and other materials, and the perfeverance and perfpicuity required and difplayed by the Managers, in the exercife of the talk alligned to them, they could not but confider them as fo many evidences in favour of the Managers, fufficient not only to extort the warmest applause from the House, but even to cover, or rather annihilate, any errors, it errors there should be, stated against them. But, exclusive of those reasons, it seemed to be a right conferred by cuttom, and that the Houfe could not make this cafe an exception to the ufual conduct of Parliament, unless it appeared to them that there was a failure or nifcarriage, arifing from the mifconduct of the Managers.

he did not fee who could object to the vote of thanks. Those who were originally friends of the Impeachment. and thought that there was grave caufe for enquiry, could not vote against it : for they, had they changed their opinion of the Impeachment, would have arrested the progrefs of it, rather than have treafured up their opinions to be brought forth at that unleasonable time. As to those who were originally against the Impeachment, Mr. Pitt addreffed their propriety and candour ; and afked them, Whether, as Members of that House, after having been in a minority on an important queftion, they had a right, on a new queffion, to call on the Houfe to depart from their decided and expressed opinion, and to withhold that ufual mark of respect and acknowledgment which they had always been accufromed to beflow? He willed those Gentlemen who had thewn themfelves hoftile to the Impeachment, and were riveted in their attachment to Mr. Haftings, to reflect ferioully before they gave a negative to the motion ; for he doubted much.whether an unanimous vote of that House (honourable though it was) would be fo honourable to the Managers as a vote of thanks marked with a difcriminating negative of those who felt themselves irritated and flung by the faithful and admirable difcharge of the tafk imposed upon them by their country. He concluded with moving, "That the Thanks of the Houfe be given to the Members who were Managers for conducting the Impeachment of Warren Haftings, Efc. for their very able and faithful discharge of the duty reposed in them on that occasion.

Under all the circumstances, he faid.

Mr. Sumner (Member for Guildford) oppoled the motion; and entered into a warm accufation of Mr. Burke for the TEMMS which he had uled againft Mr. Haftings in the courfe of the trial. He also confidered the motion as premature, being before the judgment given by the Houfe of Lords. The Speaker inflanced twocafes, Sacheverel and Lord Macclesfield's to the contrary. Mr. Sumner then, after having been feveral times called to order for irregular allofions to matters not in debate, concluded with moving the previous queflion; which was feconded by Mr. Wigles.

Mr. Wyndham supported the motion for thanks. As to Mr. Burke's language, he should only fay that the indignation dignation of a virtuous man against one whom he supposed to be criminal could not be expressed in very POLITE terms. After some further remarks from Mr. Francis, Mr. Fox, and Mr. Anstruther, against the previous quession, and Mr. Law for it, the House divided : Ayes 21-Noes 55.

The original motion was then put and carried : Ayes 50-Noes 21.

The Speaker then delivered the thanks in the following eloquent and imprefive addrefs :

" Geatlemen,

" It is my daty to communicate to you the thanks of this Houfe, for the manner in which you have difcharged a most arduous trust, on an occasion highly interesting to the honour and justice of the nation.

" The fubject to which your attention has been directed was intricate and extensive beyond example : You have proved, that it was well fuited to your industry and eloquence, the exertions of which have conferred honour, not on yourselves only, but on this Houfe, whole credit is intimately connected with your own. A forcible admonition has been given, on this occasion, to all perfons in fituations of high and important national truft, that they can neither be removed by diftance, or iheltered by power, from the vigilance and authority of this House, which is poffessed of no privilege more important than that by which it is enabled to bring public delinquents to the bar of Public Juffice, and thus to preferve, or refcue from difhonour, the British name and chazacter.

"But in addreffing you on this eccafion, and in confidering the beneficial confequences to be expected from this proceeding, it is impoffible not to advert to the increated fecurity which the Conflitution has derived in the courfe of it, from the recognition and full confirmation of the principle, that an Impeachment is not difficution of Parliament; a principle effectively to the privileges of this Houfe, and to the independent and effectual administration of Public Juffice.

"Under thefe impressions, suggested by the nature and importance of your truft, and by the manner in which you have difeharged it, I obey, with the utmost fatisfaction, the commands of this Houle, by flating to you their refolution: "That the Thanks of this Houfe be given to the Members who were appointed the Managers of the Impeach nent againft Warren Haftings, "Efc], for their faithful management in their difcharge of the truft repored in them."

Mr. Pist moved, that the Speaker's fpeech be printed.

Mr. Burke, on the part of himfelf and the other Managers, expressed their gratitude for the mark of honour new conferred on them by the House. This he delivered in his usual dignified and impressive manner.

Mr. Pitt's last motion was then carried unanimoufly.

THANKS TO LORD HOOD.

Mr. Dundas rofe, and after a very fhort introduction moved the thanks of the Houfe to Lord Hood, for his very able and gallant conduct in the expedition againft Corfica.

Mr. Sheridan oppofed the motion. He entered at fome length into the conduct of Lord Hood at Toulon, which he blamed, and concluded with moving the previous queftion; which, after fome obfervations from Mr. Fox, Mr. Dundas, and Mr. Addington, was negatived without a division.

The quefiion was then put on the original motion, "That the Thanksof this Houfe be given to Admiral Lord Hood;" which was carried nem. con.

Mr. Dundas next moved, "That the Thanks of this Houfe be given to all the Officers, failors, and foldiers, engaged in the expedition to Corfica."

Mr. Sheridan moved an amendment to that motion, by adding the names of feveral Admirals and Commanders. It turned out, however, that fome of those Admirals, inflead of being at Corfica, were ferving in the Downs.

A defultory convertation took place on this amendment, which was negatived; and Mr. Dundas's motion was carried nem. con.

It was then ordered that this vote of thanks should be transmitted by letter.

Mr. Pitt moved for an Addrefs to his Majefty, to confer fome reward on the Committioners appointed to enquire into the flate of Civil and Criminal Juffice in the ifles of Jerfey and Man.—Ordered.

Adjourned to Monday fe'nnight, on Mr. Pitt's metion, to give the Lords time to finish the bufinels before them. [To be continued.]

AN

DECLARATION of the KING of PRUSSIA to the GERMAN EMPIRE, on his SECESSION from the prefent CONTINENTAL CONFEDERACY.

HE period being arrived in which His PRUSSIAN MAJESTY is forced to difcontinue taking that active part in the prefent War, which hitherto has been the effect of his Generofity and pure Patriotism, on account and in confideration of what is owing by His Majesty to the prefervation of his own Estates, and to the welfare of his Sub-Jects : His Majefty thinks it particularly his duty to lay before their Highneffes the Co-States of the German Empire, the real caufes and true motives by which he was induced to take fuch a resolution.

At the time when the French Nation, in the unfortunate delufion of imaginary Liberty, had not only diffol-ved every tie of Civil Order amongst themfelves, but also meditated the fubvertion of the repose and welfare of other Nations by the introduction of their Anarchic Horrors, and, in fact, had already fallen in a hoftile manner on fuch territories of His Imperial Majefty and of the German Empire as were nearest them, His Majesty thought proper to unite his just arms with those of His Imperial Majesty, and afterwards with those of the whole German Empire, and those of his other Allies, in order to fet bounds to the destructive enterprises of a delirious Nation, and to reftore Peace and Happinefs to those as guiltless as highly endangered States. This object was endangered States. ever the guide of the Arms of His Majefty down to this present moment, and more impressive on his mind, in proportion as the madnefs of the French augmented, and the danger of ail Germany became more imminent. The efforts of His Majesty to set a boundary against this mighty torrent of ill-fortune on the German Territories, were, it is true, at first but proportioned to the danger, but foon exceeded the utmost of his ability. 1 he War was not a War with a civilized Nation, and well-difciplined Armies, but a War with a delirious and neverdiminishing swarm of men-with a highly populous Nation, provided with every reloarce for War to back thema set of men who did not fight merely for victory, but who fought, by fire, fword, and the poifon of their pernicious doctrines, to fubvert the whole locial edifice of Germany. VOL. XXVI.

To oppose this almost unconquerable Enemy, the King, on his part, brought into the Field 70,000 men, and those his choicest Troops. With these has His Majesty combated, even until this Third Campaign, under every imaginable obstacle, far from the Pruffian Dominions, amidst already-exhausted lands, excels of dearnels of the necelfaries of life, and almost insupportable expence.

Befides these unparalleled efforts. His Majefty has made to the Common Caufe every poffible facrifice which the National frength of Pruffia would permit; nor has he hefitated to expose even his facred Perfon, and the Princes of his family, to every danger by which the repole and lafety of Germany could be conquered from the Enemy. For this object alone has fo much Pruffian blood been spilt-for this, fuch immense treasures drained from his dominions. Such a War must neceffarily have more exhausted his refources than those of such Powers whofe dominions lay more contiguous to the scene of hostility; and thus His Majefty fell into an absolute impoffibility of taking any longer that active part from his own means, without utterly ruining his own dominions, and entirely exhausting the property of his Subjects.

His Majefty, however, still remained deeply imprefied with a patriotic hope of being able still to lend help and protection, and that with increased force, to the German Empire: and, to be enabled to do this, he entered into a negotiation with the Confederate Powers, proposing certain arrangements to them, the principal points of which were, befides the payment of a fubfidy to him, a flipulation that the subfiftence of the greatest part of the Prussian army should be provided for by the Empire in general; and that, until a final Plan fhould be concluded to this effect, the Six Anterior Circles of the Empire, who lay most exposed to danger, and who raped immediate Benefit from the defence, should be charged provisionally with the furnishing of the fame : and it was alfo declared to the Dier of the Empire, and the Circles above-mentioned, that, in cafe thefe frank and free propofals were not acceded to by the Emperor, His Ma-jefty would be compelled to withdraw the greatest part of his Troops, and to leave the Empire to its fate.

Several States have made Declarations

tions fuitable to the preffing circumstances in which they and the whole Empire were placed; in particular, His Electoral Highnels of Mentz, full of exalted and patristic fentiments towards the Empire, complied with every reguifition relative to the fubfiltence of the Pruffian Troops which depended upon him, and fummoned an immediate Congress of the Six Circles. His Majefty entertained a just expectation, that fimilar good confequences would every where have flowed from his Patriotic intentions, and his hard-earned merits in his former defence of the whole Empire. Every retrofpect feemed to confirm these hopes : on one fide, the paft afforded the admonithing picture of the dreadful torrent of an allfubverting Enemy; on the other, the noble and heroic fland of the Pruffian Army, and the immense facrifices of the Blood of his Warriors, and the Treafures of his Dominions, made by the magnanimity of His Pruffian Majefty. Even then that army was ftanding on the Banks of the Rhine, the Bulwark of the whole Empire, and to which the Enemy did not dare to pe-netrate; but the fubfiftence of that Army, undertaken by the whole Empire, was the fole condition under which it any longer could be effective, and which the phyfical impoffibility of Pruffia alone bearing the burthen, did absolutely oblige Pruffia to infift upon. Was it acceded to, fo as the future afforded the confelatory profpect of His Majefy acting with that known alacrity-that well-proved fidelity, in the defence of the Empire and the protection of its Conftitution to the utmost of his power? But every Impartial Observer might have eafily anticipated the confequences of the refufal of the required fublistence, and the return of the Pruffian troops into His Majefty's own States. Then might the overpowerful and delirious Enemy ravage, uncontrouled, throughout the Empire, and, with plundering and murderous hands, unbridled and unlimited, bear down the Germans, their Hufbandry, all Law, Order, and Property, fubvert with anarchic abominations the Conftitutions of more Imperial States, anni-hilate Princes and Nobles, crafe the Temples of Religion, and drive from the hearts of Germans their natural love of virtue and order, by the aids of the feductive alluvements of licentiou'nefs, and the precepts of an unfeeling immorality.

All thefe and fimilar observations, fo fimple and fo obvious as they were, did neverthelefs not fucceed in bringing the arrangement for the fubfitence of the army to a juft conclution. This propoidl was, befides this, fufficiently connected with another arrangement, which His Majefty had defigned to offer the Confederate Powers, but which it did not feem good to his Imperial Majefty to comply with, and which other States did alfo not approve.

Moreover, this propofal gave rife to an exception, which, after fo many and meritorious actions, fuch upparalleled factifices which His Majefty had already made, he, in truth, had no reafon to expect, and on which His Majefty, not without much forrow, finds it his duty to make fome remarks.

The fummoning of the Six Circles, by the Elector of Mentz, has been reprefented as irregular, though in fact it is firicily Conftitutional. Measures there were propofed precifely contradictory to the negotiations for the fubfiftence, and the universal arming of the Peafants was refolved on ; though it is plain that fuch a measure is as inefficient as dangerous, and completely adverfe to the object propofed ;-inefficient against an Enemy, who preffes forward in a mafs with an infanity of Fury, approved Tactics, and a numerous Artillery; dangerous, becaufe, when the Peafant is armed, and brought away from his ordinary mode of life, the Enemy may eafily become his moft dangerous feducer; and, finally, adverie to the object proposed, because fuch an armament is wholly incompatible with the operations and fubfiftence of difciplined armies. These reasons, which flowed from the most fincere conviction of His Majefty, have been repreferted in the most edious colours; and the most false and scandalous motives have been attributed to him for his diffeat to this measure ;- and, in order to prevent the arrangement of the subfiftence, projects of extending his Dominiors, of fecularizing Ecclefiaffical Territories, and of oppreffing the Zmpire, have been rumoured to have been by him in contemplation ; and of which His Majefty's known Patriotifm and acknowledged Virtues will form the best contradiction.

After what is paft, every hope of the Subfiftence being acceded to being now vanified, HIS MAJESTY DOES NOW RENCUNCE THE SAME, AND ALSO EVERY RE-SOLUTION OF THE EMPIRE, AND

AND OF THE CIRCLES RELA-TIVE THERE FO. -HIS MATES-TY HAS THEREFORE TAKEN THE RESOLUTION NO LON-GER TO GRANT HIS PROTEC-TION TO THE GERMAN EM-PIRE, BUT TO ORDER HIS ARMY (EXCEPTING TWENTY THOUSAND AUXILIARIES, AC-TO DIFFERENT CORDING INSTANTLY TO TREATIES) RETURN TO HIS OWN DOMI-NIONS.

At the fame time that his Majefly finds himfelf compelled to withdraw a portion of his Troops from the defence of those States for which they have already combated with fo much glory, he expresses the most carnest wifhes that those confequences he has above alluded to may not take place, but that the exertions of His Imperial Majefty and of the Empire may eventually infure to both a full indemnity and a general and honourable Peace. To His Majefty remains the just confolation and permanent glory of having, on his part, made fuch facrifices to the defence and fafety of the Empire, in the prefent awful crifis, as certainly few States in Europe or Members of the Germanic Body could, without much hefitation, have refolved upon.

BERLIN, March 13, 1794.

PROCLAMATION OF THADDEE KOS-CIUSKO, Commander in Chief of the Armies of the Nation, to the CITI-ZENS of POLAND.

DEAR FELLOW CITIZENS,

HAVING been often called to affift in the falvation of our common country, behold I obey the call—but I cannot be ufeful to you, or break the chains of flavery, if you do not give me fpeedy fuccour!—Support me with your whole force, and fly to the flandard of your country. In this common caufe the fame zeal ought to animate us all.

Make voluntary facifices of your wealth, which hitherto, infreed of being at your own difpofal, was at the will of a Defpot I—Furnifh men capable of bearing arms—Do not refufe the neceffary provisions of bread, bifcuit, &c.— Send horfes, fhirts, boots, cloth and canvafs for tents. The generous facifices made to liberty and your country, will receive their recompence in the gratitude of the nation.

The laft moment is arrived, in which defpair, in the midit of fhame and reproach, puts arms in your hands. Our hope is in the contempt of death, which can alone enable us to ameliorate our fate, and that of our pofferity. Far be from us that terror which the enemies, confpired against us, endeavour to infuse into our minds.

The first step to throw off the yoke is to dare to believe ourselves free—and the first step to victory is a confidence in our strength 1

Citizens, the Palatinate of Cracow affords you a fignal example of patriotifm. It offers the flower of its youth, having already granted pecuniary and other affiftance-their example is worthy of imitation-do not hefitate to place credit in your country, which will reward you well-the Ordinances iffued by the Generals of the Palatinate, and the Commanders of the Troops, to furnish the necessary provisions, will be placed to the account of imposis, and will be payed for in the fequel. It is unneceffary to encourage you before-hand, becaule that would appear to doubt your civifm; the continued opprettion practifed by the Ruffian foldiers, ought fufficiently to convince you, that it is better to make voluntary facrifices to your country, than to make facrifices by force to an enemy. Whoever in these circumftances dares be infensible to the urgent necessities of his country, must draw upon himfelf eternal infamy.

Dear fellow-citizens, I expect every thing from your zeal—your hearts will join that facred union which is neither the work of foreign intrigue, nor of a define of domination, but is folely the effect of a love for hierry.

Who does not declare for us is againft as. He who refufes to allociate with thole who have form to thed their laft drop of blood for their country, is either an enemy or one who is neuter, and in fuch a cafe neutrality is a crime againft civifin. I have form to the nation that the powers entrufted to me fhail not be applied to the opprefilon of the people. At the fame time I declare, that whoever acts againft our confederacy, fhall fuffer the punifhment eftablished in the National Act, of a traitor and enemy to his country.

We have already finned by connivance, which has ruined Poland. Scarce has an offence against the people ever been punished. Let us now adopt a different mode of conduct—and let us recompense virtue and civism by pursuing and punishing traitors.

THEATRICAL JOURNAL.

TULY 2.

THIS evening was devoted at Drury-Lane to the benefit of the Widows and Children of the brave men who fell in defence of their country on the first of June. On this occasion Mrs. JORDAN appeared for the only time this feasion in the character of PECCY in The Country Girl, and was received with great applause.

After this THE GLORIOUS FIRST OF JUNE, a Dramatic Entertainment by Mr. Cobb, was acted the first time. The characters as follow:

| Cottager's youngeft] | 30' 30 |
| Daughter | Mils Menage. |

This piece is a fort of continuation of " No Song No Supper," and the ftory is thortly thus. William promifes to take care of the family of the gallant but unfortunate Henry, who had fallen in an engagement at fea. The Robin of No Song No Supper, a fhipmate of William's, upbraids him with skulking from his duty. R used by these remonstrances, William refolves to go on board a ship in Lord Howe's fleet. Robin, who is also going in the fame expedition, leaves his purfe with the unfortunate family, and commiffions Sulan, the fweetheart of William, to deliver a keepfake to his Margaretta; fhe, jealous of Robin, follows him to the cottage. From this incident arife fome fitnations which tend to ftrengthen the interest of the plot. The pathetic fcenes of the piece are relieved by the introduction of Lawyer Endlefs and Commodore Broadfide, who, on the return of Robin and William from the glorious engagement of the ift of June, gives a splendid fete in honour of the victory, which concludes the entertainment.

This piece is entitled to an exemption from criticifm, being haftily put together for the occafion : in the courfe of it the Duke of Leeds and Lord Mulgrave each contributed a fong. The fcenery was very beautiful; the fea-fight in particular was one of the most beautiful ever exhibited on the stage.

The following prologue, written by Jofeph Richardson, Efq. was spoken by Mr. Kemble.

PROLOGUE.

OF all the virtues which enamour'd Fame Connects for ever with a Briton's name,

None founds more fweetly from her trump than thee,

Thou first, best excellence, Humanity .--

Say, shall a light, which, from its beaming sphere,

Difpels the mift of fad Misfortune's tear,

Pierces the worft abodes where miferies haunt,

And cheers the languid eye of drooping want;

Shall it to-night with feebler luftre fhine,

When Juffice joins her rites at Pity's fhrine ? No :--every eye, in generous drops bedew'd, Shall own that bounty here is gratitude.

Ye haplefs orphans, doom'd no more to fhare

The fond protection of a father's care !

Ye widow'd mourners, doom'd no more to know

The fhelt'ring kindnefs which the brave beflow 1

Your facred griefs you do not bear alone,

- For in each British heart your forrows are their own.
 - Ye gallant fpirits, who to Heaven are fled,

Now rank'd, now honour'd with the glorious dead,

If of your former being aught furvive,"

And Memory holds her dear prerogative,

How will your heighten'd natures joy to fee

Old England fafe-Old England fafe and free !

- Sav'd by that valour, which, difmifs'd from earth,
- Claims from above the meed of patriot worth :
- Thefe the grac'd ornaments that deck your bier,

The brave man's figh, and gentle beauty's tear.

Glory itfelf at fuch a fhrine may bow,

And what is Glory but a name for Howe ?

Touch'd by her hand, the victor's wreaths affume

A fresher verdure, and a richer bloom.

As when the fun impetuous pours his ray, And dazzles nature with redundant day,

If

If on fome lonely fpot his beams he throws, Where, drefs'd in fweets, retires the bafhful rofe,

We feel his fosten'd beauty in the flower,

And love his mildnefs, while we own his power.-

Divided eulogy this night imparts

To British fpirit, and to British hearts :

- Those who affert their tovereign country's cause,
- Those who crown valour with its best applause;

Alike in cherifh'd memory fhall live,

They who have won the laurel-you who give.

The following Lines were written by Mr, PrE, the Poet Laureat, and fent to Drury Lane Theatre with the intention of having them fpoken on the occasion of the late Glorious Victory obtained by the British Fleet.

WHILE Britain raifes, with triumphant hand,

The Naval Trophy to her warlike band;

Who from Old Ocean's wave her rivals fweep, Or whelm their hoftile Squadrons in the deep-

MRS. FITZHENRY'S FAREWELL EPILOGUE,

SPOKEN AFTER THE CHARACTER OF HERMIONE.

WRITTEN BY DEAN JEPHSON.

'TIS done-and now my mimic life is naft,

That feene of rage and horror was my laft. Ideal forrows, tears that flow from art, Paffions that paint the face but puts the heart, Muft yield at length to undiffembled woe, For I have that within that paffeth thow.

When first I dar'd my feeble voice to raife,

An humble, trembling candidate for praife, You judg'd my failings by a partial law, Your goodnefs pardon'd what your judgment faw,

Succeeding years fucceeding favours knew, And if the laurel forung, it forung from you.

Thefe mimic regions for a while refign'd, Yet full I caft a ling'ring look behind ; And when this ever memorable Age Reftor'd the luftre of th' Hibernian Stage, And fent you to fupport its falling caufe, A long-wifh'd object of deferv'd applaufe,

The well-known found ftruck on my raptur'd ear,

And touch'd a ftring that ftill must vibrate here;

I thought the fplendor of bis* rifing fame. Might gild the rays of my departing name.

But time I fear'd thofe talents had remov'd,

Those humble talents which you once approv'd;

· J. P. Kemble, Elq.

But

But when I try'd again your hearts to move, And fann'd the expiring embers of your love.

Again I found the holpitable blaze Reviv'd, to cheer the ev'ning of my days.

O this Tribunal fiill prefiding fit, Ye generous Patrous of dramatic wit; To your kind care my brethren I commend, Olet not modelt ment want a friend;

SONG.

Tune, " To Anacreon in Heaven."

WHEN Gallia's bafe fons, by fome dæmon infpir'd,

Had burft all the ties which fociety bind,

- With prefumption unequall'd they madly afpir'd
- To plunge in confusion the reft of mankind, Our dear native plains,

Where true liberty reigns,

They reckoned an object was well worth thejr pains;

- So refolv'd with their fleets they'd invade us; but now,
- Experience has thewn then they did not know How.

Forgetting the leffons experience had taught, When Hawke and Bolcawen their names chaftis'd.

Those infolent knaves

Swore they'd rule o'er the waves,

And that Britons from henceforth should be but their flaves,

Till old Nepture, enraged, overheard them, and now

- Was related to convince them they did not know How.
- Says Neptone, "Were I to encourage those bands,

My Tritons and Sea Gods would grow deprocratic,

This trident, perhaps, be fnatch'd out of my hands,

And the reign of Old Neptune become problematic.

Such ills to avoid,

Re a hero employ'd,

- Ey whom those proud boafters shall foon be deftroy'd :
- Nor long used I think on't, I'll fix on him now,

For his former atchievements have made me know How."

With joy funcers their envied fate I view, Whofe happinels—whofe all, depend on you. For me-but, Oh, I feel what cannot be exprefs'd—

Words are too poor--my tears must speak the reft.

The plan of this Epilogue, and many of the lines, are copied from Mrs. Pritchard's Farewell Epilogue, written by Mr. Garnek.

A fleet fuch as England ne'er equall'd before, For fkill, firength, and courage that nought could reftrain,

Impatient for conquest depart from the shore, And the union flag way'd, proudly way'd at the main.

Old Neptune with glee

Saw his heroes at fea,

And cried out with rapture, " Come, come, follow me; ---

I have oftentimes led you to glory ere now,

- And determin'd to face you that ftill I know How."
- They meet, and the battle by England is won; -
 - But ftory no conflict fo dreadful can fnew;-

Two are funk—fix are taken; the rett of them fun;

Nor ever again will the contest renew.

The v ct'ry complete,

What a glorious defeat;

None ever to Britons was yet half fo fweet--For whatever was deareft we lought for it now,

And Gallia from henceforth will ne'er forget now.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

[FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE.]

WHITEHALL, MAY 23.

A DISPATCH, of which the following is a copy, was this morning received from his Royal Highnels the Duke of York, by the Right Honourable Henry Dundas, his Majefty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

SIR, Tournay, May 19, 1794. IN my last Letter I mentioned to you his Imperial Majesty's intention of making a general attack with his whole force, in order, by a joint co-operation with the troops under the command of General Clairfayt, to compel the enemy to evacuate Flanders.

On the 16th at night the army moved forward, for this purpose, in five columns.

The two columns on the left were intended to force the paffages of the Marque, and, by a vigorous attack on the enemy's pofts along the river, to cover the operations of the three remaining columns: thefe were defined to force the enemy's pofts by Roubaix, Waterloo and Moucron, thus to favour General Clairfayt's paffage of the Lys, and then, by a junction with his corps, to have cut off the communication between Lifle and Courtray.

Unfortunately the two columns on the left forced the paffage of the Marque fo late, and were fo much fatigued by the length of their march, that they were not able to accomplifh the remainder of the propofed plan, while the column on the right, under General Bufche, finding the enemy at Moucron in much greater numbers than had been expected, was under the neceffity of relinquifhing its attack, and of retreating to its former pofition at Warcoing.

Lieutenant-General Otto proceeded with his column through Leers to Waterloo, from whence, after fome refifiance, he drove the enemy, and pufhed on to Turcoing.

My column confilted of feven battalions of Britifh, five of Auftrians, and two of Heffians, with fix fquadrons of Light Dragoons, and four of Huffars. We moved forward from Templeuve to Lannoy, which we forced the enemy Yot. XXVI. to evacuate, after a fhort cannonade, in which I had the misfortune to lofe Major Wright, of the Royal Artillery, a brave and deferving officer.

Having left the two Heffian battalions at Lannoy, I proceeded to Roubaix, where we found the enemy in great ftrength both of men and cannon. The refiftance was proportionably fironger, but equally unavailing, as the enemy foon found themfelves compelled to retire, which they did towards Moucron.

Having at this time no intelligence of the two columns on my right and left, notwithstanding I had made every effort to obtain it, I did not think it prudent to advance any further, but was refolved to have left my advanced guard, under the command of Lieutenant-General Abercromby, at Roubaix, and with the remainder of my corps to have taken a polition on the heights behind Lannoy. The orders for this purpofe were given, but having acquainted his Imperial Majesty, who had advanced to Lannoy, with my intention, the neceffiny of cooperating with General Clairfayt induced his Majefty to direct that 1 should proceed to the attack of Monveaux.

I accordingly directed the attack to be made by Lieutenant-General Abercromby with the four battalions of guards. He found the enemy ftrongly intrenched, but having cannonaded it for fome time, the good countenance of the flank battalicn of guards, who advanced to ftorm it with the utmost order, supported by the first battalion, and feconded by the 7th and 15th light dragoons, under Lieutenants Colonel Churchili, compelled the eneniy to retire, with the lofs of three pieces of cannon and of a confiderable number of men, who were cut down by the light dragoons in the purfuit, which was continued as far as Bouderes.

Upon maturely confidering the nature of our fituation, i directed Lieutenant-General Abercroinby to remain at Mouveaux with the four battalions of guidds, and having polied four Autrian battalions to cover Roubaix, I detached the record K briraile brigade of British infantry, under the command of Major-General Fox, to take post on mv left, on the great road leading from Lifle to Roubaix. The cavalry was divided with these feveral corps, for the purpose of patroling, the nature of the country not admitting of their being of any other use. My advanced posts communicated with those of General Otto, on my right, who I now found had got postfellion of Turcoing.

Early the next morning the enemy attacked the post of Turcoing in great force, and I received an application from Col. Devay, who commanded there, to make a diversion in his favour, for which purpose I sent two battalions of Austrians, giving them express directions, if they should be preffed, to fall back upon me, but, by fome miltake, inftead of doing fo they joined Colonel Devay. From this circumftance an opening was left on my right, of which the enemy availed himfelf in the attack upon my corps, which took place foon after, and by fo doing obliged me to employ the only battalion I had left to fecure a point which was of the utmost consequence to us.

At this period a very confiderable column of the enemy, which we have Ence learnt amounted to 15,000 men, appeared advancing from Lifle, whilft another corps, having forced its way through General Otto's pofition by Waterloo, attacked us on the rear. The few troops that remained with me foon gave way before fuch fuperior numbers, nor was it in my power, with every effort I could use, allisted by those of the officers who were about me, to rally them. At that moment the advanced parties of the column from Lifle thewed themfelves also upon the road between Roubaix and Mouveaux, and I found it impoffible to fucceed in the attempt which I made to join the brigade of Guards.

Thus circumftanced, I turned my attention to join General Fox's brigade, but upon proceeding to Roubaix for that purpole, I found it in pofferfion of the enemy.

Thus completely cut off from every part of my corps, nothing remained for me to do, but to force my way to that of General Otto, and to concert meafures with him to free my own troops.

This I effected, accompanied by a few dragoons of the 16th regiment, with great difficulty; but the project of marching upon Lannoy, to which General Otto had confented, as a meafure which would greatly facilitate the retreat of my corps, being given up, upon finding that the Heffians had been obliged to abandon that place, I found mytelf under the painful neceffity of continuing with General Otto's column the remainder of the day.

Previous to this, I had fent orders to General Abercromby to retire from Mouveaux to the heights behind Roubaix, where it was my intention to have affembled my corps; and the Coldftream battalion had been pofted to cover the communication till he effected his retreat. In confequence of thefe directions, General Abercromby began his retreat, and on his arrival upon the heights at Roubaix finding himfelf furrounded upon all fides without a poffibility of affembling the corps, he determined to continue it to Lannoy. This he effected amidst the repeated attacks of the enemy, who poured upon him from all parts. General Abercromby found Lannoy alfo in poffeffion of the enemy, but he avoided the town by marching round it under a very heavy fire, and foon after reached Templeuve

Major-General Fox, after ftanding, with great refolution, a very vigorous attack from the principal part of the column which came from Lifle, began his retreat alfo, and finding himfelf cut off from the brigade of guards, and Lannoy occupied by the enemy, he directed his march upon the village of Leers, at which place he joined the column of Lieutenant-General Otto.

I inclofe you a return of our lofs upon this occafion. I regret that it is fo great; but when the nature of the action is confidered, and that it was conducted in a country the molt favourable to the views of the enemy that they could have wifhed for, while their perfect knowledge of thefe parts enabled them to take every advantage of it, it might have been expected to have been ftill more confiderable. From the badnefs of the roads, the lofs of the horfes, and the timidity of the drivers, the leaving a part of our artillery became inevitable.

I am to defire that you will affure his Majefty, that the officers and mon thewed all the firmners and refolution on this occafion that could be expected from them; and it would be an injultice done to the reft to diffinguifh any particular corps.

The abilities and coolnefs with which Lieutenant-General Abercromby and Major-General Fox conducted their different corps under thefe trying circumltances, require, however, that I fhould particularly notice them.

It is a peculiar confolation to me that the column under my command executed to the full extent their intended part of the operation; and that in the check which they afterwards fultained, the conduct of the British troops has entitled them to the warmelt expreffions of gratitude and admitation on the part of his Imperial Majefty. I am, &c.

A Difpatch, of which the following is a copy, was received this afternoon from his Royal Highuefs the Duke of York, by the Right Hon. Henry Dundas, his Majefty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

SIR, Tournay, May 23, 1794. I HAVE the fatisfaction to acquaint you, for his Majefty's information, that Yesterday morning the enemy, having made an attack upon the Combined Army under the command of his Imperial Majesty, were repulsed, . ter a long and obstinate engagement.

The attack began at five o'clock, but did not appear to be ferious till towards nine, when the whole force of the enethy (confifting, according to every account, of upwards of one hundred thousand men) was brought against the right wing, with the intention of forcing, if polfible, the paffage of the Scheldt, in order to inveft Tournay.

At first they drove in the out-posts, and obliged General Bufche's corps, which was posted at Espierre's, to fall back upon the main army; but upon fuccour being sent, General Walmoden, who, though very unwell had retaken the command of the Hanoverians, maintained his polition. The enemy, by conftantly bringing up fresh troops, were enabled to continue the attack without intermission till nine o'clock at night.

The troops of the right wing being greatly fatigued, it became necessary to fupport them from my wing; for which purpose, befides feven Auftrian battalions, I detached the fecond brigade of British, under the command of Major-General Fox. Nothing could exceed the fpirit and gallantry with which they conducted themfelves, particularly in the ftorm of the village of Pontechin, which they forced with the bayonet. The enemy began to retreat, and during the night withdrew all their pofts, and, according to every information, have falken back upon Lifle.

Seven pieces of cannon and about 500 prifoners have fallen into our hands; and the enemy's lois, in killed and wounded, is faid to amount to little fhort of twelve thoufand men, which is by no means improbable, as they were exposed to an inceffant fire of cannon and mulquetry for upwards of twelve hours.

The manner in which General Fox conducted the brigade of British infantry of the line merits my warmest approbation.

Inclosed I fend the returns of the killed and wounded of the British.

Bruffels, May 22. A Meffenger has juit brought an account that General Baron de Beaulieu, having marched into the Duchy of Bouillon on the 18th inft. defeated a confiderable body of French who covered that canton; and having killed 1200, taken between 200 and 300 prifoners, fix pieces of cannon. and feveral caiffons, he took poffetiion of the town of Bouillon, and fummoned the citadel to furrender, which was refufed.

The inhabitants having fired upon the Auftrians, the town was given up to be pillaged.

SIR, Tournay, May 26, 1794. I HAVE the pleature to inform you, that his Imperial Majefty has received, this morning, intelligence from General Count Kaunitz, that, on the 24th inflant, he attacked the French army which had paffed the Sambre, and had taken a polition with its left to Rouveroy, and its right to Fontainel'Eveque; and that he has completely defeated them, and obliged them to retreat in great confulion over the river, which he intended to pafs with his army to-day in purfuit of them.

The enemy has loft near fifty pieces of cannon, and above five thoufand men, three thoufand of whom are prifoners. The lofs of the Auftrians has been very inconfiderable, as they in a manner furprized them.

Accounts were likewife received today, that the enemy has made an inroad into the Duchy of Luxembourg, with an army of forty thoufand men, and has taken poffelfion of Arlon, which has obliged General Beaulieu (who had moved forward with the troops under his command, and had taken the town of Bouillen by florm) to retire, and to fall back on Marche, in order to cover Namur. WHITEHALL, JUNE 3.

A Difpatch of which the following is an extract, dated Tournai, Maay 30, 1794, was yefterday received from his Royal Highnefs the Duke of York by the Right Hon. Henry Dundas, his Majefty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

AN Officer is arrived this evening from Field Marshal Mollendorf, with the news that, on the 23d, he compleatly furprifed and furrounded the French camp at Kayfers Lautern, killed above 1000 men, and took 2000 prifoners, befides 18 pieces of cannon, and all the camp equipage.

Mayence, May 26. Marcchal Mollendorff, on the 24th inft. furprifed the French in their entrenchments in the neighbourhood neighbourhood of Kaiferslautern, and defeated them with great lofs. The force of the French confisted of about 12,000 men. They were posted behind the defiles of Otterbach, Hagelfbach, and the Lauter. The whole of this country was covered with redoubts and entrenchments; feveral dykes had been cut, and the bridges were every where deftroyed ; while three ftrong positions were prepared, to facilitate their retreat in cafe of accidents. The lofs of the French amounts to 1000 killed, more than 2000 prifoners, 18 pieces of cannon, and two howitzers. After the engagement Marechal Mollendorff established his head quarters at Winnweiller, and the Prince of Hohenloe Ingelfingen took poffeifion of Neuftadt. The advanced posts of the Pruffian army extend as far as Deux-Ponts and Carlefberg.

ADMIRALTY-OFFICE, JUNE 7.

The following is an extract of a letter from William Parker, Efq. Captain of his Majefty's fhip Audacious, to Mr. Stephens, dated in Plymouth Sound, on the third inftant.

1 HAVE the honour to acquaint you, for their Lordfhips' information, that on the 28th ult. in the morning about eight o'clock, his Majefty's fleet, under the command of the Earl Howe, then in the latitude 47 deg. 33 min. North, longitude 14 deg. 10 min. Welt, got light of that of the enemy.

The wind blew ftrong from the Southward, and the enemy's fleet directly to windward.

Every thing was done by his Majefty's fleet per fignals from the Earl Howe (preferving them in order) to get up with the enemy, who appeared to be forming in order of battle. But as I apprehend his Lordihip confidered their conduct began rather to indicate an intention of avoiding a general action, at fifty-five minutes after one o'clock, he directed a general chafe.

he directed a general chafe. It was juft becoming dark when his Majefty's flip under my command arrived up with the rear flip of the enemy's line. I immediately commenced a very clofe action, which continued near two hours without intermifion; Bever exceeding the diffance of half a cable's length, but generally clofer, and feveral times in the utmoft difficulty to prevent falling on board, which, as his laft effort to appearance, at about ten c'clock he attempted to effect. At this time his mizen-maît was gone by the board, his lower yards and main copfail yard fhot away; his fore top fail being full (though flying out from the top-fail yard, the fleets being flot away) he fell athwart our bows, but we feparated without being entangled any time. He then directed his courfe before the wind, and to appearance, patfed through, or clofe aftern of the hips in the rear of our line.

When the enemy feparated from athwart our bows, the company of his Majefty's fhip under my command gave three cheers, from the idea taken from the people guartered forward, that his colours were ftruck. This I cannot myfelf take upon me to fay, though I think it likely, from his fituation obliging him to pais through or near to our line : but certain it is he was completely beaten; his fire flackened towards the latter part of the action, and the last broadfide (the fhips fides almost touching each other) he fuftained without returning more than the fire of two or three guns.

His Majefty's fhip under my command, at the time we feparated, lay with her toplails aback, every brace, bowling; most of her standing and all her running rigging fhot away, in an unmanageable facte. It was fome time before I could get her to wear, to run to leeward from the French line, under cover of our own fhips, which, by what I could judge by their lights, were all pretty well up, and tolerably formed.

This being effected, 1 turned all bands to the repairing our damages, to get into readinefs, if poffible, to refume our flation at day-light.

The rear of the French line had been engaged at a diffance, by Rear-Admiral Pafley's division, and fome other thips that did not fetch fo far to windward, a confiderable time before I arrived up with them; and this very fhip was engaged by one of his Mejefty's fhips, at fome diffance to leeward, the time I did.

The night being very dark, I could form but little judgment of the fituation of our fleet with refpect to the French, in point of distance, other than not hearing any firing after our own ceafed, I concluded they were fearcely far enough to wind ward.

Scon after day-light the next morning, to our utmoft chagrin and aftenthment, we difcovered nine fail of the enemy's thips about three miles to, windward.

The

The Audacious then, with her ftanding rigging but very indifferently fcoppered, her forc-fail and top-fails unbent, main top-fail in the top in the act of bending, we put before the wind, with the main and fore top maft ftay fails only, ill fet, from the ftays being flot away; but it being hazy with rain, and fore her a time were covered from their view, and before, as I apprehend, they had formed a judgment of what we were.

The greatefl, exertion was ufed by every Officer and man in the flip to get the other fore fail and main top-fail bent. The fore top-maft being fo badly wounded, the fore top-fail was of but little moment; however the people brought the damaged fail to the yard again, though it could not be holfted; but before we got the fore-fail and main top-fail fet, the haze cleared off, and we foon difcovered ourfelves to be chaced by two of the enemy's thips.

At this period we faw the fhip we had engaged, without any maft ftanding, and paffed her at about a mile and a half diffance. The ships coming up with her very fast, our fituation became very alarming, until we got the maintop-gallant fail, main-top-maß, and top-gallant fludding fails fer, when it was judged we nearly preferved our distance. However, from the fore-mast being in a tolerable fate of feaurity, at half paft nine we were about letting a lower studding fail, when three fail, that had been difcovered to the Eastward fome time before, viz. two thips and a brig, coming pretty near us, boifted French colours.

The flate of our masts did not admit of making alteration in our courfe ; they observing our shattered state, and two frips in chace of us, ftood athwart us boldly within fire, and fhot were exchanged; the one a large frigate, the other two corvettes; but as we had fo much fail out, they fell aftern for a confiderable time; at length the frigate came within fhot of us again, and harraffed us, by a diftant cannonade upon the quarter, upwards of an hour, but without doing us any material injury, we only firing fome of our after guns upon each deck at her. She was obferved to make a figual to the ships aftern, and foon after, viz. about half paft twelve o'clock, with the two corvettes, hauled her wind, and, by its becoming hazy, the whole were foon out of light.

Having been chaced twenty-four leagues directly to the leeward, and the crippled flate of the bowfprit being fuch as was judged impossible to fland if the flip was hauled to the wind, I confidered the endeavouring to find the fleet again might put his Majefty's flip, in her defective flate, to too much rifque, and therefore judged it most advantageous for the fervice to proceed to port without loss of time to refit; which I hope may meet with their Lordfhips' approbation.

I mult beg you will be pleafed to reprefent to their Lordfhips, that the conduct of the Lieutenants of his Majefty's fhip under my command, during the action, merits all the praife I can beftow upon them; as alfo that of Lieutenant Crofton, of the 69th Regiment, whofe alertnefs and activity with his men at fmall-arms, in fupporting the feamen armed to defend the boarding, which occurred twice during the action, gave me perfect fatisfaction.

The conduct of the fhip's company, alfo that of the foldiers of the 69th Regiment, exceeded every poffible expectation; in fact the whole of the officers and men, in their different departments, behaved in the molt exemplary manner.

'Tis wonderful after fuch an action, that I have the happineds to fay, the whole number killed and wounded are but twenty-two: three were killed on the fpot, one died foon after, and the life of two more is defpaired of.

The Captain and fome of the Officers of a French corvette, which we took poffetfion of and burnt a few mornings before, by the Earl Howe's order, viewed the fhip we had engaged, while patting her in the morning, and were of opinion fhe is called La Revolutionaire, formerly the Bretagne.

In cafe their Lordships should have any enquiries to make further, I have dispatched Lieutenant Joseph Bingham, my fenior Lieutenant on board, with the charge of this letter, who is a very excellent officer, and an intelligent young man, and, I truft, capable of giving every requilite information.

WHITEHALL, JUNE 10.

A Letter, of which the following is a copy, was received on Sunday laft, from his Royal Highnefs the Duke of Yo.k, by the Right Hon. Henry Dundas, his Majefty's Principal Secretary

tary of State for the Home Department.

SIR, Tournay, June 6, 1794.

I HAVE the pleafure to inform you, that, on the 3d inftant, the Combined Army, under the command of the Hereditary Prince of Orange, attacked the enemy, who was pofied at Fontaine l'Eveque, in order to cover a part of their forces, which was befieging Charleroi, and compelled them to raife the fiege and return acrofs the Sambre, where they now remain.

Iam, &c.

FREDERICK. Right Hon. Henry Dundas, Sc.

The difpatch, of which the following is a copy, was received on Sunday laft from Admiral Lord Hood, by the Right Hon. Henry Dundas, one of his Majefty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Fistory, off Bastia, May 24. SIR, I HAVE the honour to acquaint you, that the town and citadel of Baftia, with the feveral pofts upon the Heights, furrendened to the arms of his Majefty on the 22d. On the 19th I received a meffage, that the garrifon was defirous of capitulating upon honourable terms; in confequence of which I fent the incloied note or thore. This brought on board the Victory three Officers, who informed me that Gentili, the Commandant, would affemble the Officers of the feveral corps, and of the Municipality, if a truce took place, which I agreed to, a little before fun-fet,-The next day I received a note from Gentili, which I alfo inclose, and fent Captain Young on thore, on the morning of the 21ft, who foon returned to the Victory, with two Officers and two of the Administrative Bodies, which, with Vice Admiral Goodall, Captain Young, Captain Inglefield, and my Secretary, Mr. M'Arthur, fettled the Articles of Capitulation, which were figned the following morning, when his Majefty's troops took posseftion of all the pofts above the town, the troops in each retiring to the Citadel, from whence they marched to the Mole Head, where they grounded their arms and were embarked. You will receive herewith the Articles of Capitulation, which I hope His Majefty will approve.

I am unable to give due praife to the unremitting zeal, exercion, and judicious conduct of Lieutenant Colonel Vilettes, who had the honour of commanding His Majefty's troops; never was either more confpicuous. Major Brereton and every officer and foldier under the Lieutenant-Golonel's orders, are juftly enticled to my warmeft acknowledgements; their perfevering ardour and defire to diftinguift themfelves cannot be too highly fooken of, and which it will be my pride to remember to the lateft period of my life.

Captain Nelton, of His Majefty's thip Agamemnon, who had the command and direction of the feamen, in landing the guns, mortars, and ftores; and Captain Hunt, who commanded at the Batterics, very ably allifted by Captain Buller and Captain Serocold, and the Lieutenants Gore, Hotham, Stiles, Andrews, and Brillane, have an equal claim to my gratitude, as the feamen under their management worked the guns with great judgment and alacrity. Never was an higher spirit or greater perfeverance exhibited, and I am happy to fay, that no other contention was at any time known, than who should be most forward and indefatigable for promoting His Majefty's fervice; for, although the difficulties they had to ftruggle with were many and various, the perfect harmony and good-humour that univerfally prevailed throughout the Siege overcame them all.

I cannot but express, in the ftrongeft terms, the meritorious conduct of Captain Duncan and Lieutenant Alexander Duncan of the Royal Artillery, and Lieutenant De Butts, of the Royal Engineers; but my obligation is particularly great to Captain Duncan, as more zeal, ability, and judgment was never fnewn by any efficer than were difplayed by him; and I take the liberty of mentioning him as an officer highly entitled to his Majefty's notice.

I feel myfelf very much indebted for the vigilance and attention of Captain Wolfeley, of the Imperieufe, and of Captain Hallowell, who became a volunteer wherever he could be ufeful, after being fuperfeded in the command of the Courageaux by Captain Waldegrave. The former kept a diligent watch upor. the Island of Capraia, where the enemy have magazines of provisions and ftores, and the latter did the fame by guarding the harbour's mouth of Baftia with gun-boats and launches well armed, the whole of every night, whilit the fmaller boats were very judicioufly placed in the intervals between, and rager without the thips (which were moored moored in a crefcent just out of reach of the enemy's guns) by Captain Young, of the Fortitude, the centre thip, on board of which every boat affembled at fun-fet for orders; and the cheerfulnefs with which the officers and men performed this nightly duty is very much to be admired, and afforded me the most heart-felt satisfaction and pleafure.

The very great and effectual affinance I received from Vice-Admiral Goodall, Captain Inglefield, and Capt. Knight, as well as from every Captain and Officer of his Majefty's thips under my command, have a just claim to my most particular thanks, not only in carrying into execution my orders afloat, but in attending to and supplying the wants of the little army on shore: It is to the very cordial and decided support alone I had the honour to receive from the whole, that the innumerable difficulties we had to contend with were fo happily formounted.

Major Smith and Enfign Vigoureaux, of the 25th Regiment, and Captain Radidale and Lieurenant St. George of the 11th, not embarking with their rcfoedive Regiments, having civil employment on fhore; it is to their honour I mention, that they relinquished those employments, and joined their corps, foon after the troops were landed.

It is very much my duty to inform you, that I am extremely obliged to Gen. Petrecono, Mr. Frediani, and all the officers of the Corficans, ferving with the army, for their great zeal, ardour, and attention, in forwarding the reduction of Baffia by every means in their power, who were of infinite fervice by preferving good order in the troops.

I transmit an account of the loss on the part of his Majefty, in killed and wounded, which, I am happy to fay, is inconfilerable; but the enemy fuffered much, their helpitals being full.

At the commencement of the fiege, the number of the enemy bearing arms W 28 3050.

By the first, ship that fails for England, I thall have the honour of fending, to be laid at his Majefty's feet, the feveral fland of colours taken at Baftia.

Capt. Hunt. who was on shore in the command of the barteries from the hour the troops landed to the furrender of the town, will be the bearer of this difpatch, and can give any further information you may with to know refpotting the fiege.

I have the honour, &c. HOOD.

Right Hon. Henry Dundas. His Britannic Maiely's Thip Victory, off Badia, May 19, 1794.

In confideration of the very gallant defence the garrifon of Baftia has made, and from the principles of humanity which ever govern British officers, I am disposed to give you terms; and if you will fend on board two or three officers, properly authorized to treat, I truft a capitulation will be foon fettled, as honourable to the inhabitants as can in any reafon be expected.

HOOD.

On the 29th of last month, being in lat. 46 deg. 38 min. North, long. 9 deg. 40 min. FROM OTHER PAPERS.

PARIS, June 13.

GREAT divisions have arisen in the Convention this week, on the fubject of VOL. XXVI.

giving a new form and new powers to When the the Revolutionary Tribunal. report of this measure was made to the Convention on the 11th inftant, by Couthon, in the name of the Committee of Public Safety, of which he is one of the most active Members, Bourdon, Reprefentative for the Department de L'Oile, and La Cointre, Reprefentative for Verfailles, who have latein conceived great jealoufy of the ambitious projects of Robefpierre and his party, demanded an adjournment of the bufinefs. They had fufficient pepetration to fee, that even the Members of the Convention were exposed to accusations before the Tribunalwhere little mercy was likely to be fhewn to those who were the objects of Robespierre's refentment. These obstructions, however, were warmly opposed by Robefpierre. " I obferve (lays he) that the enemies of the public good are particularly active to deprive us of the fruits of our labours We confent to die, but we wish that the country and the Convention may he faved."

By this apparent devotion to the interefts of the Republic, Robefpierre maintains his power.

As foon as the Convention met the next day, Couthon role and faid-" It has been pretended, that the Committee of Public Safety were aiming to attack the National Representation, and to arrogate the right of fending its Members before the Revolutionary Tribunal. An attempt has been suite to accule us of motives of ambition. Some have dared to calumniate the Committee, and the far greater part of the Members who compose this Convention ; becaule they know that they are actuated by principles of the pureft patriotifm, and are anxious for the happinefs of the people. One Member of this description is Bourdon de l'Oife. I am not afraid to name him. He shewed his bad intentions yesterday in his disposition to circumfcribe the power of the Committee of Public Safety. He feems to coincide in opinion with Pitt, who gives out, in his fpeech in the British Parliament, that the Committee of Public Safety arrogates to itfelf the Sovereign power.

Bourdon de l'Oite upon this role, and faid. he would never filently allow fuch a fcandalous reflection to be thrown upon him, as that he had ever ipoken like Pitt. He maintained, that he and the Mountain were as good Patriots as the Committee of Public Safety.

Robefp'erre now role, and pronounced a long difcourfe, in the courfe of which he observed, " that after the overthrow of Briffot, other confpiracies had been fecretly formed; by means of which, fulpicion had been

" Name them 1" cries Bourdon.

Robefpierre. "1 will not mention the name of any perfon, for the intriguers difcover themfelves.—[Great applaufe was here manifefted by the galleries, which Robefpierre takes care thail be always filled with his friends.]—One fact will tend to prove, that there are people who with to divide us, and bereave us of the people's confidence: they endeavoured yefterday to flander us, after paffing of the Decree. They accofted two meffengers belonging to the Committee, with "What de you dobere? What de you mean? You are two of 20,000 fpies belonging to the Committee of Public Safety?" cried they.

" Gitizens !" replied the meffengers, " we are good Citizens, and will not to act as fpies on any one." This fact is exactly as I ftate it; behold a new fyftem of overturning liberty, by attacking me and my friends; we confent to die, but during our lives we will not permit the Republic to fall before a few intriguers. I shall flate another circumftance; the following expressions were heard in the hall : " The Committee of Public Safety wishes to guillatine us, but we will bring others to the guillatine." Citizens, thefe ideas are the fame with thefe of Lacroix-of that confpirator, whole remorfe and terror induced him to exclaim inftantly, " they will to guillotine us." In thort, all this proves the existence of intriguers who wish to divide us. Do not permit yourselves to be governed by intrigue and cabal; come to our affiftance, and take not away your confidence from those who have deferved it."

We cannot help treating our readers with the following account of the victory of the French fleet over the English, according to the Barrerean fystem:

On the 16th, the Municipality of Chapelle Franciade prefented an ear of corn at the bar of the Convention, the produce of the prefent harvest.

Barrere then fpoke as follows :---" The valuable prefent that has just been offered you, feems to be the forerunner of the happy news I am about to communicate. The convoy of one bandred and fixteen veffels coming from America, has entered our ports, and brings us fuficenance of all kinds. Our news on the Alps, and towards the North, is equally good. Our troops have retaken poffeffion of the Palatinate. Pirmafens is our own again; and the army of the Rhine is every where victorious.

⁴⁴ But an object fill more important is, the provisioning the Republic. Here, then, is an end of that compact of flarvation between England and Spain, which was to defolate France with famine.

"The folicitude of the Committee was great.—The English had united all their forces on the ocean to capture this rich convoy. The fafety of the country depended on its arrival. What have your Committee done ?

"It has been fecret in its measures. It has united all its maritime ftrength. Jean Bon St. Andre was on board the Montagne ; and as our fleet was inferior to the Englifth in the number of FOURTEEN SHIPS OF THE LINE, [b.m / bem /] the Committee ordered the French fleet to flation itfelf between the enemy and the convoy; and not to fight unlefs it was to fave this valuable fleet.

"The courage of Republicans, and their hatred to the Englith, triumphed over every obficale. A battle became inevitable, and it has been one of the moft glorious and bloody that ever occurred in the annals of naval hiftory.

"Our fleet, though fourteen frips inferior in number, and to leeward of the Englith, made them feel our vengennee, and obliged them to abandon to us the feene of action, SEVEN of our veffels were difmatfed; TEN belonging to the Englith fuffered the fame fate, and there is reason to prefume, that one of their three deckers went to the bottom. Our feven difmatted veffels are not yet arrived in port, and there is reason to apprehend they are loft.

" Let PITT then boah of his victory to his nation of thopkeepers (nation bousiquiere).

"When the details of this vistory reach us, we will recommend the reward due to our brave failors. Our applaufes fhall reach from one end of the Republic to the other.

"Now that the provisioning of the Republic is fecured, we will unite our forces, attack the vile knaves, and England fhall be the fpot to which our Republican cannons fhall be pointed."

When this report was concluded, Barrere read the letter from Jean Bon St. Andre and Prieur de la Marne, announcing these bappy tidings.

"The English (fays he) directed their principal attack towards the Montagne: they fired 130 shot at her. She was attacked by fr As thips at one time. Her equipage is covered with glory; near 300 of her men were killed or wounded. Jean Bon St. Andre was wounded by a block falling upon his arm. The brave Bazil, Captain of the Montagne, was killed.

⁶⁴ Had it not been for the cowardice of fome, we /hould have taken the ten difmalled English weffels. We hope our feven veffels will arrive. In the mean time we have or dered thefe cowards to Paristo be tried.

"At length our object is fulfilled! The American convoy has anchored at St. Mathicu, and is coming to Breft. Our fleet is preparing to go to fea."

The loudeft applaufes were heard during the reading of thefe feveral communications.

The Reprefentatives of the French people at the Northern Army, Richard and Choudieu, have published a Proclamation in all the places of Flanders of which they have taken poffeffion, in which they flate it to be neceffiry, for the fafety of the " conquered countries," as they flyle them, to put them under the regulation contained in the 12 articles of the above proclamation ; the fubflance of which is, that the inhabitants of the " conquered countries," being under the fpecial protection of the French Republic, are forbid to hold any intercourfe with the coalefced powers, on pain of being delivered over to the Revolutionary Tribunal. All military Commanders are ordered to prevent any excelles being committed against the " conquered countries." All magistrates and others, convicted of caufing diffurbances against the Republic in any shape whatever, shall be delivered over to the Revolutionary Tribunal. The Magistrates of the " conguered countries" are ordered ftrictly to obey the requisitions made for the Republic. The police of the " conquered countries" to be exercifed by the military commanders, till otherwife ordered, and all affemblies of the people are firifly forbid, and the military force ordered to be employed to disperfe fuch meetings. The inhabitants of the " conquered countries" to give up their arms to the military commanders, in twentyfour hours after the publication of the prefeut, and all those who do not to be putithed with death. Affignats to be received in all public and commercial transactions, and all those convicted of counterfeiting, or circulating counterfeits, to be punished according to law. To prevent the rife of the price of provisions, which might be otherwife occasioned by the introduction of affignats, the maximum fixed upon in the city of Lille is to be followed in all the " conquered countries" of West Flanders. All taxes, of whatever kind, to continue to be paid to the profit of the Republic. The foldiers of the Republic are ordered to obferve the firstfeff difcipline in the " conquered countries," and all , onvicted of being concerned in or favouring any foreign plot, to be brought before the Revolutionary Tribunal.

The moft interefting intelligence in the late Paris Papers relates to the Deputies of the Briffotine Faction, Guadet, Salle, and Barbaroox, all of whom have been difcovered. The two former have been tried, found guilty, and executed. Barbaroux flot himfelf. Offelin, another D puty, has alfo been executed at Paris. Dil gent fearch is making after Rezot and Petion, who are fuppofel to be concealed in the environs of St. Emilion.

The French National Convention have decreed, that corn and forage of every defeription fhall be confidered in a flate of requifition, to fupply the exigencies of the armies, and of the Republic. Every perfon to give an accurate flatement of the produce of his ground, on the 7th of August and 1nh of October, and whoever is found to give in a falle account, to have his property confifcated.

In a farm called Les Loges, near Sens, in the Department of l'Yonne, three brothers and their fifter, with a male and female fervant, refused to fuffer an account to be taken of the corn on their farm. Four gendarmes were fent to force the doors : three were killed, and the fourth wounded. Six hundred men were then fent from Sens, The inhabitants of the farm, who were well provided with guns and ammunition, refifted for a long time, killed fix of the National Guards, and wounded 25, fathers of families .- The farm was then fet on fire ; two of the brothers were killed ; the third threw himfelf into the fire ; the fifter and the two fervants were taken.

The Revolutionary Tribunal at Paris Aill continues to give full employment to the bloody blade of the guillotine. Among its late victims is Jourdan Coupe-ties of Avignon ; fucceffively Butcher, Blackfmith, Stable-boy, Drug-feller, Soldier, General, and Traitor —for the laft beinous offence, in plain Enghifh for not going far enough, he has fallen.

Paris, June 24. Within these last four days not less than 200 performs have been condemned to death, many of whom are $E_{X=}$ Nobles.

A new delivery of Affignats has been decreed by the Convention, to the amount of 1300 millions, Naples, June 17. On the r_3 th ult. at ten o'clock at night, all Naples was fenfible of the thock c_s' an earthquake, with an horizontal motion, which lafted about thirty feconds. On Sunday laft the 15th, about the fame hour, the earthquake was repeated, which was followed by a violent eruption of Mount Veluvius. The mountain opened in two places, towards the centre of its line. when columns of black fmoke, mixed with liquid inflamed matter, issued from each mouth ; foon after other mouths were opened, The exploand in a line towards the fea. fions from all thefe mouths, louder than thunder, mixed with tharp reports, as from the heaviest pieces of artillery, accompanied by a hollow fubterraneous rumour, I ke that of the fea in a ftorm, caufed all the houses to fhake to their very foundations. The lavas gufhing from thefe mouths, after having run four miles in a few hours, deftroyed the greateft part of the town of Torre del Greco, about a mile from Portici, and made a confiderable progrefs into the fea, where it formed a promontory about ten feet above its furface, and near a quarter of a mile broad, having heated the water to fuch a degree that a hand could not be borne in it at the diftance of 100 yards from the lava.

It cannot yet be afcertained how many lives have been loft in that city. Many families are miffing, but whether they have efcaped, or are buried under the rains of their houfes, is not known. Naples is covered with afnes, and every object is obfoured as in a thick fog; but Vefuvins, though not vifible, continues very turbulent, and more mifchief may be expected, although the lavas are all ftopped at this moment. The head of St. Januarius was carried in proceffion vefterday, and oppofed to the mountain, by the Cardinal Archbifthop of Naples, attended by many thoulands of the inhabitants of this city.—L. Gaz.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

ROYAL VISIT TO THE FLEET.

XTE have not room to enter into the particulars of this vifit. His Majefty arrived at Portfmouth on Thursday morning (June 26.) where he was received by the Governor and Lord Howe, and conducted to the Dock-yard, from whence he proceeded to Spithead with the Royal family. Lord Howe's flag was fhifted to a frigate, and the Royal flandard boifted on board the Queen Charlotte, on board which his Majefty and the Royal family remained The Lords of the Admitill fix o'clock. ralty hoifted their flag on board the Queen, Admiral Gardner's flag being removed on the occafion. The whole garrifon was under arms, the concourfe of people was immenfe, and fentiments of loyalty and attachment burft forth at every inflant.

The King with his own hand carried a valuable diamond-hilted foord from the Commillioner's house down to the boat; which he prefetted to Earl Howe, on board the Queen Charlotte, as a mark of his fatisfaction and entire approbation of his conduct.

His Majoffy alfo prefented a gold chain, to which a modal is here after to be annexed, to Adminal Sir Alexander Hood and Keir Admiral Gardner; the like honour was conferred on L and Howe's firft Captain, Sir Roger Curits. The wounded Admirals, Blowyer and Pafley, who consequently could not attend, have been diffinguified with fimilar marks of his Majeffy's favour. The Royal family in the evening, on their return from Spillead, rowed up the harbour to view the fix French prizes, which are at moorings chere. On Friday the King firft gave audience to the Officers of Lord Howe, and afterwards indiferiminately to all other naval and military officers. Some marks of diffinction were conferred. On the Levee being ended, the Royal family returned to the Committioner's houfe in the Dock-yard to dinner, and in the evening proceeded up the river to view the French prizes. The town was brilliantly ifluminated in the evening, and every poffible demonftration of joy maniferted.

On Saturday the Royal family attended the launching of the Prince of Wales, a fine fecond rate, of 98 guns. Four flags were flying on board the Prince of Wales during this ceremony, the Royal flandard, the Admiralty flag, Sir Peter Patker's white flag as Port Admiral, and the Union flag.—The cheering of the multitude, in honour of the Royal vificants, wherever they appeared, made the air ring; and bands of mufic continued playing in the yard, and on board the flaps and yachts up the harbour.

Immediately on the Prince of Wales being brought up to her moorings, their Majefies, Prince Erneft, and the Princeffes, embarked in order to go on board the Aquilon frigate, Capt. Stopford, at Spithead.

As the barges approached the fhips at Spithead, two guns from the Queen Charlotte were, as on the former marine trip, the fignal for a general falute: every fhip in confequence fired twenty-one guns; and the crews cheered as the barges paffed. On their Majefti's going on board the Aquilon, and getting under fail, the like falute was fired; and the bands of the different fhips playing martial fymphonies for the greateft part of the day.—The Aquilon, after failing round the flict, flood away towards the Needles.

Owing to there being very little wind, foon after the Aquilon frigate had got to the efficient of Cowes Point, the in going about touched the ground, by which accident they were flopped an hour or two; and night coming on, their Majefties and all the Royal party took to their barges. The Aquilon, on the rifing of the tide, was got off without receiving damage.

On Monday morning their Majeflies, Prince Erneft, and the Princeffes, went on board the Niger frigate, and failed for Southampton, where they landed in the afternoon, and immediately proceeded in carriages for Windfor.

30. The Rev. William Jackfon was brought up to the Court of King's Bench, Dublin, in order for arraignment on the charge of High Treafon exhibited againft him. Being put to the bar, the indiffment was read, and was of confiderable length. It charged to the following effect: That the prifoner, knowing of the war carried on againft his Majefty and these realms by the perfons exercifing the Government of France, did, on the 3d of April laft, land in Ireland with a treafonable intent, to make himfelf acquainted with the ftate and firength of that country, in order to communicate the fame to the perfons exercifing the Government of France, now carrying on war against his Majesty and these realms. That he did after wards hold conference with feveral perfons, for the purpole of inducing them to confpire against his Majesty's Government in this kingdom, and to fend a meffenger te. France, for the purpole of treating with the perfons exercifing the Government of that country, to invade this nation by armed force. That he did write certain letters, addreffed to a perfon named Stone, and another perfon named Benjamin Beresford, for thefe pu pofes, &c. &c. The prifoner pleaded not guilty; and on his Counfel flating that he was not ready for his trial, the Attorney General confented to postpone it till the first fitting day of next Term, which will be on the 6th of November.

Edward Bouverie met on Moulfey Hurit, and took their places at the diffance of twelve paces; when, on Mr. Bouverie declining to fire, Lord Tankerville, by direction of his feconds, fired, and wounded Mr. Bouverie, but we are happy to find not fo dangeroufly as was apprehended.

He was an old member of the Common Council, and in the year 1792 was unanimoufly chosen one of the Sheriffs. In the discharge of this important office, he increafed that general respect which was before attached to his character, and his unwearied attention to its duties is fuppofed, with much proba-bility, to have laid the foundation of that fatal complaint (a pulmonary confumption) which terminated his uleful life. His tendernefs and benevolence to the prifoners confined in the different gaols of the metropolis during his Shrievalty will never be forgotten by those unhappy fufferers .- He possession possession and a clear judgment, unclouded by prejudice of every kind. No man was ever bleffed with a more liberal heart, and of the wealth which Providence had bestowed upon him he was a faithful steward. A strong fense of religion fupported him in his last moments, and enabled him to endure the last ftruggles of mortality with a refignation which can only be the effect of genuine piety.
