Our theory is, that the passages which have been ascribed to Shakspere as a partner in the work of The Two Noble Kinsmen are essentially "descriptive and didactic;" that to write these passages it was not necessary that the poet should be able to "go out of himself;" that they, for the most part, might enter into the composition of a great epic poem; that the writer of these passages was master, to a considerable extent, of Shakspere's style, especially in its conciseness and its solemnity, although he was ill fitted to grapple with its more dramatic qualities of rapidity or abruptness; that also, unlike most of the writers of his day, who sought only to please, he indulged in the same disposition as Shakspere, to yield to the prevailing reflection which the circumstances of the scene were calculated to elicit; and, lastly, that his intimate acquaintance with the Greek poets fitted him to deal more especially with those parts of the tale of "Palamon and Arcite" in which Chaucer, in common with all the middle-age poets, built a tale of chivalry upon a classical foundation. We can understand such a division of labour between Fletcher and Chapman, as that Fletcher should take the romantic parts of the story, as the knight-errantry, the love, the rivalry, the decision by bodily prowess; and that Chapman should deal with Theseus and the Amazons, the lament of the three Queens (which subject was familiar to him in "The Seven against Thebes" of the Greek drama), and the mythology which Chaucer had so elaborately sketched as the machinery of his great story.

Lord Byron somewhere says, speaking of his own play of "Sardanapalus," "I look upon Shakspere to be the worst of models, though the most extraordinary of writers." We think, if Shakspere be the worst of models, it is because he is the most extraordinary of writers. His prodigious depth of thought, his unbounded range of imagery, his intense truth of characterization, are not to be imitated. The other qualities, which might remain as a model, lie beneath the surface. Imitate, if it be possible, the structure of his verse; the thought and the imagery are wanting, and the mere versification is a lifeless mass. Dryden says, in his preface to "All for Love," "In my style I have professed to imitate the divine Shakspeare." Open the play at any part, and see if the imitation has produced a resemblance. Rowe tells us that "Jane Shore" is an imitation of Shakspere. It is a painted daub of the print-shops imitating the colouring of Titian. Otway pieced Romeo and Juliet into his "Caius Marius," where the necessity for imitation was actually forced upon him, in making a cento of Shakspere's lines and his own; and yet the last speech of the Romeo of Otway's tragedy substitutes these three lines in the place of "Thus with a kiss I die:"—

> "This world's gross air grows burthensome already,
> I am all a god; such heavenly joys transport me,
> That mortal sense grows sick, and faints with lasting."

We mention these things to show that men of very high talent have not been able to grapple with Shakspere's style in the way of imitation. A poet, and especially a contemporary poet, might have formed his own style, in some degree, upon Shakspere; not only by the constant contemplation of his peculiar excellences, but through the general character that a man of the very highest genius impresses unconsciously upon the aggregate poetry of his age. This we believe to have been the case with Chapman. He was not an imitator of Shakspere in the ordinary sense of the word; he could not imitate him in his scenes of passion, because he could not "shift at pleasure, to inform and animate other existences." But, in a limited range, he approached Shakspere, because he had the same earnestness, the same command of striking combinations of language, a rhythm in which harmony is blended with strength, a power of painting scenes by vivid description, a tendency to reflect and philosophize. All this Shakspere had, but he had a great deal more. Is that more displayed in the scenes of The Two Noble Kinsmen which have been attributed to him? or, not being present, had Chapman the power of producing these scenes out of his own resources? This is a question which we certainly cannot pretend to answer satisfactorily: all that we can do is to compare a few peculiarities in the first and last acts of The Two Noble Kinsmen with passages that offer themselves in those of Chapman's works with which we have an acquaintance.

We will begin with a quality which is remarkable enough in passages of The Two Noble Kinsmen to distinguish them from those written by Fletcher—we mean the presence of general truths and reflections, propounded always with energy, sometimes with solemnity; not dragged in as a moral at the end of a fable, but arising spontaneously out of the habit of the author's mind. Coleridge doubts the profundity of these thoughts—and we think he is right. We will first cite a few of such passages from The Two Noble Kinsmen, and then passages of a similar nature, selected somewhat hastily from three or four of Chapman's plays:—

TWO NOBLE KINSMEN.

> "We come unseasonably; but when could Grief
> Cull forth, as unpang'd Judgment can, fitt'st time
> For best solicitation?"
>
> "Oh, you heavenly charmers,
> What things you make of us! For what we lack
> We laugh, for what we have are sorry; still
> Are children in some kind."
>
> Let th' event,
> That never-erring arbitrator, tell us
> When we know all ourselves; and let us follow
> The becking of our chance!"

CHAPMAN.

> "Sin is a coward, madam, and insults
> But on our weakness, in his truest valour;
> And so our ignorance tames us, that we let
> His shadows fright us."—Bussy D'Ambois.
>
> "O the good God of Gods,
> How blind is pride! what eagles we are still
> In matters that belong to other men!
> What beetles in our own!"—All Fools.
>
> O! the strange difference 'twixt us and the stars!
> They work with inclinations strong and fatal,
> And nothing know: and we know all their working,
> And nought can do or nothing can prevent."—Byron's Tragedy.

It would be easy to multiply examples of this kind; and it would not be necessary for our purpose to select passages that are very closely parallel. We only desire to show that Chapman is a reflective poet; and that in this respect the tone of thought that may be found in the first and last acts of The Two Noble Kinsmen is not incompatible with his habits of composition.

We have already selected an invocation by Chapman, with the intent of showing that his style in this detached and complete form of poetry approaches much more closely to the invocations in The Two Noble Kinsmen than the style of Jonson. Chapman appears to us to delight in this species of oratorical verse, requiring great condensation and majesty of expression, and demanding the nicest adjustment of a calm and stately rhythm. He derived, perhaps, this love of invocation, as well as the power of introducing such passages successfully in his dramas, from his familiarity with Homer; and thus for the same reason his plays have more of the stately form of the epic dialogue than the passionate rapidity of the true drama. We will select one invocation from Chapman's translation of the Iliad, that of Agamemnon's prayer in the third book, to show the sources at least which were open to the writer of the invocations in the fifth act of The Two Noble Kinsmen, for examples of condensation of thought, majesty of diction, and felicity of epithet:—

> "O Jove, that Ida doth protect, and hast the titles won,
> Most glorious, most invincible; and thou, all-seeing sun;
> All-hearing, all re-comforting; floods, earth, and powers beneath
> That all the perjuries of men chastise even after death;
> Be witnesses, and see perform'd, the hearty vows we make."

These invocations in his Homer have the necessary condensation of the original. In his own inventions in the same kind he is naturally more diffuse; but his diffuseness is not the diffuseness of Fletcher. Take one example :—

> " Now all ye peaceful regents of the night,
> Silently-gliding exhalations,
> Languishing winds, and murmuring falls of waters,
> Sadness of heart, and ominous secureness,
> Enchantments, dead sleeps, all the friends of rest,
> That ever wrought upon the life of man,
> Extend your utmost strengths; and this charm'd hour
> Fix like the centre: make the violent wheels
> Of Time and Fortune stand; and great existence,
> The maker's treasury, now not seem to be."

The time is past when it may be necessary to prove that Chapman was a real poet. There are passages in his plays which show that he was capable not only of giving interest to forced situations and extravagant characters by his all-informing energy, but of pouring out the sweetest spirit of beauty in the most unexpected places. Take the following four lines as an example :—

> " Here's nought but whispering with us: like a calm
> Before a tempest, when the silent air
> Lays her soft ear close to the earth to hearken
> For that she fears steals on to ravish her."

Was ever personification more exquisitely beautiful? The writer of these lines, with his wondrous facility, was equal to anything that did not demand the very highest qualities for the drama; and those qualities we do not think are manifest in the first and last acts of The Two Noble Kinsmen, rich as these are in excellences within the range of such a writer as Chapman, especially when his exuberant genius was under the necessary restraint of co-operation with another writer.

The classical nature of that portion of The Two Noble Kinsmen that we think might have been assigned to Chapman might have been treated by a writer not very deeply imbued with the spirit of Greek poetry, without the use of any peculiar phrases or epithets which a poet derives from a particular course of reading, as we constantly find in Milton. We will select a very few parallel examples of such from The Two Noble Kinsmen, and from Chapman's plays and the translation of the Iliad :—

TWO NOBLE KINSMEN.

The scythe-tusk'd boar.
Blubber'd queens.
Clear-spirited cousin.
The heavenly limiter.
Shaker of o'er-rank states.
Sacred silver mistress.
Oh, you heavenly charmers.

CHAPMAN.

Thy music-footed horse.
His blubber'd cheeks.
Cold-spirited peers.
The heavenly lightener.
Thou mighty shaker of the earth.
Golden-throned queen.
The eternal dwellers.

It would be tedious as well as unnecessary to pursue these details farther. Whoever was the writer of those passages in The Two Noble Kinsmen which, on some grounds, have with great probability been attributed to Shakspere, it is clear to us that there were two hands concerned in the production of the play, as dissimilar in their styles as Chapman, as a translator of Homer, is dissimilar to Pope. There is some analogy, however remote it may appear, between the poetical characters of Fletcher and Pope, as compared with writers of greater energy and simplicity; and the differences in kind of this poetical quality may serve as an illustration of the imperfect argument which we thus conclude :—

CHAPMAN.

> " They sat delightfully,
> And spent all night in open field; fires round about them shin'd;
> As when about the silver moon, when air is free from wind,
> And stars shine clear; to whose sweet beams, high prospects, and the brows
> Of all steep hills and pinnacles thrust up themselves for shows;
> And even the lowly valleys joy to glitter in their sight,
> When the unmeasur'd firmament bursts to disclose her light,
> And all the signs in heaven are seen that glad the shepherd's heart;
> So many fires disclos'd their beams, made by the Trojan part,
> Before the face of Ilion; and her bright turrets show'd:
> A thousand courts of guard kept fires: and every guard allow'd
> Fifty stout men, by whom their horse eat oats and hard white corn,
> And all did wilfully expect the silver-throned morn."

POPE.

> " The troops exulting sat in order round,
> And beaming fires illumin'd all the ground;
> As when the moon, refulgent lamp of night,
> O'er heaven's clear azure spreads her sacred light.
> When not a breath disturbs the deep serene,
> And not a cloud o'ercasts the solemn scene,
> Around her throne the vivid planets roll,
> And stars unnumber'd gild the glowing pole;
> O'er the dark trees a yellower verdure shed,
> And tip with silver every mountain's head;
> Then shine the vales, the rocks in prospect rise,
> A flood of glory bursts from all the skies:
> The conscious swains, rejoicing in the sight,
> Eye the blue vault, and bless the useful light:
> So many flames before proud Ilion blaze,
> And lighten glimmering Xanthus with their rays:
> The long reflections of the distant fires
> Gleam on the walls, and tremble on the spires:
> A thousand piles the dusky horrors gild,
> And shed a shady lustre o'er the field.
> Full fifty guards each flaming pile attend,
> Whose umber'd arms, by fits, thick flashes send;
> Loud neigh the coursers o'er their heaps of corn;
> And ardent warriors wait the rising morn."

We have only one word to add. Chapman died in the very year that the first edition of The Two Noble Kinsmen was published, with the name of Shakspere in the title-page. If the title-page were a bookseller's invention, the name of Shakspere would be of higher price than that of Chapman.

VENUS AND ADONIS.

" Vilia miretur vulgus, mihi flavus Apollo
Pocula Castalia plena ministret aqua."—OVID.

TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

RIGHT HONOURABLE,

I KNOW not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your Lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burthen: only if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after ear[1] so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour[2] to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

EVEN as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis[3] hied him to the chase;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
  Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
  And like a bold-fac'd suitor 'gins to woo him.

"Thrice fairer than myself," thus she began,
"The field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
  Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
  Saith that the world hath ending with thy life.

"Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy meed
A thousand honey-secrets shalt thou know:
  Here come and sit, where never serpent hisses,
  And being set I'll smother thee with kisses;

"And yet not cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety,
But rather famish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety,
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
  A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
  Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport."

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls it balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
  Being so enrag'd, desire doth lend her force,
  Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
  She red and hot as coals of glowing fire,
  He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens; (O how quick is love!)
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove:
  Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust,
  And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
  And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
  "If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open."

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks:
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
  He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss;[4]
  What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires[5] with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone;

Ear—plough.

Honour. As a duke is now styled "your grace," so "your honour" formerly the usual mode of address to noblemen in general.

[3] The poem of "Hero and Leander," although Marlowe's portion of it was not published till 1598, was probably well known in the poetical circles. The following lines are in the first sestyad:—

"The men of wealthy Sestos every year,
For his sake whom their goddess held so dear,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis, kept a solemn feast."

[4] 'Miss—amiss, fault. So in Sonnet cli.:—

"Love is too young to know what conscience is:
Yet who knows not conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove."

Tires—tears, preys. The image is to be found without variation in Henry VI., Part III., Act I. Sc. I.:—

"Reveng'd may she be on that hateful duke;
Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,
Will cost my crown, and, like an empty eagle,
Tire on the flesh of me and of my son."

Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Forc'd to content,[1] but never to obey,
Panting he lies, and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace,
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and aw'd resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes;
Rain added to a river that is rank,[2]
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear[3] she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame, and anger ashy pale;
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dapper[4] peering through a wave,
Who, being look'd on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat
More thirst for drink, than she for this good turn:
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
"O, pity," 'gan she cry, "flint-hearted boy!
'Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

"I have been woo'd, as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes, in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

"Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter'd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest;
Scorning his churlish drum, and ensign red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

"Thus he that overrul'd I oversway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil'd the god of fight!

"Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,
(Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,)
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine:—
What seest thou in the ground? hold up thy head;
Look in mine eyeballs, there thy beauty lies:
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

"Art thou asham'd to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink, so shall the day seem night:
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean
Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

"The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe; yet may'st thou well be tasted;
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime
Rot and consume themselves in little time.

"Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-nurtur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic, and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
Then might'st thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

"Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are grey,[5] and bright, and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

"Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell'd hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

"Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie!
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn to night, even where I list to sport me;
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?

"Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom, and complain on theft.
Narcissus so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

"Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear;
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse
Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty breedeth beauty,
Thou wast begot,—to get it is thy duty.

"Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?

Content—acquiescence.

Rank—full. Rank is often used to express excess or violence generally; and rankness is applied to a flood in King John, Act V. Sc. IV.:—

"And like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course.

Ear. So all the early editions. Mr. Grant White has air.

[4] Dive-dapper. One of the familiar names of the dabchick is dive-dapper, or di-dapper; and this was the old poetical name. Beaumont and Fletcher, in "The Woman Hater," have a comparison of the mutability of fortune with this nimble water-bird:—"The misery of man may fitly be compared to a di-dapper, who, when she is under water past our sight, and indeed can seem no more to us, rises again, shakes but herself, and is the same she was."

[5] Grey is said to be here used as blue. We have subsequently—

"Her two blue windows faintly she upheaveth."

But the eye-lids are the "blue windows."

By law of Nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead;
  And so in spite of death thou dost survive,
  In that thy likeness still is left alive."

By this the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For, where they lay, the shadow had forsook them,
And Titan, 'tired[1] in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
  Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
  So he were like him, and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His lowering brows o'erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours when they blot the sky,
  Souring his cheeks, cries, "Fie, no more of love
  The sun doth burn my face; I must remove."

Ah me," quoth Venus, "young, and so unkind!
What bare excuses mak'st thou to begone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun;
  I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
  If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.

The sun that shines from heaven shines but warm,
And lo, I lie between that sun and thee:
The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me
  And were I not immortal, life were done,
  Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay, more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth?
Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel
What 'tis to love? how want of love tormenteth?
  O had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
  She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.[2]

"What am I, that thou shouldst contemn[3] me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute:
  Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
  And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

"Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image dull and dead,
Statue contenting but the eye alone,
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred;
  Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion,
  For men will kiss even by their own direction."

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong;
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
  And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
  And now her sobs do her intendments[4] break.

Sometimes she shakes her head, and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms infold him like a band;
She would, he will not in her arms be bound;
  And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
  She locks her lily fingers one in one.

"Fondling," she saith, "since I have hemm'd thee here,
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer;
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale
  Graze on my lips; and if those hills be dry,
  Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

"Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom-grass, and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain;
  Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
  No dog shall rouse thee, though a thousand bark."

At this Adonis smiles as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
  Foreknowing well if there he came to lie,
  Why there Love liv'd and there he could not die.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking:
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?
  Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
  To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing,
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing
  "Pity"—she cries—"some favour—some remorse[5]—"
  Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse.

But lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud,
Adonis' trampling courser doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud:
  The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
  Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder;
  The iron bit he crushes 'tween his teeth,
  Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd[6] crest now stand on end;[7]
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send:
  His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire,
  Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometimes he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty, and modest pride;
Anon he rears upright, curvets, and leaps,
As who should say, lo![8] thus my strength is tried;
  And this I do to captivate the eye
  Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

---

[1] 'Tired—attired.

Unkind. Milton applies the same epithet, in the same way, in his "Doctrine of Divorce:"—"The desire and longing to put off an unkindly solitariness by uniting another body, but not without a fit soul, to his, in the cheerful society of wedlock."

[3] Contemn is here used in the sense of throw aside—as Malone explains it, "Contemptuously refuse this favour."

[4] Intendments—intentions. So in Othello, Act IV. Sc. II.:—"I have said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing." The word continued to be used long after the time of Shakspere.

Remorse—tenderness.

Compass'd—arched.

Mane is here used as a plural noun. In a note on Othello, Act II. Sc. I. (see p. 225), we justified the adoption of a new reading—

"The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous mane"—

upon the belief that in this line we have a picture which was probably suggested by the noble passage in Job:—"Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" The passage before us shows that the image was familiar to the mind of Shakspere, of the majesty of the war-horse erecting his mane under the influence of passion.

[8] This is a faint echo of the wonderful passage in Job—"He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha!"

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering "holla,"[1] or his "Stand, I say"?
What cares he now for curb, or pricking spur?
For rich caparisons, or trapping gay?
  He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
  Nor nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
His art with nature's workmanship at strife,
As if the dead the living should exceed;
  So did this horse excel a common one,
  In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, straight legs, and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide:
  Look what a horse should have, he did not lack,
  Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he scuds far off, and there he stares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather;
To bid the wind a base[2] he now prepares,
And whe'r he run, or fly, they knew not whether;
  For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
  Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her
She answers him as if she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind;
  Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels,
  Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malecontent,
He vails[3] his tail, that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent;
He stamps, and bites the poor flies in his fume:
  His love, perceiving how he is enrag'd,
  Grew kinder, and his fury was assuag'd.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
  As they were mad unto the wood they hie them,
  Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All swoln with chasing, down Adonis sits,
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest;
  For lovers say the heart hath treble wrong,
  When it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage:
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words, love's fire doth assuage;
  But when the heart's attorney[4] once is mute,
  The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind;
  Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
  For all askaunce he holds her in his eye.

O what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue!
How white and red each other did destroy!
  But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
  It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels;
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels:
  His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print,
  As apt as new-fallen snow takes any dint.

O what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing:
  And all this dumb play had his[5] acts made plain
  With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
  This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
  Show'd like two silver doves that sit a billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began
"O fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;[6]
  For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee,
  Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee."

"Give me my hand," saith he, "why dost thou feel it?
"Give me my heart," saith she, "and thou shalt have it;
O give it me lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it;
  Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
  Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.

"For shame," he cries, "let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone:
  For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
  Is how to get my palfrey from the mare."

Thus she replies: "Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire.
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
  The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none,
  Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

"How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
  Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
  Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

"Who sees his true love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,

---

[1] Holla. Ho is the ancient interjection, giving notice to stop. The word before us is certainly the same as the French holà, and is explained in Cotgrave's French Dictionary as meaning "enough, soft, soft, no more of that."

[2] In the game of base, or prison base, one runs and challenges another to pursue. "To bid the wind a base" is therefore to challenge the wind to speed. We have the same expression in the early play of The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

"Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus."

[3] Vails—lowers.

[4] In Richard III. we have—

"Why should calamity be full of words?
Windy attorneys to their client woes."

The tongue, in the passage before us, is the attorney to the heart.

[5] His for its.

[6] Malone explains this, "thy heart wounded as mine is."
Grave—engrave.

But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
  Who is so faint that dare not be so bold
  To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

"Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee.
  O learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
  And, once made perfect, never lost again."

"I know not love," quoth he, "nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it:
'Tis much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it;
  For I have heard it is a life in death,
  That laughs, and weeps, and all but with a breath.

"Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinish'd?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
  The colt that's back'd and burthen'd being young
  Loseth his pride, and never waxeth strong.

"You hurt my hand with wringing; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarm it will not ope the gate.
  Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery;
  For where a heart is hard, they make no battery."

"What! canst thou talk," quoth she, "hast thou a tongue?
O would thou hadst not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice[1] hath done me double wrong;
I had my load before, now press'd with bearing:
  Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh sounding,
  Ear's deep-sweet music, and heart's deep-sore wounding.

Had I no eyes, but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible:
  Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
  Yet should I be in love by touching thee.

"Say that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much;
  For from the still'tory of thy face excelling
  Comes breath perfum'd, that breedeth love by smelling.

"But O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four!
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double-lock the door?
  Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
  Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast."

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,
  Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
  Gusts and foul flaws[2] to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisedly she marketh
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth,
  Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
  His meaning struck her ere his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love, and love by looks reviveth:
A smile recures the wounding of a frown,
But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth!
  The silly boy, believing she is dead,
  Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red;

And all-amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which cunning love did wittily prevent:
Fair fall the wit that can so well defend her!
  For on the grass she lies as she were slain,
  Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard;
He chafes her lips, a thousand ways he seeks.
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd;
  He kisses her; and she, by her good will,
  Will never rise so he will kiss her still.

The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
Her two blue windows[3] faintly she upheaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn, and all the world relieveth:
  And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
  So is her face illumin'd with her eye;

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brows' repine;[4]
  But hers, which through the crystal tears gave light,
  Shone like the moon in water seen by night.[5]

"O, where am I?" quoth she, "in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire?
What hour is this? or morn, or weary even?
Do I delight to die, or life desire?
  But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy;
  But now I died, and death was lively joy.

"O thou didst kill me;—kill me once again:
Thy eyes' shrewd tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught them scornful tricks, and such disdain
That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine;
  And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
  But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

"Long may they kiss each other, for this cure!
O never let their crimson liveries wear!
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection[6] from the dangerous year!

---

[1] Mermaid's voice. Mermaid and siren were formerly used as synonymous. So in The Comedy of Errors, Act III. Sc. II.:—

"O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister flood of tears;
Sing, siren, for thyself, and I will dote."

Flaws is here used in the sense of violent blasts.

[3] The windows are doubtless the eyelids, but the epithet blue is somewhat startling. We must remember that Shakspere has described violets as

"Sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes."

The propriety of this epithet is fully noticed by us in Cymbeline, Act II. Sc. II., p. 185.

[4] Repine. Used as a substantive. Chaucer employs pine in the same manner.

[5] In Shakspere's early plays we frequently meet the same image that is found in these early poems. Thus, in Love's Labour's Lost:—

"Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep."

[6] The custom of strewing houses with fragrant herbs was universal at a period when the constant recurrence of the plague habituated families to the use of what they considered preventives. It was this cause which rendered Bucklersbury at simpling time such a crowded mart.

That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

"Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing?
To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing;
Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips,
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

A thousand kisses buys my heart from me;
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one.
What is ten hundred touches unto thee?
Are they not quickly told, and quickly gone?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,[1]
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?"

"Fair queen," quoth he, "if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness[2] with my unripe years;
Before I know myself seek not to know me;
No fisher but the ungrown fry forbears:
The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or being early pluck'd is sour to taste.

"Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west:
The owl, night's herald, shrieks,—'tis very late;
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest;
And coal-black clouds that shadow heaven's light
Do summon us to part, and bid good night.

"Now let me say 'good night,' and so say you;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss."
"Good night," quoth she; and, ere he says "adieu,
The honey fee of parting tender'd is:
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace;
Incorporate then they seem; face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Whereon they surfeit, yet complain on drouth:
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth,
(Their lips together glued,) fall to the earth.

Now quick Desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth;
Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Paying what ransom the insulter willeth;
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high,
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blindfold fury she begins to forage;
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush, and honour's wrack.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tir'd with chasing,
Or like the froward infant still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What wax so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?[3]
Things out of hope are compass'd oft with venturing,
Chiefly in love, whose leave[4] exceeds commission
Affection faints not like a pale-fac'd coward,
But then wooes best when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd:
Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through, and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool[5] prays her that he may depart
She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him;
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart,
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incaged in his breast.

"Sweet boy," she says, "this night I'll waste in sorrow,
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
Tell me, love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?"
He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends
To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

"The boar!" quoth she, whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
Usurps her cheeks; she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws:
She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her, although he mount her
That worse than Tantalus' is her annoy,
To clip Elysium, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,[6]
Do surfeit by the eye, and pine the maw,
Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless[7] berries saw:
The warm effects which she in him finds missing,
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing.

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be:
She hath assay'd as much as may be prov'd;
Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee;
She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
"Fie, fie," he says, "you crush me; let me go;
You have no reason to withhold me so."

"Thou hadst been gone," quoth she, "sweet boy, ere this,
But that thou told'st me thou wouldst hunt the boar.
O be advis'd! thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
Whose tushes never sheath'd he whetteth still,
Like to a mortal[8] butcher, bent to kill.

"On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes;

---

[1] Here is one of the many traces of Shakspere's legal studies—an allusion to the penalty for non-payment which formed the condition of a money-bond.

[2] Strangeness—coyness or bashfulness.

[3] The soft wax upon which the seal attached to a legal instrument was impressed required to be tempered before the impression was made upon it. So Falstaff says of Justice Shallow—"I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him."

[4] Leave—license.

[5] No reader of Shakspere can forget the pathos with which he has employed this expression in another place—"And my poor fool is hang'd!"

[6] The allusion is to the picture of Zeuxis, mentioned by Pliny. We may observe that there was no English translation of Pliny so early as the date of this poem.

[7] Helpless—that afford no help.

[8] Mortal—deadly.

His eyes like glowworms shine when he doth fret:
His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes;
  Being mov'd, he strikes whate'er is in his way,
  And whom he strikes his cruel tushes slay.

"His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd;
Being ireful on the lion he will venture:
  The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
  As fearful of him, part; through whom he rushes.

"Alas, he naught esteems that face of thine,
To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eyne,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
  But having thee at vantage (wondrous dread!)
  Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

"O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still!
Beauty hath naught to do with such foul fiends:
Come not within his danger[1] by thy will:
They that thrive well take counsel of their friends.
  When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
  I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

"Didst thou not mark my face? Was it not white?
Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? And fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
  My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest,
  But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

"For where Love reigns, disturbing Jealousy
Doth call himself Affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, 'kill, kill;'
  Distempering gentle Love in his desire,
  As air and water do abate the fire.

"This sour informer, this bate-breeding[2] spy,
This canker that eats up love's tender spring,[3]
This carry-tale, dissentious jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring,
  Knocks at my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
  That if I love thee I thy death should fear:

"And, more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry-chafing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore;
  Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed
  Doth make them droop with grief, and hang the head.

"What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:
  I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
  If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

"But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul'd by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox, which lives by subtilty,
Or at the roe, which no encounter dare:
  Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
  And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy hounds.

"And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot[4] his troubles,
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks[5] and crosses, with a thousand doubles:
  The many musits[6] through the which he goes
  Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

"Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,
And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,[7]
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell;
  And sometime sorteth[8] with a herd of deer;
  Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear:

"For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-snuffing hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
  Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,
  As if another chase were in the skies.

"By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still;
Anon their loud alarums he doth hear;
  And now his grief may be compared well
  To one sore sick that hears the passing bell.

"Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay:
  For misery is trodden on by many,
  And being low never reliev'd by any.

"Lie quietly, and hear a little more;
Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise:
To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,[9]
  Applying this to that, and so to so;
  For love can comment upon every woe.

"Where did I leave?"—"No matter where," quoth he;
"Leave me, and then the story aptly ends:
The night is spent."—"Why, what of that?" quoth she.
"I am," quoth he, "expected of my friends;
  And now 'tis dark, and going I shall fall."
  "In night," quoth she, "desire sees best of all.

"But if thou fall, O then imagine this,
The earth in love with thee thy footing trips,
And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
Rich preys make true men thieves; so do thy lips
  Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
  Lest she should steal a kiss, and die forsworn.

"Now of this dark night I perceive the reason
Cyntnia for shame obscures her silver shine,
Till forging nature be condemn'd of treason,
For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine,
  Wherein she fram'd thee in high heaven's despite,
  To shame the sun by day, and her by night.

---

[1] Danger—power of doing harm. So in The Merchant of Venice, Act IV. Sc. I.:—

"You stand within his danger."

See note on that passage, vol. i. p. 215.

[2] Bate—signifies strife. Mrs. Quickly says that John Rugby is no breed-bate.

[3] Spring—bud or young shoot.

[4] Overshoot. The original editions read overshut. This reading is retained by Malone.

Cranks—winds. So in Henry IV., Part I.:—

"See how this river comes me cranking in."

[6] Musits. The term is explained in Markham's "Gentlemen's Academy" (1595):—"We term the place where she [the hare] sitteth her form; the place through which she goes to relief her musit."

[7] Keep—dwell.

[8] Sorteth—consorteth.

[9] Moralize—comment.

"And therefore hath she brib'd the Destinies,
To cross the curious workmanship of nature,
To mingle beauty with infirmities,
And pure perfection with impure defeature;
  Making it subject to the tyranny
  Of mad mischances and much misery;

"As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
Life-poisoning pestilence, and frenzies wood,[1]
The marrow-eating sickness, whose attaint
Disorder breeds by heating of the blood:
  Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
  Swear Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

"And not the least of all these maladies,
But in one minute's fight brings beauty under:
Both favour, savour, hue, and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
  Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done,[2]
  As mountain-snow melts with the mid-day sun.

"Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals, and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
  Be prodigal: the lamp that burns by night
  Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

"What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity?
  If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
  Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

"So in thyself thyself art made away;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butcher-sire, that reaves his son of life.
  Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
  But gold that's put to use more gold begets."

"Nay, then," quoth Adon, "you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme;
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream;
  For by this black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse,
  Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.

"If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown;
  For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
  And will not let a false sound enter there;

"Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast;
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be barr'd of rest.
  No, lady, no; my heart longs not to groan,
  But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

"What have you urg'd that I cannot reprove?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger;
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embracements unto every stranger.
  You do it for increase; O strange excuse!
  When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse.

"Call it not love, for love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating lust on earth usurp'd his name;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame;
  Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves,
  As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

"Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But lust's effect is tempest after sun;
Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done.
  Love surfeits not; lust like a glutton dies:
  Love is all truth; lust full of forged lies.

"More I could tell, but more I dare not say
The text is old the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away;
My face is full of shame; my heart of teen;[3]
  Mine ears that to your wanton talk attended,
  Do burn themselves for having so offended."

With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
And homeward through the dark laund[4] runs apace;
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
  Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
  So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend;
  So did the merciless and pitchy night
  Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood;
  Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
  Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour-caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled:
  "Ah me!" she cries, and twenty times, "woe, woe!"
  And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She, marking them, begins a wailing note,
And sings extemp'rally a woeful ditty;
How love makes young men thrall, and old men dote;
How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty:
  Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
  And still the choir of echoes answer[5] so.

Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short
If pleas'd themselves, others, they think, delight
In such like circumstance, with such like sport:

Wood—mad.

Done—destroyed.

[3] Teen—grief.

[4] Laund—lawn. Camden describes a lawn as a plain among trees, and the epithet dark confirms this explanation. We have such a scene in Henry VI., Part III., Act III.:—

> "Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
> For through this laund anon the deer will come."

[5] Answer. So the original—not answers. No doubt, according to the rules of modern construction, answers is more correct, and Malone talks of Shakspere having fallen into the error of "hasty writers, who are deceived by the noun immediately preceding the verb being in the plural number." We hold that to be a false refinement which destroys the landmarks of an age's phraseology. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, lays down as a rule that "nouns signifying a multitude, though they be of the singular number, require a verb plural." The rule would appear still more reasonable when the plural is more apparently expressed in the noun of multitude, as in the form before us—"the choir of echoes."

Their copious stories, oftentimes begun,
End without audience, and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal,
But idle sounds resembling parasites,
Like shrill-tongued tapsters answering every call,
Soothing the humour of fantastic wits?
She says, "'tis so:" they answer all, "'tis so;"
And would say after her, if she said "no."

Lo! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
The cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
"O thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son, that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other."

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds, and for his horn
Anon she hears them chant it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteth[1] to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twine about her thigh to make her stay;
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn, hid in some brake.

By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereat she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreath'd up in fatal folds, just in his way,
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder;
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses, and her spright confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain court'sy who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart,
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale[2] weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy;
Till, cheering up her senses sore-dismay'd,[3]
She tells them 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more;—
And with that word she spied the hunted boar;

Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires, to rate the boar for murther.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreads again;
Her more than haste is mated[4] with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain,
Full of respect,[5] yet naught at all respecting,
In hand with all things, naught at all effecting.

Here kennell'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary caitiff for his master;
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster;
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceas'd his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amaz'd
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gaz'd,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies:
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

"Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love," (thus chides she Death,)
"Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

"If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it—
O yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart.

"Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him thy power had lost his[6] power.
The Destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not Death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.[7]

"Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weeping?
What may a heavy groan advantage thee?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour."

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vail'd[8] her eyelids, who, like sluices, stopp'd

---

[1] Coasteth—advanceth.

[2] Cold-pale. The hyphen denoting the compound adjective is marked in the original edition of 1593.

[3] Sore-dismay'd. This is the reading of the edition of 1596. The original has "all dismay'd."

[4] Mated—confounded.

Respect—circumspection.

[6] His for its.

[7] Boswell has quoted a passage from Massinger's "Virgin Martyr," alluding, as Shakspere here does, to the beautiful fable of Cupid and Death exchanging arrows:—

"Strange affection!
Cupid once more hath chang'd his shafts with Death,
And kills instead of giving life."

[8] Vail'd—lowered.

The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fair
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropp'd;
  But through the floodgates breaks the silver rain,
  And with his strong course opens them again.

O how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sorrow,
Sorrow, that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
  But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
  Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions throng her constant woe,
As striving who should best become her grief
All entertain'd, each passion labours so
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
  But none is best; then join they all together,
  Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this, far off she hears some huntsmen hollo:[1]
A nurse's song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well:
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel:
  For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
  And flatters her it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorning it should pass,
  To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
  Who is but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

O hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!
Thy weal and woe are both of them extremes,
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
  The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
  In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all-to naught
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;
  She clepes him king of graves, and grave for kings,
  Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

"No, no," quoth she, "sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me, I felt a kind of fear,
Whenas I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
  Then, gentle shadow (truth I must confess),
  I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

"'Tis not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
  Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
  Could rule them both, without ten women's wit.

Thus, hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With Death she humbly doth insinuate;
  Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs; and stories
  His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

"O Jove," quoth she, "how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To wail his death who lives, and must not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
  For he, being dead, with him is beauty slain,
  And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.[2]

"Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves,
Trifles, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves."
  Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
  Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure away she flies;
The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight;
  Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
  Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all smother'd up, in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again;
  So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
  Into the deep dark cabins of her head;

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never wound the heart with looks again;
  Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
  By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes:
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound,
  The mutiny each part doth so surprise,
  That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd:
  No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
  But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumbly she passions, franticly she doteth;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead.
  Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow;
  Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three;
And then she reprehends her mangling eye
That makes more gashes where no breach should be
  His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled;
  For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

"My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet," quoth she, "behold two Adons dead!
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead;
  Heavy heart's lead melt at mine eyes' red fire!
  So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

[1] Hollo, or hollow, is not quite the same word as holla, which we have already noticed, although the usual spelling of this word in the passage before us is holla.

[2] Shakspere in his greater works was not ashamed to recur to the treasury of his early thoughts:—

"Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not Chaos is come again."

"Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost!
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing?
Whose tongue is music now? what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or anything ensuing?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim;
But true-sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

"Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear!
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you:
Having no fair[1] to lose, you need not fear;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth hiss you:
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves to rob him of his fair;

"And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep;
The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks; then would Adonis weep:
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

"To see his face the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him:
To recreate himself, when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him:
If he had spoke the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

"When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe-red cherries;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

"But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted[2] boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore:
Witness the entertainment that he gave;
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

"'Tis true, 'tis true; thus was Adonis slain;
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there;
And nuzzling in his flank the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, the tusk in his soft groin.

"Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his; the more am I accurst."
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told:
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies:

Two glasses where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect:
"Wonder of time," quoth she, "this is my spite,
That you being dead the day should yet be light.

"Since thou art dead, lo! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning but unsavoury end;
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low;
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

"It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud;
Bud and be blasted in a breathing while;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd[3]
With sweets that shall the truest sights beguile
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

"It shall be sparing, and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures;[4]
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures:
It shall be raging mad, and silly mild,
Make the old young, the old become a child.

"It shall suspect where is no cause of fear;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust;
It shall be merciful, and too severe,
And most deceiving when it seems most just;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

"It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire;
Subject and servile to all discontents,
As dry combustious matter is to fire;
Sith in his prime death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy."

By this, the boy that by her side lay kill'd
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white,
Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath;
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is reft from her by death:
She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears
Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

"Poor flower," quoth she, "this was thy father's guise,
(Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire,)
For every little grief to wet his eyes:
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 'tis thine; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

"Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
Lo! in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night:
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower."

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid
Their mistress, mounted, through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd,
Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen,
Means to immure herself, and not be seen.

[1] Fair—beauty.
[2] Urchin-snouted—with the snout of the urchin, or hedgehog.
[3] O'erstraw'd—o'erstrewed.
[4] To tread the measures—to dance.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

TO THE

RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

THE love I dedicate to your Lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety.[1] The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours, what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater my duty would show greater: meantime, as it is, it is bound to your Lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your Lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

THE ARGUMENT.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS (for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus), after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper, every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom, Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife (though it were late in the night) spinning amongst her maids: the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius, being inflamed with Lucrece's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was (according to his estate) royally entertained and lodged by Lucrece at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealeth into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucrece, in this lamentable plight, hastily despatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and, finding Lucrece attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and, bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king; wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation, the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

FROM the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire,
  And girdle with embracing flames the waist
  Of Collatine's fair love, Lucrece the chaste.

Haply that name of chaste unhapp'ly set
This bateless edge on his keen appetite;
When Collatine unwisely did not let[2]
To praise the clear unmatched red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight,
  Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
  With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state,
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate;
Reckoning his fortune at such high-proud rate,
  That kings might be espoused to more fame,
  But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done[3]
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun!
An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun:
  Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
  Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apologies be made
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
  Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
  From thievish ears, because it is his own

Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested[4] this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting
  His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should vaunt,
  That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
  O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold,
  Thy hasty spring still blasts,[5] and ne'er grows old!

[1] Moiety. In Henry IV., Part I., and in Lear, Shakspere uses moiety as it is here used, meaning a portion, not a half.

[2] Let—forbear.

[3] Done. The word is here used as in a previous passage of the Venus and Adonis:—

"Wasted, thaw'd, and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the mid-day sun."

[4] Suggested—tempted.

[5] Blasts is here used as a verb neuter. It is so used in the poem ascribed to Raleigh, entitled "The Farewell."—

"Tell age, it daily wasteth;
Tell honour, how it alters;
Tell beauty, that it blasteth."

When at Collatium this false lord arriv'd,
Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue striv'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame:
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame;
  When beauty boasted blushes, in despite
  Virtue would stain that or[1] with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intituled,[2]
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field:
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age, to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
  Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,—
  When shame assail'd, the red should fence the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white:
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
  The sovereignty of either being so great,
  That oft they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lilies and of roses
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
  To those two armies that would let him go,
  Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue
(The niggard prodigal that prais'd her so)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,[3]
  Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
  In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
  And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
  Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd.

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
  But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store
  That cloy'd with much he pineth still for more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling[4] looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books;[5]
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks;
  Nor could she moralize[6] his wanton sight,
  More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory;
  Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
  And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming thither
He makes excuses for his being there.
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
  Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
  And in her vaulty prison stows the day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending[7] weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned[8]
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night:
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight;
  And every one to rest themselves betake,
  Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that wake.

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining;
Despair to gain doth traffic oft for gaining;
  And when great treasure is the meed propos'd,
  Though death be adjunct, there's no death suppos'd.

Those that much covet are with gain so fond
That what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,[9]
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
  Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
  That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour in fell battles' rage;
  Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth cost
  The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in vent'ring ill we leave to be
The things we are, for that which we expect;
And this ambitious foul infirmity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have so then we do neglect
  The thing we have, and, all for want of wit,
  Make something nothing, by augmenting it.

---

[1] Or. The line usually stands thus:—

"Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white."

The original has ore. Malone has suggested, but he does not act upon the suggestion, that "the word intended was perhaps or, i.e. gold, to which the poet compares the deep colour of a blush." The lines in the subsequent stanza complete the heraldic allusion:—

"Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age, to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield."

[2] Intituled—having a title to, or in.
[3] The object of praise which Collatine doth possess.
[4] Parling—speaking.
[5] See Romeo and Juliet, Illustrations of Act I., pp. 111, 112.
[6] Moralize—interpret.
[7] Intending—pretending.
[8] Questioned—conversed.
[9] This is the reading of the original edition of 1594. That of 1616 reads—

"are with gain so fond,
That oft they have not that which they possess;
They scatter and unloose it."

Malone adopts the reading of the original, and he thus explains it:—"Poetically speaking, they may be said to scatter what they have not, i.e. what they cannot be truly said to have; what they do not enjoy, though possessed of it." This is clearly a misinterpretation. The reasoning of the two following stanzas is directed against the folly of venturing a certainty for an expectation, by which we "make something nothing." The meaning, then, though obscurely expressed, is that the covetous are so fond of gaining what they have not, that they scatter and unloose from their bond (safe hold) that which they possess.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust;
And for himself himself he must forsake:
Then where is truth if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds,[1] betrays
To slanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries;
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs; pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm;
But honest Fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
Doth too too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude Desire.

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly,
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye;
And to the flame thus speaks advisedly:
"As from this cold flint I enforc'd this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire."

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise;
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust:

"Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine!
And die unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine!
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine:
Let fair humanity abhor the deed
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.[2]

"O shame to knighthood and to shining arms!
O foul dishonour to my household's grave!
O impious act, including all foul harms!
A martial man to be soft fancy's slave;[3]
True valour still a true respect should have;
Then my digression[4] is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

"Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eyesore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,[5]
To cipher me how fondly I did dote;
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not been.

"What win I if I gain the thing I seek?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy:
Who buys a minute's mirth to wail a week
Or sells eternity to get a toy?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be strucken down?

If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage,
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent?
This siege that hath engirt his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame?

"O what excuse can my invention make
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints shake?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart bleed?
The guilt being great the fear doth still exceed;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But, coward-like, with trembling terror die.

"Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife;
As in revenge or quittal of such strife:
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

"Shameful it is;—ay, if the fact be known:
Hateful it is;—there is no hate in loving;
I'll beg her love;—but she is not her own;[6]
The worst is but denial, and reproving:
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing.
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw,
Shall by a painted cloth[7] be kept in awe."

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation
'Tween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worser sense for vantage still;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, "She took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes,
Fearing some hard news from the war-like band
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O how her fear did make her colour rise!
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.[8]

"And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd,
Forc'd it to tremble with her loyal fear;
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,

[1] Confounds. Malone interprets this as destroys; but the meaning is sufficiently clear if we accept confounds in its usual sense.

[2] Weed—garment. The word is more commonly used in the plural, as in Milton's "Paradise Regained:"—

"But now an aged man in rural weeds."

But in the same scene of Coriolanus (Act II. Sc. III.) we have both weed and weeds.

[3] Fancy's slave—love's slave.

[4] Digression is here used in the sense of transgression.

[5] Here is one of the frequent examples with which the works of Shakspere and his contemporaries abound of applying the usages of chivalry to the more remote antiquity of Greece and Rome. The poem of Lucrece contains many such allusions. In particular, towards the close we have this line:—

Knights by their oaths should right poor ladies' harms.

This was indeed an anticipation of chivalry; but the poet could in no way so forcibly express the spirit which animated the avengers of Lucrece, and which the injured lady here invokes, as by employing the language of chivalry. The use of the word ladies in this line is as much an anachronism as that of knights; but what other words will express the meaning intended?

[6] Malone says the words such as shameful it is are "supposed to be spoken by some airy monitor." Surely the poet only meant to express that contest of thoughts which goes forward in a mind distracted between reason and passion, and which the dramatic poet can only represent by soliloquy, as it is here represented.

[7] See As You Like It, Illustrations of Act III., vol. i. p. 348.

[8] Took away—being taken away.

That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

"Why hunt I then for colour or excuses?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth:
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay'd.

"Then, childish fear, avaunt! debating, die!
Respect[1] and reason wait on wrinkled age!
My heart shall never countermand mine eye;
Sad[2] pause and deep regard beseem the sage;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize;
Then who fears sinking where such treasure lies?"

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope, and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worser part;

And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece' bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforc'd, retires his ward;
But as they open they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard;
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wand'ring weasels shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct[3] in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch:

And being lighted, by the light he spies,
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And griping it, the neeld[4] his finger pricks
As who should say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inur'd; return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.

[1] Respect—prudence—in the sense of the original Latin, looking again.
[2] Sad—grave.
[3] Conduct—conductor.
[4] Neeld—needle.
[5] Let—obstruct.
[6] Sneaped—checked. So in Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. I.:—

"Biron is like an envious sneaping frost,
That bites the first-born infants of the spring."

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,[5]
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

"So, so," quoth he, "these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the sneaped[6] birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing;
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves and sands,
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands."

Now is he come unto the chamber door
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heaven should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power,
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts:—quoth he, "I must deflower;
The powers to whom I pray abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

"Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution:
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight."

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide:
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch;
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.
Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,[7]
And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head:
By their high treason is his heart misled;
Which gives the watchword to his hand full soon,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begun
To wink, being blinded with a greater light
Whether it is that she reflects so bright,

[7] Stalks. Malone says, "That the poet meant by the word stalk to convey the notion, not of a boisterous, but quiet movement, appears from a subsequent passage:—

'For in the dreadful dark of deep midnight
With shining falchion in my chamber came
A creeping creature.'"

Malone appears, from a subsequent part of his note, to confound stalk with stride. He says, "A person apprehensive of being discovered naturally takes long steps, the sooner to arrive at his point." But long steps are noisy steps; and therefore "Tarquin's ravishing strides" cannot be the true reading of the famous passage in Macbeth. But stalk, on the contrary, literally means, to go warily or softly. It is the Anglo-Saxon stælcan—pedetentim ire. The fowler who creeps upon the birds stalks, and his stalking-horse derives its name from the character of the fowler's movement.

That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill!
Then Collatine again by Lucrece' side
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head entombed is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admir'd of lewd unhallow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life liv'd in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred:
Who like a foul usurper went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see but mightily he noted
What did he note but strongly he desir'd?
What he beheld on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tir'd.[1]
With more than admiration he admir'd
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust by gazing qualified;
Slack'd, not suppress'd; for standing by her side,
His eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Obdurate vassals, fell exploits effecting,
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears, nor mother's groans respecting,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarum striking,
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commends the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,

[1] Tir'd—satiated, glutted, as a falcon tires on his prey.

Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round turrets destitute and pale.

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amaz'd, breaks ope her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and controll'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghastly sprite,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a shaking;
What terror 'tis! but she, in worser taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The sight which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting antics, ugly in her eyes:
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries:
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,
(Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall!)
May feel her heart, poor citizen, distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk,[2] that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe,
Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers urgeth still
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: "The colour in thy face
(That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace)
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort; the fault is thine,
For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

"Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath ensnar'd thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide,
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might;
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

"I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting:
All this, beforehand, counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf, and hears no heedful friends;

[2] Bulk—the body, the whole mass. Johnson, however, defines the word as the breast, or largest part, of a man; deriving it from the Dutch bulcke. A passage in Hamlet employs the word in the same way as in the text before us:—

"He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk."

Turbervile, who preceded Shakspere about twenty years, has this line:—

"My liver leapt within my bulk."

Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

"I have debated, even in my soul,
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed;
But nothing can Affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy."

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth[1] the fowl below with his wing's shade,
Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies:
So under his insulting falchion lies
Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.[2]

"Lucrece," quoth he, "this night I must enjoy thee:
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee;
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

"So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of their obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield I rest thy secret friend
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm, done to a great good end,
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

"Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender[3] my suit: bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot:[4]
For marks descried in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy."

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the grype's[5] sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite:

But[6] when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth threat,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing;
So his unhallow'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his holdfast foot the weak mouse panteth;
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining.

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place,[7]
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, "Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;[8]
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim, before thy shoot[9] be ended
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

"My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
Myself a weakling, do not then ensnare me;
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me;
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave thee.
If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

"All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolv'd to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

"In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee;
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me,

Coucheth—causes to couch.
We have the same image in Henry VI., Part III.:—

> "Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
> The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
> Dare stir a wing if Warwick shake his bells."

Tender—heed, regard.

[4] Birth-hour's blot—corporal blemish. So in A Midsummer Night's Dream:—

> "And the blots of nature's hand
> Shall not in their issue stand;
> Never mole, hare-lip, nor scar,
> Nor mark prodigious."

[5] Steevens says the grype is properly the griffin. But in the passage before us, as in the early English writers, the word is applied to birds of prey, the eagle especially.

[6] Malone, who has certainly made very few deviations from the original text of this poem, here changes but to look, "there being no opposition whatsoever between this and the preceding passage." An opposition is, however, intended. Lucretia pleads to the "rough beast" that "knows no right;" but as the gentle gust divides the black cloud,

> "So his unhallow'd haste her words delays."

[7] Shakspere, whose knowledge of the outward effects of the passions was universal, makes the terror of poor Lucrece display itself in the same manner as that of "great clerks" greeting their prince with "premeditated welcomes." They also

> "Make periods in the midst of sentences,
> Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
> And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off."
> Midsummer Night's Dream, Act V. Sc. I.

[8] Pretended—proposed.

[9] Shoot. Malone says that the author intended this word to be taken in a double sense, suit and shoot being in his time pronounced alike. We doubt this. Suit is not the word that the indignation of Lucrece would have used; nor is the double sense carried forward at all.

Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely name.
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
  Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
  For kings like gods should govern everything.

"How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring!
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a king!
O be remember'd, no outrageous thing
  From vassal actors can be wip'd away;
  Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

"This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this thy will remove;
  For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
  Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

"And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass, wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
  Thou back'st reproach against long-lived laud,
  And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

"Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
  When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul Sin may say,
  He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way?

"Think but how vile a spectacle it were
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
  O how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
  That from their own misdeeds askaunce their eyes!

"To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash relier;
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal;[1]
Let him return and flattering thoughts retire:
His true respect will 'prison false desire,
  And wipe the dim mist from thy doting eyne,
  That thou shalt see thy state, and pity mine."

"Have done," quoth he; "my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
  To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls' haste,
  Add to his flow, but alter not his taste."

"Thou art," quoth she, "a sea, a sovereign king;
And lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
  Thy sea within a puddle's womb is hears'd,
  And not the puddle in thy sea dispers'd.

"So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave;
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
  The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
  But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

"So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state"—
"No more," quoth he; "by heaven, I will not hear thee:
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee;
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee
  Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
  To be thy partner in this shameful doom."

This said, he sets the foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies;
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries
  Till with her own white fleece her voice controll'd
  Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears
He pens her piteous clamours in her head;
Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone[2] lust should stain so pure a bed!
  The spots whereof could weeping purify,
  Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again.
This forced league doth force a further strife,
This momentary joy breeds months of pain,
This hot desire converts to cold disdain
  Pure Chastity is rifled of her store,
  And Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night
  His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
  Devours his will that liv'd by foul devouring.

O deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunken desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While lust is in his pride no exclamation
  Can curb his heat, or reign his rash desire,
  Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case:
The flesh being proud, desire doth fight with grace,
  For there it revels; and when that decays,
  The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chas'd;
For now against himself he sounds this doom,
That through the length of times he stands disgrac'd:
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defac'd;
  To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
  To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection

[1] Repeal—recall; from the French rappeler.

[2] Prone—having inclination or propensity, and so self-willed, headstrong.

Her immortality, and make her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual;
  Which in her prescience she controlled still,
  But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought through the dark night he stealeth,
A captive victor that hath lost in gain;
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain,
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
  She bears the load of lust he left behind,
  And he the burthen of a guilty mind.

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a wearied lamb lies panting there;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence;
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
  She stays, exclaiming on the direful night;
  He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loath'd delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite;
She there remains a hopeless castaway:
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she never may behold the day;
"For day," quoth she, "night's scapes doth open lay
  And my true eyes have never practis'd how
  To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

"They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
  And grave, like water, that doth eat in steel,
  Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel."

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest, to close so pure a mind.
  Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
  Against the unseen secrecy of night:

"O comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind muffled bawd! dark harbour for defame!
  Grim cave of death, whispering conspirator,
  With close-tongued treason and the ravisher!

"O hateful, vaporous, and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my cureless crime,
Muster thy mists to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time!
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
  His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
  Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

"With rotten damps ravish the morning air;
Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noontide prick;[1]
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
  That in their smoky ranks his smother'd light
  May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

"Were Tarquin night (as he is but night's child),
The silver-shining queen he would distain;
Her twinkling handmaids too, by him defil'd,
Through night's black bosom should not peep again;
So should I have copartners in my pain:
  And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage,
  As palmers' chat makes short their pilgrimage.

"Where[2] now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infamy;
But I alone alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine,
  Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
  Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

"O night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
  That all the faults which in thy reign are made
  May likewise be sepulchred[3] in thy shade!

"Make me not object to the tell-tale day!
The light will show, character'd[4] in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
  To 'cipher what is writ in learned books,
  Will quote[5] my loathsome trespass in my looks.

"The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name;
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame:
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
  Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
  How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

"Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
  That is as clear from this attaint of mine,
  As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

"O unseen shame! invisible disgrâce!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot[6] afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
  Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
  Which not themselves but he that gives them knows!

"If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
  In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
  And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

---

[1] Noontide prick—the point of noon.
[2] Where—whereas.
[3] Sepulchred. Milton uses the word with the same accent in his lines on Shakspere:—

"And so sepulchred in such pomp does lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die."

[4] Character'd. Here again is an accentuation different from the present, but which is common to all Shakspere's contemporaries. Malone has observed that this is still the pronunciation of the Irish people; and he adds, with great truth, that much of the pronunciation of Queen Elizabeth's age is yet retained in Ireland.
[5] Quote—observe.
[6] Mot—motto.

"Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack,[1]
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;[2]
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue:—O, unlook'd-for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

"Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?[3]
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

"The aged man that coffers up his gold
Is plagued with cramps, and gouts, and painful fits,
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

"So then he hath it, when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young,
Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sours,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

"Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing;
What virtue breeds iniquity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill-annexed Opportunity
Or kills his life, or else his quality.

"O Opportunity! thy guilt is great:
'Tis thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou sett'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st the season;
'Tis thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

"Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd;
Thou smother'st honesty, thou murther'st troth;
Thou foul abetter! thou notorious bawd!
Thou plantest scandal, and displacest laud:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

"Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast;
Thy smoothing[4] titles to a ragged[5] name;
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste:
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

"When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort[6] an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chain'd?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee;
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

"The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;[7]
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds:
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

"When truth and virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid;
They buy thy help: but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes; and thou art well appay'd[8]
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

"Guilty thou art of murder and of theft;
Guilty of perjury and subornation;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift
Guilty of incest, that abomination
An accessary by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

"Mis-shapen Time, copesmate of ugly night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care,
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, sin's packhorse, virtue's snare;
Thou nursest all, and murtherest all that are.
O hear me then, injurious, shifting Time!
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

"Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose?
Cancell'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes?
Time's office is to fine[9] the hate of foes;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

"Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn, and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till he render right;
To ruinate proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers:

Wrack. Mr. Hunter, in his "Disquisition on the Tempest," pointed out the necessity of restoring to Shakspere's text the old word wrack, instead of the modern wreck. He asks, "What could editors, who proceed upon principles which lead to such a substitution, do with this couplet of the Lucrece:—

'O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
I could prevent this storm, and shun thy wrack!'"

In this particular instance they have preserved the original word; but in that before us, where wrack is equally required to rhyme with back, they have substituted wreck. Even Mr. Dyce herein copies Malone without alteration. This is probably mere carelessness; but it shows the danger of tampering with an original reading.

[2] This is again an instance of the dramatic crowding of thought upon thought, and making one thought answer and repel the other, which render Shakspere's soliloquies such matchless revelations of the heart. Malone, not perceiving this dramatic power, changes guilty to guiltless; because the idea of the first line does not correspond with that of the second.

[3] Folly is here used in the sense of wickedness; and gentle in that of well-born.

[4] Smoothing—flattering.

[5] Ragged is here used in the sense of contemptible. It means something broken, torn, and therefore worthless. See note on Henry IV., Part II., Act I. Sc. I., vol. i. p. 566.

[6] Sort—assign, appropriate. So in Richard III.:—

"But I will sort a pitchy day for thee."

The constant allusions of the Elizabethan poets to that familiar terror, the plague, show how completely the evil, whether present or absent, was associated with the habitual thoughts of the people. Advice is here used in the sense of government, municipal or civil; and the line too correctly describes the carelessness of those in high places, who abated not their feasting and their revelry while pestilence was doing its terrible work around them.

[8] Appay'd—satisfied, pleased. Well appayed, ill appayed, are constantly used by Chaucer and other ancient writers.

[9] To fine—to bring to an end.

"To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books, and alter their contents,
To pluck the quills from ancient ravens' wings,
To dry the old oak's sap, and cherish springs;[1]
  To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
  And turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel;

"To show the beldame daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild,
To mock the subtle, in themselves beguil'd;
  To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
  And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

"Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou couldst return to make amends?
One poor retiring[2] minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit that to bad debtors lends:
  O, this dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
  I could prevent this storm, and shun thy wrack!

"Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devise extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed, crimeful night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright,
  And the dire thought of his committed evil
  Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

"Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him moan, but pity not his moans
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
  And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
  Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

"Let him have time to tear his curled hair,[3]
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave;
  And time to see one that by alms doth live
  Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

"Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport:
  And ever let his unrecalling[4] crime
  Have time to wail the abusing of his time.

"O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thief run mad!
Himself himself seek every hour to kill!
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill
  For who so base would such an office have
  As slanderous death's-man to so base a slave?

"The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
  The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
  But little stars may hide them when they list.

"The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unperceiv'd fly with the filth away,
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day.
  Gnats are unnoted wheresoe'er they fly,
  But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

"Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools,
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters;
To trembling clients be you mediators:
  For me, I force[5] not argument a straw,
  Since that my case is past the help of law.

"In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At Time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
In vain I cavil with my infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirm'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
  The remedy indeed to do me good,
  Is to let forth my foul, defiled blood.

"Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die my honour lives in thee,
But if I live thou liv'st in my defame:
Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
  And was afear'd to scratch her wicked foe,
  Kill both thyself and her for yielding so."

This said, from her betumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this no-slaughter-house no tool imparteth,
To make more vent for passage of her breath,
Which thronging through her lips so vanisheth
  As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
  Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

"In vain," quoth she, "I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
I fear'd by Tarquin's falchion to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife;
  So am I now:—O no, that cannot be;
  Of that true type hath Tarquin rifled me.

"O! that is gone for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery;[6]
A dying life to living infamy;
  Poor helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
  To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

"Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated troth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so
To flatter thee with an infringed oath;
This bastard graff shall never come to growth:
  He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute
  That thou art doting father of his fruit.

[1] Springs—shoots, saplings. Time, which dries up the old oak's sap, cherishes the young plants.

[2] Retiring is here used in the sense of coming back again.

[3] Curled hair is the characteristic of Tarquin, as it was of all men of high rank in Shakspere's time. Perhaps it implied a notion of luxuriousness. In this way we have "the curled Antony;" and in Othello—

"The wealthy curled darlings of our nation."

[4] Unrecalling—not to be recalled. The elder writers use the participle with much more license than we do.

[5] Force is here used in the sense of value or regard.

[6] An allusion to the badges which servants or retainers of families of rank wore on their liveries.

"Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought
Basely with gold, but stolen from forth thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
  And with my trespass never will dispense,
  Till life to death acquit my forc'd offence.

"I will not poison thee with my attaint,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses;
My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes like sluices,
  As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
  Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale."

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tun'd warble of her nightly sorrow,
And solemn night with slow-sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow:
  But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
  And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranny spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To whom she sobbing speaks: "O eye of eyes,
Why pryest thou through my window? leave thy peeping;
Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleeping:
  Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
  For day hath naught to do what's done by night.

Thus cavils she with everything she sees:
True grief is fond[1] and testy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with naught agrees.
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild;
Continuance tames the one; the other wild,
  Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still
  With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare;
No object but her passion's strength renews;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues:
  Sometime her grief is dumb, and hath no words;
  Sometime 'tis mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody.
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy;
Sad souls are slain in merry company:
Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society:
  True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd
  When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore;
He ten times pines that pines beholding food;
To see the salve doth make the wound ache more;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good;
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
  Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'erflows:
  Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows.

"You mocking birds," quoth she, "your tunes entomb
Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts,
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb!
(My restless discord loves no stops nor rests;
A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests:)
  Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
  Distress likes dumps[2] when time is kept with tears.

"Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my dishevell'd hair.
As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the diapason bear:
  For burthen-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
  While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill.[3]

"And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to affright mine eye;
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
  These means, as frets upon an instrument,
  Shall tune our heartstrings to true languishment.

"And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows nor parching heat nor freezing cold,
We will find out; and there we will unfold
  To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds:
  Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds."

As the poor frighted deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly,
Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
  To live or die which of the twain were better,
  When life is sham'd, and Death reproach's debtor.

"To kill myself," quoth she, "alack! what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution?
They that lose half with greater patience bear it
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion
  Who, having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
  Will slay the other, and be nurse to none.

"My body or my soul, which was the dearer?
When the one pure, the other made divine.
Whose love of either to myself was nearer?
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine.
Ah me! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
  His leaves will wither, and his sap decay;
  So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

"Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy;
Her sacred temple spotted, spoiled, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy:
Then let it not be call'd impiety
  If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole
  Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

"Yet die I will not till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
  Which by him tainted shall for him be spent,
  And as his due writ in my testament.

"My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured.
'Tis honour to deprive dishonour'd life;

[1] Fond—foolish.
[2] Dumps—melancholy airs.
[3] Better skill. We must probably here understand "with better skill."

The one will live, the other being dead:
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
For in my death I murther shameful scorn:
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

"Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee?
My resolution, Love, shall be thy boast,
By whose example thou reveng'd may'st be.
How Tarquin must be used, read it in me:
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe;
And, for my sake, serve thou false Tarquin so.

"This brief abridgment of my will I make:
My soul and body to the skies and ground;
My resolution, husband, do thou take;
Mine honour be the knife's that makes my wound;
My shame be his that did my fame confound;
And all my fame that lives disbursed be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

"Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will;[1]
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it!
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill;
My life's foul deed my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, 'So be it.'
Yield to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee;
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be."

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip'd the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untun'd tongue she hoarsely call'd her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies;
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so
As winter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow,
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
(For why? her face wore sorrow's livery,)
But durst not ask of her audaciously
Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with woe.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,[2]
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye;
Even so the maid with swelling drops 'gan wet
Her circled eyne, enforc'd by sympathy
Of those fair suns, set in her mistress' sky,
Who in a salt-wav'd ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
One justly weeps; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling:
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts,
And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will;[3]
The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep;
In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep:
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep:
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd!
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hild[4]
Poor women's faults that they are so fulfill'd[5]
With men's abuses! those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong:
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread;
And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild Patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit[6] of her complaining:
"My girl," quoth she, "on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood:
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

"But tell me, girl, when went"—(and there she stay'd Till after a deep groan) "Tarquin from hence?"
"Madam, ere I was up," replied the maid,
"The more to blame my sluggard negligence:
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

"But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.
"O peace!" quoth Lucrece; "if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

"Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say?—One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear;
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it:
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ."

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;

---

[1] The executor of a will was sometimes called the overseer; but our ancestors often appointed overseers as well as executors. Shakspere's own will contains such an appointment.

[2] In the folio edition of Romeo and Juliet, as well as in the quarto of 1597, we find the line—

"When the sun sets, the earth doth drizzle dew."

Here the image completely agrees with that in the text before us. But in the undated quarto, which the modern editors follow, we have "the air doth drizzle dew." Science was long puzzled to decide whether the earth or the air produced dew; but it was reserved for the accurate experiments of modern times to show that the earth and the air must unite to produce this effect under particular circumstances of temperature and radiation. The correction of the undated edition of Romeo and Juliet was certainly unnecessary.

[3] Marble here stands for men, whose minds have just been compared to marble.

[4] Hild—held. Such a change for the sake of rhyme is frequent in Spenser.

[5] Fulfill'd—completely filled.

[6] Counterfeit—a likeness or copy.

What wit sets down is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
  Much like a press of people at a door,
  Throng her inventions, which shall be before.

At last she thus begins:—"Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe to afford
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see)
Some present speed to come and visit me:
  So I commend me from our house in grief;[1]
  My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Here folds she up the tenor of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality;
She dares not thereof make discovery,
  Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse,
  Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When sighs, and groans, and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
  To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
  With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion[2] that it doth behold,
When every part a part of woe doth bear.
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear:
  Deep sounds[3] make lesser noise than shallow fords,
  And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
"At Ardea to my lord with more than haste:
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast.
  Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems:
  Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villain court'sies to her low;
And blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll, without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
  Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
  For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame;

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
  Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
  Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blaz'd;
She thought he blush'd as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gaz'd;
Her earnest eye did make him more amaz'd:
  The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
  The more she thought he spied in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
  That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
  Pausing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before the which is drawn[4] the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threat'ning cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy;
  Which the conceited[5] painter drew so proud,
  As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of Nature, Art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife:
The red blood reek'd to show the painter's strife;
  And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy lights,
  Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrim'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loopholes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
  Such sweet observance in this work was had,
  That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling paces;
  Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
  That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble

In Ajax and Ulysses, O what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either 'cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
  But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent
  Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 'twere encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight
In speech, it seem'd, his beard all silver white
  Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
  Thin winding breath, which purl'd up[6] to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly listening, but with several graces,

---

[1] The simplicity of this letter is exquisitely beautiful; and its pathos is deeper from the circumstance that it is scarcely raised above the tone of ordinary correspondence.

"So I commend me from our house in grief"

is such a formula as we constantly find in ancient correspondence. In the "Paston Letters" we have such conclusions as this: "Written at —— when I was not well at ease."

[2] Motion—dumb show.

[3] Sounds. Malone proposes to read floods. This Steevens resists, and says that sound is such a part of the sea as may be sounded. To this Malone replies that a sound cannot be deep, and therefore sounds is not here intended. A sound is a bay or frith; and Dampier, who is better authority than the commentators on nautical matters, mentions a sound as "large and deep." The stillness of a sound, in consequence of being land-locked, testifies to the correctness of the poet's image.

[4] Drawn—drawn out into the field.

[5] Conceited—ingenious, imaginative.

[6] Purl'd. The meaning of purl, as applied to a sound, is familiar to all. Bacon, in speaking of the sound of a pipe, mentions "a sweet degree of sibilation or purling." Thus in the passage before us, the thin winding breath of Nestor, the soft flowing words, purl'd up to the sky. But the commentators believe that purl'd here expresses motion, and not sound; and Steevens proposes to substitute curl'd.

As if some mermaid did their ears entice;
Some high, some low, the painter was so nice:
  The scalps of many, almost hid behind,
  To jump up higher seem'd to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one being throng'd bears back, all boll'n[1] and red;
Another smother'd seems to pelt[2] and swear;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
  As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
  It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,[3]
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind:
  A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
  Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong-besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to field,
Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
  That through their light joy seemed to appear
  (Like bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

And, from the strond of Dardan where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks, the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than[4]
  Retire again, till meeting greater ranks
  They join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is stel'd.[5]
Many she sees where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolour dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
  Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
  Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomiz'd
Time's ruin, beauty's wrack, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd;
Of what she was no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood, chang'd to black in every vein,
  Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed,
  Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the beldame's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,

[1] Boll'n—swollen.
Pelt—to be clamorous, to discharge hasty words as pellets.
Kind—natural.

[4] Than used for then. This is another example (we had one before in hild) of changing a termination for the sake of rhyme. In Fairfax's Tasso there is a parallel instance:—

"Time was, (for each one hath his doting time,
  These silver locks were golden tresses than,)
That country life I hated as a crime,
  And from the forest's sweet contentment ran."

Stel'd. A passage in the Twenty-fourth Sonnet may explain the lines in the text:—

"Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stel'd,
  Thy beauty's form in table of my heart."

The word stel'd, in both instances, has a distinct association with something painted; but to stell is interpreted as to fix, from stell, a fixed place of abode. It appears to us that the word is connected in Shakspere's mind with the word stile, the pencil by which forms are traced and copied. The application does not appear forced when we subsequently find the poet using the expression of "pencill'd pensiveness." We constantly use the term stile as applied to painting; but we all know that stile, as describing the manner of delineating forms, is derived from the instrument by which characters were anciently written. Stel'd is probably, then, stil'd, the word being slightly changed to suit the rhyme.

And bitter words to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no god to lend her those;
  And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
  To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

"Poor instrument," quoth she, "without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue:
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
And with my tears quench Troy that burns so long;
  And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
  Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

"Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here;
  And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
  The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter, die.

"Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many mo?[6]
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so.
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe
  For one's offence why should so many fall,
  To plague a private sin in general?

"Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swounds;[7]
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised[8] wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds:
  Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
  Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire."

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell:
So Lucrece set a-work sad tales doth tell
  To pencill'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow;
  She lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament:
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent;
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content
  Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
  So mild that patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Cheeks neither red nor pale, but mingled so
  That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
  Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconc'd his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
  Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
  Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

[6] Mo—more.
[7] Swounds—swoons. It is probable that the word was so usually pronounced. In Drayton swound rhymes to wound.
[8] Unadvised—unknowing.
[9] Confounds is here used in the sense of destroys.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Whose words, like wildfire, burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilion, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.[1]

This picture she advisedly[2] perus'd,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill;
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abus'd,
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill;
And still on him she gaz'd, and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spied,
That she concludes the picture was belied.

"It cannot be," quoth she, "that so much guile"—
(She would have said) "can lurk in such a look;"
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue "can lurk" from "cannot" took;
"It cannot be" she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus: "It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind:

"For even as subtle Sinon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
(As if with grief or travail he had fainted,)
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguil'd[3]
With outward honesty, but yet defil'd
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

"Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Sinon sheds.
Priam, why art thou old, and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls[4] a Trojan bleeds;
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds;
Those round clear pearls of his that move thy pity
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.

"Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Sinon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold
Only to flatter fools, and make them bold;
So Priam's trust false Sinon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water."

Here, all enrag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Sinon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest
Whose deed hath made herself herself detest;
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er;
"Fool! fool!" quoth she, "his wounds will not be sore.

Thus ebbs and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining:
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining.
Though woe be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overslipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others' detriment;
Losing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cur'd,
To think their dolour others have endur'd.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black;
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky.
These water-galls[5] in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares:
Her eyes, though sod in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares,
But stood like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: "What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befallen, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent?
Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd[6] to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is ta'en prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consorted lords,
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending:
"Few words," quoth she, "shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending:
In me more woes than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

"Then be this all the task it hath to say:—
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas! thy Lucrece is not free.

"For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falchion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cried, Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

---

[1] Malone objects to this image of Priam's palace being the mirror in which the fixed stars beheld themselves. Boswell has answered Malone by quoting Lydgate's description of the same wonderful edifice:—

> "That verely when so the sonne shone
> Upon the golde meynt amonge the stone,
> They gave a lyght withouten any were,
> As doth Apollo in his mid-day sphere."

[2] Advisedly—attentively.

[3] So beguil'd. The original has to beguil'd. Beguil'd is masked with fraud. In The Merchant of Venice we have—

> "Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
> To a most dangerous sea."

[4] Falls—lets fall.

[5] Water-galls. Steevens says the word is current among the shepherds on Salisbury Plain.

[6] Address'd—prepared.

"For some hard-favour'd groom of thine, quoth he,
Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee,
And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
  The lechers in their deed: this act will be
  My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

"With this I did begin to start and cry,
And then against my heart he set his sword,
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word:
So should my shame still rest upon record,
  And never be forgot in mighty Rome
  The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

"Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear:
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
  That my poor beauty had purloin'd his eyes,
  And when the judge is robb'd, the prisoner dies.

"O teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find;
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; that never was inclin'd
  To accessory yieldings, but still pure
  Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure."

Lo here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With head declin'd, and voice damm'd up with woe,
With sad-set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away that stops his answer so:
  But wretched as he is he strives in vain;
  What he breathes out his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Outruns the eye that doth behold his haste;
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past
  Even so he sighs, his sorrows make a saw,
  To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
"Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power; no flood by raining slaketh.
My woe too sensible thy passion maketh
  More feeling-painful: let it then suffice
  To drown one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

"And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece,—now attend me;
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own; suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past: the help that thou shalt lend me
  Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die;
  For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

"But ere I name him, you, fair lords," quoth she,
(Speaking to those that came with Collatine)
"Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
For 'tis a meritorious fair design
  To chase injustice with revengeful arms:
  Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms."

[1] Vastly—like a waste.

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her imposition,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
  The protestation stops. "O speak," quoth she,
  "How may this forced stain be wip'd from me?

"What is the quality of mine offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declined honour to advance?
May any terms acquit me from this chance?
  The poison'd fountain clears itself again;
  And why not I from this compelled stain?"

With this, they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind untainted clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
  "No, no," quoth she, "no dame, hereafter living,
  By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving."

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: "He, he," she says,
But more than "he" her poor tongue could not speak;
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
  She utters this: "He, he, fair lords, 'tis he,
  That guides this hand to give this wound to me."

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheath'd:
That blow did bail it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breath'd:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd
  Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
  Life's lasting date from cancell'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece's father that beholds her bleed,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
  The murderous knife, and as it left the place,
  Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly[1] stood
Bare and unpeopled, in this fearful flood.
  Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
  And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigol[2] goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
  And blood untainted still doth red abide,
  Blushing at that which is so putrefied.

"Daughter, dear daughter," old Lucretius cries,
"That life was mine which thou hast here depriv'd.
If in the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me deriv'd.
  If children predecease progenitors,
  We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

[2] Rigol—circle.

"Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new born;
But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a barebon'd death by time outworn;
O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn!
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was.

"O time, cease thou thy course, and last no longer,
If they surcease to be that should survive.
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger,
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again, and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!"

By this starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold[1] Lucrece' bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeits to die with her a space;
Till manly shame bids him possess his breath,
And live, to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who, mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come, in his poor heart's aid,
That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then son and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, "She's mine," "O, mine she is,
Replies her husband: "do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine."

"O," quoth Lucretius, "I did give that life
Which she too early and too late[2] hath spill'd."
"Woe, woe," quoth Collatine, "she was my wife,
I owed her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd."
"My daughter!" and "My wife!" with clamours fill'd
The dispers'd air, who, holding Lucrece' life,
Answer'd their cries, "My daughter!" and "My wife!"

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece' side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things.

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
"Thou wronged lord of Rome," quoth he, "arise;
Let my unsounded self, suppos'd a fool,
Now set thy long-experienc'd wit to school.

"Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous deeds?
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow,
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds:
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

"Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations,
But kneel with me, and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
(Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgrac'd,)
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chas'd.

"Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun that breeds the fat earth's store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece' soul that late complain'd[3]
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife."

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow;[4]
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly[5] did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

---

[1] Key-cold. So in Richard III., Act I. Sc. II.:—
"Poor key-cold figure of a holy king."

[2] Too late—too recently.

[3] Complain'd was formerly used without a subjoined preposition.

[4] Allow—approve.

[5] Plausibly—with expressions of applause, with acclamation—plausively, applausively.

SONNETS.

I.

FROM fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the riper should by time decease,
His tender heir might bear his memory:
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament,
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud buriest thy content,
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
  Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
  To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed,[1] of small worth held:
Then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days;
To say, within thine own deep sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's use,
If thou couldst answer—"This fair child of mine
Shall sum my count, and make my old excuse—"
Proving his beauty by succession thine!
  This were to be new-made when thou art old,
  And see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

III.

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
Now is the time that face should form another;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unbless some mother.
For where is she so fair whose unear'd[2] womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?
Or who is he so fond[3] will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime:
So thou through windows of thine age shall see,
Despite of wrinkles, this thy golden time.
  But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
  Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
And, being frank, she lends to those are free.
Then, beauteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give?
Profitless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave?
  The unus'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
  Which, used, lives th' executor to be.

V.

Those hours that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair[4] which fairly doth excel;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter, and confounds him there;
Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'ersnow'd, and bareness everywhere:
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was.
  But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
  Leese[5] but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd:
Make sweet some phial; treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happies[6] those that pay the willing loan;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee:
Then what could Death do if thou shouldst depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity?
  Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
  To be Death's conquest, and make worms thine heir.

VII.

Lo, in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty;
And having climb'd the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage;

---

[1] Weed—garment.
Unear'd—unploughed.
[3] Fond—foolish.

[4] Unfair—a verb—deprive of fairness, of beauty.
[5] Leese—lose.
[6] Happies—makes happy.

But when from high-most pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, 'fore duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way:
  So thou, thyself outgoing in thy noon,
  Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?[1]
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering;[2]
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who, all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
  Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
  Sings this to thee, "Thou single wilt prove none."

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless[3] wife
The world will be thy widow, and still weep
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrift in the world doth spend
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.
  No love towards others in that bosom sits,
  That on himself such murderous shame commits.

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant if thou wilt thou art belov'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove;
  Make thee another self, for love of me,
  That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou may'st call thine, when thou from youth convertest.
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase;
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay:
If all were minded so the times should cease,
And threescore years would make the world away.
  Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,
  Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
  Look whom she best endow'd, she gave the more;
  Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish;
    She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby
    Thou shouldst print more, nor let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls, all[4] silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;
  And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defence
  Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee hence.

XIII.

O that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease
Find no determination: then you were
Yourself again, after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.
Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
  O! none but unthrifts:—Dear my love, you know
  You had a father; let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy,
But not to tell of good or evil luck,
Of plagues, of dearths, or season's quality:
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain, and wind,
Or say with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And (constant stars) in them I read such art,
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert:
  Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
  Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge state presenteth naught but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check'd even by the selfsame sky;
Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory

[1] Malone thus explains this passage:—"O thou whom to hear is music, why hear'st thou," &c.

[2] If two strings are tuned in perfect unison, and one only is struck, a very sensible vibration takes place in the other. This is called sympathetic vibration.

[3] Makeless—mateless. Make and mate are synonymous in our elder writers.

[4] All. The original has or.

Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful time debateth with decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with Time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours;
And many maiden gardens, yet unset,
With virtuous wish would bear your[1] living flowers,
Much liker than your painted counterfeit:[2]
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,[3]
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself keeps yourself still;
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet, Heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, this poet lies,
Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue;
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And stretched metre of an antique song:
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice;—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven[4] shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd;[5]
But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest;
Nor shall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest;
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

XIX.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-liv'd phœnix in her blood;
Make glad the sorry seasons, as thou fleets,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world, and all her fading sweets;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime:
O carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen;
Him in thy course untainted do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time: despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth;
A man in hue, all hues in his controlling,
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls amazeth.
And for a woman wert thou first created;
Till Nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing.
But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

XXI.

So is it not with me as with that muse,
Stirr'd by a painted beauty to his verse;
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse;
Making a couplement[6] of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge rondure[7] hems.
O let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air:
Let them say more that like of hearsay well;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee
Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me;
How can I then be elder than thou art?
O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I not for myself but for thee will;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an unperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart;
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
O'ercharg'd with burthen of mine own love's might.

[1] Your. The ordinary reading is you, Malone conceiving that your in the original is an error of the press.
[2] Counterfeit—portrait.
[3] Fair—beauty. The word is used in the same sense in the Eighteenth Sonnet.
[4] So in Richard II.:—

"When the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world."

[5] Untrimm'd—undecorated.
[6] Couplement—union. So in Spenser:—

"Allied with bands of mutual couplement."

[7] Rondure—circumference.

O let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presages of my speaking breast;
Who plead for love, and look for recompence
More than that tongue that more hath more express'd.
O learn to read what silent love hath writ:
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

XXIV.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stel'd
Thy beauty's form in table[1] of my heart;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image pictur'd lies,
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done;
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XXV.

Let those who are in favour with their stars,
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread
But as the marigold at the sun's eye;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famoused for fight,[2]
After a thousand victories once foil'd,
Is from the book of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd:
Then happy I, that love and am belov'd
Where I may not remove, nor be remov'd.

XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee I send this written embassage,
To witness duty, not to show my wit.
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it;
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it:
Till whatsoever star that guides by moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee,
Till then, not show my head where thou may'st prove me.

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tir'd;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expir'd:
For then my thoughts (from far where I abide)
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beauteous, and her old face new.
Lo, thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debarr'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night and night by day oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me,
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night;
When sparkling stars twire[3] not, thou gild'st the even.
But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's strength seem stronger.

XXIX.

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf Heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee,—and then my state
(Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate;[4]
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear times' waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unus'd to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless[5] night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.[6]
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.

Table. So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

"'Twas pretty, though a plague
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table."

Table, though sometimes used in the sense of a picture, more commonly means the tabular surface upon which a picture is painted.

[2] Fight. The original has worth. Theobald, who saw that the alternate rhyme is invariably preserved in the other Sonnets, proposed to make one of two changes; to read fight instead of worth, or forth instead of quite. We are not perfectly satisfied with either change; but, as the first has been adopted in most modern editions, we will not attempt to disturb the received reading, and we have no doubt that some error is involved in the original.

[3] Twire. Malone proposed to read twirl, and Steevens conjectured that twire means quire. Gifford, in a note upon Ben Jonson's "Sad Shepherd," explains that in the passage before us the meaning is, "When the stars do not gleam or appear at intervals." He adds, "Twire should not have been suffered to grow obsolete, for we have no word now in use that can take its place, or be considered as precisely synonymous with it in sense: leer and twinkle are merely shades of it." Gifford quotes several passages from Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher in confirmation of his opinion. But there are four lines in Drayton's "Poly-Olbion" which contain a parallel use of the word:—

"Suppose 'twixt noon and night the sun is half-way wrought,
(The shadows to be large, by his descending brought,)
Who with a fervent eye looks through the twiring glades.
And his dispersed rays commixeth with the shades."

[4] See Cymbeline, Illustrations of Act II., p. 210.

[5] Dateless—endless, having no certain time of expiration.

[6] If we understand expense to be used as analogous to passing away, there is no difficulty in this line. What we expend is gone from us; and so the poet moans the expense of many a vanished sight. Malone thinks that sight is used for sigh; but this is certainly a very strained conjecture.

But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious [1] tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That due of many now is thine alone:
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou (all they) hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time;
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve [2] them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O then vouchsafe me but this loving thought!
"Had my friend's muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchymy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack [3] on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out! alack! he was but one hour mine,
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.[4]

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?

'Tis not enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak,
That heals the wound, and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.[5]
Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be griev'd at that which thou hast done:
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorising thy trespass with compare,
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss,[6]
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are:
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense,
(Thy adverse party is thy advocate,)
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable [7] spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame;
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest [8] spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give,
That I in thy abundance am suffic'd,
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.

How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?

---

[1] Obsequious—funereal.
Reserve—the same as preserve. In Pericles we have—

"Reserve that excellent complexion."

[3] Rack. Tooke, in his full discussion of the meaning of this word ("Diversions of Purley," Part II., chap. iv.), holds that rack means "merely that which is reeked;" and that in all the instances of its use by Shakspere the word signifies vapour. He illustrates the passage before us by quoting the lines in the First Part of Henry IV., where the Prince in some degree justifies his course of profligacy:—

"Yet herein will I imitate the sun,
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him."

[4] Stain and staineth are here used with the signification of a verb neuter. Suns of the world may be stained as heaven's sun is stained.
[5] Cross. The original has loss—evidently a mistake. Malone substituted cross.
[6] Amiss—fault.
[7] Separable—separating.
[8] Dearest. So in Hamlet:—

"Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven!"

O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine, which rhymers invocate;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
When thou art all the better part of me?
What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
And what is 't but mine own, when I praise thee?
Even for this let us divided live,
And our dear love lose name of single one,
That by this separation I may give
That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
(Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,)
And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
By praising him here, who doth hence remain!

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
I cannot blame thee for[1] my love thou usest;
But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits
When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
For still temptation follows where thou art.
Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assail'd;
And when a woman wooes, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till she have prevail'd?
Ah me! but yet thou might'st my seat forbear,
And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
Who lead thee in their riot even there
Where thou art forc'd to break a twofold truth;
Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:—
Thou dost love her, because thou knew'st I love her;
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And, losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;[2]
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And, darkly bright, are bright in dark directed;
Then thou whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so!
How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day,
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
All days are nights to see, till I see thee,
And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee me.[3]

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injurious distance should not stop my way;
For then, despite of space, I would be brought
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then, although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee,
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land,
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought,
To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone,
But that, so much of earth and water wrought,[4]
I must attend time's leisure with my moan;
Receiving naught by elements so slow
But heavy tears, badges of either's woe:

XLV.

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
The first my thought, the other my desire,
These present-absent with swift motion slide.
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life, being made of four, with two alone
Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
Until life's composition be recur'd
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assur'd
Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy[5] picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.

---

[1] For here signifies because.
[2] Unrespected—unregarded.
[3] Thee me—thee to me.
[4] A passage in Henry V. explains this:—"He is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him." The thought is continued in the first line of the Forty-fifth Sonnet, in which Sonnet we also find "My life being made of four." This was the theory of life in Shakspere's time; and Sir Toby, in Twelfth Night, speaks learnedly when he says, "Does not our life consist of the four elements?" Shakspere, however, somewhat laughs at the theory when he makes Sir Andrew reply, "'Faith, so they say; but, I think, it rather consists of eating and drinking."
[5] Thy. The original has their; and it is remarkable that the same typographical error occurs four times in this one Sonnet—a pretty convincing proof that no competent or authorised person superintended the publication. Errors of this sort are very frequent in the original; but we have not thought it necessary to notice them when there can be no doubt of the meaning.

My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,
(A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes,)
But the defendant doth that plea deny,
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
To 'cide[1] this title is impannelled
A quest[2] of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety,[3] and the dear heart's part:
  As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part,
  And my heart's right thine inward love of heart.

XLVII.

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other:
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
With my love's picture then my eye doth feast,
And to the painted banquet bids my heart;
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me;
For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move,
And I am still with them, and they with thee;
  Or if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
  Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.

How careful was I when I took my way,
Each trifle under truest bars to thrust,
That, to my use, it might unused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle closure of my breast,
From whence at pleasure thou may'st come and part;
  And even thence thou wilt be stolen I fear,
  For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.[4]

XLIX.

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
Whenas[5] thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects,
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass,
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity
Against that time do I ensconce[6] me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:
  To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
  Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L.

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek—my weary travel's end—
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
"Thus far the miles are measur'd from thy friend!"
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide,
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side;
  For that same groan doth put this in my mind,
  My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI.

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me thence?
Till I return, of posting is no need.
O what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind;
In winged speed no motion shall I know:
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace;
Therefore desire, of perfect love being made,
Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade;
  Since from thee going he went wilful slow,
  Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure.
Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,[7]
Since seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain[8] jewels in the carcanet.[9]
So is the time that keeps you, as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special-blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
  Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
  Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend?
Since every one hath, every one, one's shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lend.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit[10]
Is poorly imitated after you;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new:
Speak of the spring, and foison of the year;[11]
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear,
And you in every blessed shape we know.
  In all external grace you have some part,
  But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.

O how much more doth beauty beauteous seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give!
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.

[1] 'Cide. Malone explains that this is a contraction of decide. The original reads side.
[2] Quest—inquest or jury.
[3] Moiety—portion.
[4] The same thought is in Venus and Adonis:—
"Rich preys make true men thieves."
[5] Whenas—when.
[6] Ensconce—fortify.
[7] There is a somewhat similar thought in Henry IV., Part I.:—
"My state,
Seldom but sumptuous, show'd like a feast,
And won by rareness much solemnity."
[8] Captain—used adjectively for chief.
[9] Carcanet—necklace.
[10] Counterfeit—portrait.
[11] Foison is plenty; and the foison of the year is the autumn, or plentiful season.

The canker-blooms[1] have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses,
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses:
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade;
Die to themselves. Sweet roses do not so;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made:
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, by[2] verse distils your truth.

LV.

Not marble, not the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone, besmear'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room,
Even in the eyes of all posterity
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force; be it not said,
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might:
So, love, be thou; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new
Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view;
Or call it winter, which, being full of care,
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend
Upon the hours and times of your desire?
I have no precious time at all to spend,
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
When you have bid your servant once adieu;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of naught,
Save, where you are how happy you make those:
So true a fool is love, that in your will (Though you do anything) he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure!
O, let me suffer (being at your beck)
The imprison'd absence of your liberty,
And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list; your charter is so strong,
That you yourself may privilege your time:
Do what you will, to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that which is
Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
Which labouring for invention bear amiss
The second burthen of a former child!
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mended, or whe'r[3] better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O! sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before,
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity, once in the main of light,[4]
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crooked eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And Time, that gave, doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels[5] in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow.
And yet, to times in hope, my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will thy image should keep open
My heavy eyelids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows, like to thee, do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home, into my deeds to pry;
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenor of thy jealousy?
O no! thy love, though much, is not so great;
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I, whilst thou dost wake elsewhere,
From me far off, with others all-too-near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possesseth all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.

[1] Canker-blooms—the flowers of the canker or dog-rose.

[2] By. The word of the original is altered by Malone to my. The change is certainly not wanted.

[3] Whe'r—whether.

[4] Main of light. As the main of waters would signify the great body of waters, so the main of light signifies the mass or flood of light into which a new-born child is launched.

[5] Parallels. We have exactly the same idea in the Second Sonnet:—

"When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field."

Methinks no face so gracious[1] is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account,
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated[2] and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read,
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With Time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworn;
When hours have drain'd his blood, and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night;[3]
And all those beauties, whereof now he's king,
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life.
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them, still green.

LXIV.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defac'd
The rich-proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-ras'd,
And brass eternal, slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the wat'ry main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That Time will come and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'ersways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?
O fearful meditation! where, alack!
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?[4]
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.

Tir'd with all these, for restful death I cry,—
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And purest faith unhappily forsworn,
And gilded honour shamefully misplac'd,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpeted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by limping sway disabled,
And art made tongue-tied by authority,
And folly (doctor-like) controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,[5]
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tir'd with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And lace[6] itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeing of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek
Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live now Nature bankrupt is,
Beggar'd of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.

Thus is his cheek the map of days outworn,
When beauty liv'd and died as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair[7] were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head,
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay:[8]
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself, and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth Nature store,
To show false Art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend:
All tongues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,[9]
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thine outward thus with outward praise is crown'd:
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own,
In other accents do this praise confound,
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.

[1] Gracious—beautiful.

Beated. So in the old copy; and it has been followed by Malone. He suggests that the true word may be bated; but he receives beated as the participle of the verb to beat.

[3] Steepy night. It has been proposed to read sleepy night; but in the Seventh Sonnet we have the same notion of man climbing up the hill of age; and here the idea is also connected with the antithesis of morn and night.

[4] In Troilus and Cressida, Ulysses says—

> "Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
> In which he puts alms for oblivion."

Time's chest and Time's wallet are the same; they are the depositories of what was once great and beautiful, passed away, perished, and forgotten.

[5] Simplicity is here used for folly.

[6] Lace—embellish, ornament.

Fair—beauty.

[8] See Merchant of Venice, Illustrations of Act III., vol. i. p. 222.

[9] Due. The original has end. Tyrwhitt sagaciously made the change, knowing that such a typographical error is not unfrequent. The separate letters drop out at the press; and the workman, who does not stand upon niceties, puts them together again after his own fashion. By the inversion of the u a pretty metamorphosis of due into end is made; and such feats of legerdemain are performed with a dexterity which, however satisfactory to the operator, is not the most agreeable part of an author's experience, if he should ever indulge himself with the perusal of his own writings after they have passed the printer.

They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then (churls) their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,
To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
  But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
  The solve[1] is this,—that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,[2]
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being woo'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Either not assail'd, or victor being charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy, evermore enlarg'd:
  If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
  Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.[3]

LXXI.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse;
But let your love even with my life decay:
  Lest the wise world should look into your moan,
  And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit liv'd in me, that you should love
After my death,—dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I
Than niggard truth would willingly impart:
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
  For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
  And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.

That time of year thou may'st in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou seest the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.

[1] Solve. The original has solye. Malone reads solve in the sense of solution. We have no parallel example of the use of solve as a noun.
[2] Suspect—suspicion. So in King Henry IV., Part II.:—

"If my suspect be false, forgive me."

In me thou seest the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.
  This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong,
  To love that well which thou must leave ere long:

LXXIV.

But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due;
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
  The worth of that, is that which it contains,
  And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.

So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground;
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found:
Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure;
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure:
Sometime all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look;
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Save what is had or must from you be took.
  Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
  Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride?
So far from variation or quick change?
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,[4]
That every word doth almost tell my name,
Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent;
  For as the sun is daily new and old,
  So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVII.

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning may'st thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show,
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth may'st know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.

[3] Owe—own.
[4] A noted weed—a dress known and familiar, through being always the same.

These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXVIII.

So oft have I invok'd thee for my muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
  But thou art all my art, and dost advance
  As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXIX.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace;
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd,
And my sick muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen;
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy cheek; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
  Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
  Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXX.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
But since your worth (wide as the ocean is)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building, and of goodly pride:
  Then if he thrive, and I be cast away,
  The worst was this;—my love was my decay.

LXXXI.

O I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read;
And tongues to be, your being shall rehearse,
When all the breathers of this world are dead:
  You still shall live (such virtue hath my pen)
  Where breath most breathes,—even in the mouths of men.

[1] Modern—trite, common.

LXXXII.

I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And therefore may'st without attaint o'erlook
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject, blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise;
And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love; yet when they have devis'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair wert truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words, by thy true-telling friend;
  And their gross painting might be better us'd
  Where cheeks need blood; in thee it is abus'd.

LXXXIII.

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set.
I found, or thought I found, you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt:
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern [1] quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb;
For I impair not beauty being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
  There lives more life in one of your fair eyes
  Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXIV.

Who is it that says most? which can say more
Than this rich praise,—that you alone are you?
In whose confine immured is the store
Which should example where your equal grew?
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell,
That to his subject lends not some small glory;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired everywhere.
  You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
  Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXV.

My tongue-tied muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compil'd,
Reserve [2] their character with golden quill,
And precious phrase by all the muses fil'd.
I think good thoughts, while others write good words,
And, like unlettered clerk, still cry "Amen"
To every hymn that able spirit affords,
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you prais'd, I say, "'Tis so, 'tis true,"
And to the most of praise add something more;
But that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
  Then others for the breath of words respect,
  Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVI.

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all-too-precious you,

Reserve is here again used for preserve.

That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhearse,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
No, neither he, nor his compeers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence,[1]
As victors, of my silence cannot boast;
I was not sick of any fear from thence.
  But when your countenance fil'd up [2] his line,
  Then lack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

Farewell! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate:
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting?
And for that riches where is my deserving?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
  Thus have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
  In sleep a king, but, waking, no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight,
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attainted;
That thou, in losing me, shalt win much glory:
And I by this will be a gainer too;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
  Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
  That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence:
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt;
Against thy reasons making no defence.
Thou canst not, love, disgrace me half so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace: knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle,[3] and look strange;
Be absent from thy walks; and in my tongue
Thy sweet-beloved name no more shall dwell;
Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong,
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
  For thee, against myself I'll vow debate,
  For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss:
Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purpos'd overthrow.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might;
  And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
  Compar'd with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their body's force;
Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill;
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse
And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
But these particulars are not my measure,
All these I better in one general best.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
Of more delight than hawks and horses be;
And, having thee, of all men's pride I boast.
  Wretched in this alone, that thou may'st take
  All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine;
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end.
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend.
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
O what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
  But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?—
  Thou may'st be false, and yet I know it not:

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ, in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange;
But Heaven in thy creation did decree
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
  How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
  If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow;

[1] Steevens conjectures that this is an allusion to Dr. Dee's pretended intercourse with a familiar spirit.

[2] Fil'd up—gave the last polish. Ben Jonson, in his verses on Shakspere, speaks of his

"Well-torned and true-filed lines."

[3] Strangle. Malone gives several examples of the use of the verb; and Steevens adds, "This uncouth phrase seems to have been a favourite with Shakspere." Why is any word called uncouth which expresses a meaning more clearly and forcibly than any other word? The miserable affectation of the last age, in rejecting words that in sound appeared not to harmonize with the mincing prettiness of polite conversation, emasculated our language; and it will take some time to restore it to its ancient nervousness.

They rightly do inherit Heaven's graces,
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die;
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:
  For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds:
  Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

XCV.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame,
Which, like the canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name!
O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose!
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot dispraise but in a kind of praise;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got
Which for their habitation chose out thee!
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turn to fair, that eyes can see!
  Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege;
  The hardest knife ill-used doth lose his edge.

XCVI.

Some say, thy fault is youth, some wantonness;
Some say, thy grace is youth and gentle sport;
Both grace and faults are lov'd of more and less:
Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.
As on the finger of a throned queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd;
So are those errors that in thee are seen
To truths translated, and for true things deem'd.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate!
How many gazers might'st thou lead away,
If thou wouldst use the strength of all thy state!
  But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
  As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVII.

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen!
What old December's bareness everywhere!
And yet this time remov'd[1] was summer's time;
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease:
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
  Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
  That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

XCVIII.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew:
Nor did I wonder at the lilies white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.
  Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
  As with your shadow I with these did play:

[1] Malone explains this as, "This time in which I was remote or absent from thee."

XCIX.

The forward violet thus did I chide;—
Sweet thief, whence didst thou steal thy sweet that smells,
If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dyed.
The lily I condemned for thy hand,
And buds of marjoram had stolen thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both,
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
  More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
  But sweet or colour it had stolen from thee.

C.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forgett'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power, to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, resty Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised everywhere.
  Give my love fame faster than Time wastes life;
  So thou prevent'st his scythe and crooked knife.

CI.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dyed?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So dost thou too, and therein dignified.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not haply say,
"Truth needs no colour with his colour fix'd,
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd?"
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for it lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.
  Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
  To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

CII.

My love is strengthen'd, though more weak in seeming;
I love not less, though less the show appear;
That love is merchandiz'd, whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish everywhere.
Our love was new, and then but in the spring,
When I was wont to greet it with my lays;
As Philomel in summer's front doth sing,
And stops her pipe in growth of riper days:
Not that the summer is less pleasant now
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burthens every bough,
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.
  Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
  Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.

Alack! what poverty my Muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument, all bare, is of more worth,
Than when it hath my added praise beside.
O blame me not if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend,
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
  And more, much more, than in my verse can sit,
  Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.

CIV.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were when first your eye I eyed,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters' cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
In process of the seasons have I seen;
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceiv'd.
  For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred,
  Ere you were born, was beauty's summer dead.

CV.

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be,
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse, to constancy confin'd,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind, and true, is all my argument,
Fair, kind, and true, varying to other words;
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope affords.
  Fair, kind, and true, have often liv'd alone,
  Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

CVI.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme,
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
Then in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
  For we, which now behold these present days,
  Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a confin'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Incertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,[1]
Since spite of him I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes.
  And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
  When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which hath not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what new[2] to register,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same;
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's fresh case
Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page;
  Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
  Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify!
As easy might I from myself depart,
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
That is my home of love: if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels, I return again;
Just to the time, not with the time exchang'd,—
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
  For nothing this wide universe I call,
  Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley[3] to the view,
Gor'd[4] mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new.
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
These blenches[5] gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, have[6] what shall have no end:
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A God in love, to whom I am confin'd.

[1] Subscribes—submits, acknowledges as a superior.
[2] New. The original has now.
[3] Motley. Jaques, in As You Like It, exclaims, "Invest me in my motley." Motley was the dress of the domestic fool, or jester; and thus the buffoon himself came to be called a motley. Jaques, addressing Touchstone, says, "Will you be married, Motley?"
[4] Gor'd—wounded. In Hamlet we have—

"I have a voice and precedent of peace
To keep my name ungor'd."

[5] Blenches—deviations.
[6] Have. This is the word of the old copy. An altered reading is—

"Now all is done, save what shall have no end."

Malone says the original reading is unintelligible. His conjectural reading, which Tyrwhitt recommended, appears to us more so. "Now all is done" clearly applies to the blenches, the worse essays; but the poet then adds, "have (thou) what shall have no end"—my constant affection, my undivided friendship.

Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide,
Than public means, which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd;
Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eysell,[1] 'gainst my strong infection;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance, to correct correction.
Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'ergreen my bad, my good allow?[2]
You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your tongue;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.[3]
In so profound abysm I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense;—
You are so strongly in my purpose bred,
That all the world besides methinks are dead.[4]

CXIII.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind;
And that which governs me to go about
Doth part his function, and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out;
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, or flower, or shape, which it doth latch;[5]
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch;
For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour,[6] or deformed'st creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow, or dove, it shapes them to your feature.
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine untrue.[7]

CXIV.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery,
Or whether shall I say mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchymy,
To make of monsters and things indigest
Such cherubins as your sweet self resemble,
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble?
O, 'tis the first; 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up:
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is 'greeing,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup:
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

CXV.

Those lines that I before have writ, do lie;
Even those that said I could not love you dearer;
Yet then my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things;
Alas! why, fearing of Time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, "Now I love you best,"
When I was certain o'er incertainty,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest?
Love is a babe; then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow?

CXVI.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove:
O no; it is an ever-fixed mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark,
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be taken.
Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out even to the edge of doom.
If this be error, and upon me prov'd,
I never writ, nor no man ever lov'd.

CXVII.

Accuse me thus; that I have scanted all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay;
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to time your own dear-purchas'd right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
And on just proof surmise accumulate,
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate:
Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXVIII.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager[8] compounds we our palate urge;
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness, when we purge;

---

[1] Eysell—vinegar.
[2] Allow—approve.
[3] This passage is obscure, and there is probably some slight misprint. Steevens says, with his usual amenity, "The meaning of this purblind and obscure stuff seems to be—'You are the only person who has the power to change my stubborn resolution, either to what is right, or to what is wrong.'" We have little doubt that something like this is the meaning; but why has not this great conjectural critic, instead of calling out "purblind and obscure stuff," tried his hand at some slight emendation? He is venturous enough when the text is clear. We might read thus:—

"That my steel'd sense so changes right or wrong;"

or we might read, as Malone has proposed, "E'er changes."

[4] This line presents in the old copy one of the many examples of how little the context was heeded. We there find—

"That all the world besides me thinks y' are dead."

Malone changes this to—

"That all the world besides methinks they are dead."

We adopt Mr. Dyce's first reading.
[5] Latch. The original has lack. Malone substituted latch, which signifies to lay hold of.
[6] Favour—countenance.
[7] Untrue is here used as a substantive. So in Measure for Measure:—

"Say what you can, my false outweighs your true.

[8] Eager—sour; the French aigre.

Even so, being full of your ne'er-cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meetness
To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needing.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured,
And brought to medicine a healthful state,
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured.
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXIX.

What potions have I drunk of Siren tears,
Distill'd from limbecs foul as hell within,
Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
Still losing when I saw myself to win!
What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,[1]
In the distraction of this madding fever!
O benefit of ill! now I find true
That better is by evil still made better;
And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
So I return rebuk'd to my content,
And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXX.

That you were once unkind, befriends me now,
And for that sorrow, which I then did feel,
Needs must I under my transgression bow,
Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
For if you were by my unkindness shaken,
As I by yours, you have pass'd a hell of time;
And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.
O that our night of woe might have remember'd[2]
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd
The humble salve which wounded bosoms fits!
But that your trespass now becomes a fee;
Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

CXXI.

'Tis better to be vile than vile esteem'd,
When not to be receives reproach of being,
And the just pleasure lost, which is so deem'd
Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing.
For why should others' false adulterate eyes
Give salutation to my sportive blood?
Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
No.—I am that I am; and they that level
At my abuses, reckon up their own:
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel;[3]
By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
Unless this general evil they maintain,—
All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXII.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory,
Which shall above that idle rank remain,
Beyond all date, even to eternity:
Or at the least so long as brain and heart
Have faculty by nature to subsist;
Till each to raz'd oblivion yield his part
Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.
That poor retention could not so much hold,[4]
Nor need I tallies thy dear love to score;
Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
To trust those tables that receive thee more:
To keep an adjunct to remember thee,
Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXIII.

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
Thy pyramids built up with newer might
To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
They are but dressings of a former sight.
Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old;
And rather make them born to our desire,
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Thy registers and thee I both defy,
Not wondering at the present nor the past;
For thy records and what we see do lie,
Made more or less by thy continual haste:
This I do vow, and this shall ever be,
I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee:

CXXIV.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
It might for Fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate,
Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers gather'd.
No, it was builded far from accident;
It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
Under the blow of thralled discontent,
Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls:
It fears not policy, that heretic,
Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
But all alone stands hugely politic,
That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.
To this I witness call the fools of time,
Which die for goodness, who have liv'd for crime.

CXXV.

Were it aught to me I bore the canopy,
With my extern the outward honouring,
Or laid great bases for eternity,
Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent,
For compound sweet foregoing simple savour,
Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
No;—let me be obsequious in thy heart,
And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds,[5] knows no art,
But mutual render, only me for thee.

---

[1] Fitted—subjected to fits.
[2] Remember'd—reminded.
[3] Bevel—bent in an angle.
[4] Malone says, "That poor retention is the table-book given to him by his friend, incapable of retaining, or rather of containing, so much as the tablet of the brain."
[5] Seconds. The only note on the passage in the variorum editions is that of Steevens:—"I am just informed by an old lady that seconds is a provincial term for the second kind of flour, which is collected after the smaller bran is sifted. That our author's oblation was pure, unmixed with baser matter, is all that he meant to say." Mr. Dyce called this note "preposterously absurd." Steevens, however, knew what he was doing. He mentions the flour, as in almost every other note upon the Sonnets, to throw discredit upon compositions with which he could not sympathize. He had a sharp, cunning, pettifogging mind; and he knew many prosaic things well enough. He knew that a second in a duel, a seconder in a debate, a secondary in ecclesiastical affairs, meant one next to the principal. The poet's friend has his chief oblation; no seconds, or inferior persons, are mixed up with his tribute of affection.

In the copy of the Sonnets in the Bodleian Library, formerly belonging to Malone (and which is bound in the same volume with the Lucrece, &c.), is a very cleverly drawn caricature representing Shakspere addressing a periwig-pated old fellow in these lines:—

"If thou couldst, Doctor, cast
The water of my Sonnets, find their disease,
Or purge my Editor till he understood them,
I would applaud thee."

Under this Malone has written, "Mr. Steevens borrowed this volume from me in 1779, to peruse the 'Rape of Lucrece,' in the original edition, of which he was not possessed. When he returned it he made this drawing. I was then confined by a sore throat, and attended by Mr. Atkinson, the apothecary, of whom the above figure, whom Shakspeare addresses, is a caricature."

Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul,
When most impeach'd, stands least in thy control.

CXXVI.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour;
Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
Thy lovers withering, as thy sweet self grow'st!
If Nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
May time disgrace, and wretched minutes kill.
Yet fear her, O thou minion of her pleasure;
She may detain, but not still keep her treasure:
Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee.

CXXVII.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
But now is black beauty's successive heir,
And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
Fairing the foul with art's false borrow'd face,
Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy hour,
But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
Therefore my mistress' eyes are raven black,
Her eyes so suited; and they mourners seem
At such, who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
Slandering creation with a false esteem:
Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
That every tongue says, beauty should look so.

CXXVIII.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wiry concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks,[1] that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips,
O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more bless'd than living lips.
Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

CXXIX.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
Enjoy'd no sooner, but despised straight;
Past reason hunted; and no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait,
On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof,—and prov'd, a very woe;
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream:
All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

[1] Jacks—the small hammers, moved by the keys, which strike the strings of a virginal. In the comedy of "Ram Alley" we have—

"Where be these rascals that skip up and down
Like virginal jacks?"

CXXX.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red:
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak,—yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go,—
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground;
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she belied with false compare.

CXXXI.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st to my dear doting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say that thee behold,
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say they err, I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone,
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black, save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXII.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart torments me with disdain,
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the grey cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well beseem thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear beauty herself is black,
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is 't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engross'd;
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torment thrice three-fold thus to be cross'd.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my gaol:
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.

So now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will;
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:

But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learn'd but, surety-like, to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute[1] of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that putt'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend, came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me;
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy will,
And will to boot, and will in over-plus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in will, add to thy will
One will of mine, to make thy large will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one,
In things of great receipt with ease we prove;
Among a number one is reckon'd none.
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy stores' account I one must be,
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee;
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lov'st me,—for my name is Will.

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks,
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot,[2]
Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?
Or mine eyes, seeing this, say this is not,
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd,
And to this false plague are they now transferr'd.

CXXXVIII.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies;
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue;
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress.
But wherefore says she not she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I lie with her, and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.[3]

CXXXIX.

O, call not me to justify the wrong
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere; but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside.
What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy might
Is more than my o'erpress'd defence can 'bide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies;
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me outright with looks, and rid my pain.

CXL.

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love, to tell me so;
(As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know
For, if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be.
That I may not be so, nor thou belied,
Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXLI.

In faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleas'd to dote.
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted;
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits, nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who leaves unsway'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be:
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

---

[1] Statute—security, or obligation.

[2] See note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act II. Sc. I., vol. i. p. 47.

[3] There are many variations in the copy of this Sonnet as originally published in The Passionate Pilgrim. The differences are of that character which would lead us to believe that the author, after the lapse of a few years, wrote it out a second time from memory. The variations are certainly not those of a transcriber:—

"When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies,
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unskilful in the world's false forgeries.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although I know my years be past the best,
I smiling credit her false-speaking tongue,
Outfacing faults in love with love's ill rest.
But wherefore says my love that she is young?
And wherefore say not I that I am old?
O, love's best habit is a soothing tongue,
And age in love loves not to have years told:
Therefore I'll lie with love, and love with me,
Since that our faults in love thus smother'd be."

CXLII.

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving:
O, but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving;
Or, if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine;
Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents.
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lov'st those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that, when it grows,
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example may'st thou be denied!

CXLIII.

Lo, as a careful housewife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe, and makes all swift despatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay;
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chace,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I thy babe chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou may'st have thy Will,
If thou turn back, and my loud crying still.

CXLIV.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest[1] me still;
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worser spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turn'd fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But, being both from me, both to each friend,
I guess one angel in another's hell.
Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.[2]

CXLV.

Those lips that Love's own hand did make
Breath'd forth the sound that said, "I hate,"
To me that languish'd for her sake:
But when she saw my woeful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
Was used in giving gentle doom;
And taught it thus anew to greet:
"I hate" she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day
Doth follow night, who like a fiend
From heaven to hell is flown away.
"I hate" from hate away she threw,
And sav'd my life, saying—"not you."

CXLVI.

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Fool'd by these rebel powers that thee array,[3]
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on men,
And, Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVII.

My love is as a fever, longing still
For that which longer nurseth the disease;
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve
Desire is death, which physic did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as mad men's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLVIII.

O me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures[4] falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
How can it? O how can Love's eye be true,
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel then though I mistake my view;
The sun itself sees not till heaven clears.
O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I, against myself, with thee partake?[5]
Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hateth thee that I do call my friend.
On whom frown'st thou that I do fawn upon
Nay, if thou low'rst on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present moan?

---

[1] Suggest—tempt.

[2] The variations in the copy of this Sonnet in The Passionate Pilgrim are very slight. In the eighth line, instead of foul pride, we have fair pride; in the eleventh, instead of from me, we have to me; in the thirteenth, instead of Yet this shall I ne'er know, we have The truth I shall not know.

[3] In the original copy we have the following reading:—

"Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
My sinful earth these rebel powers that thee array."

The received reading is a conjectural emendation by Malone. When the change in a text must rest wholly on conjecture, and some change is absolutely necessary, it appears to us that the change which has been established is in most cases better than any improvement.

[4] Censures—judges, estimates.

[5] Partake—take part. A partaker was a confederate.

What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
  But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
  Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

CL.

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might,
With insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou shouldst not abhor my state;
  If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
  More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

CLI.

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,[1]
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
For thou betraying me, I do betray
My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
But, rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
  No want of conscience hold it that I call
  Her—love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

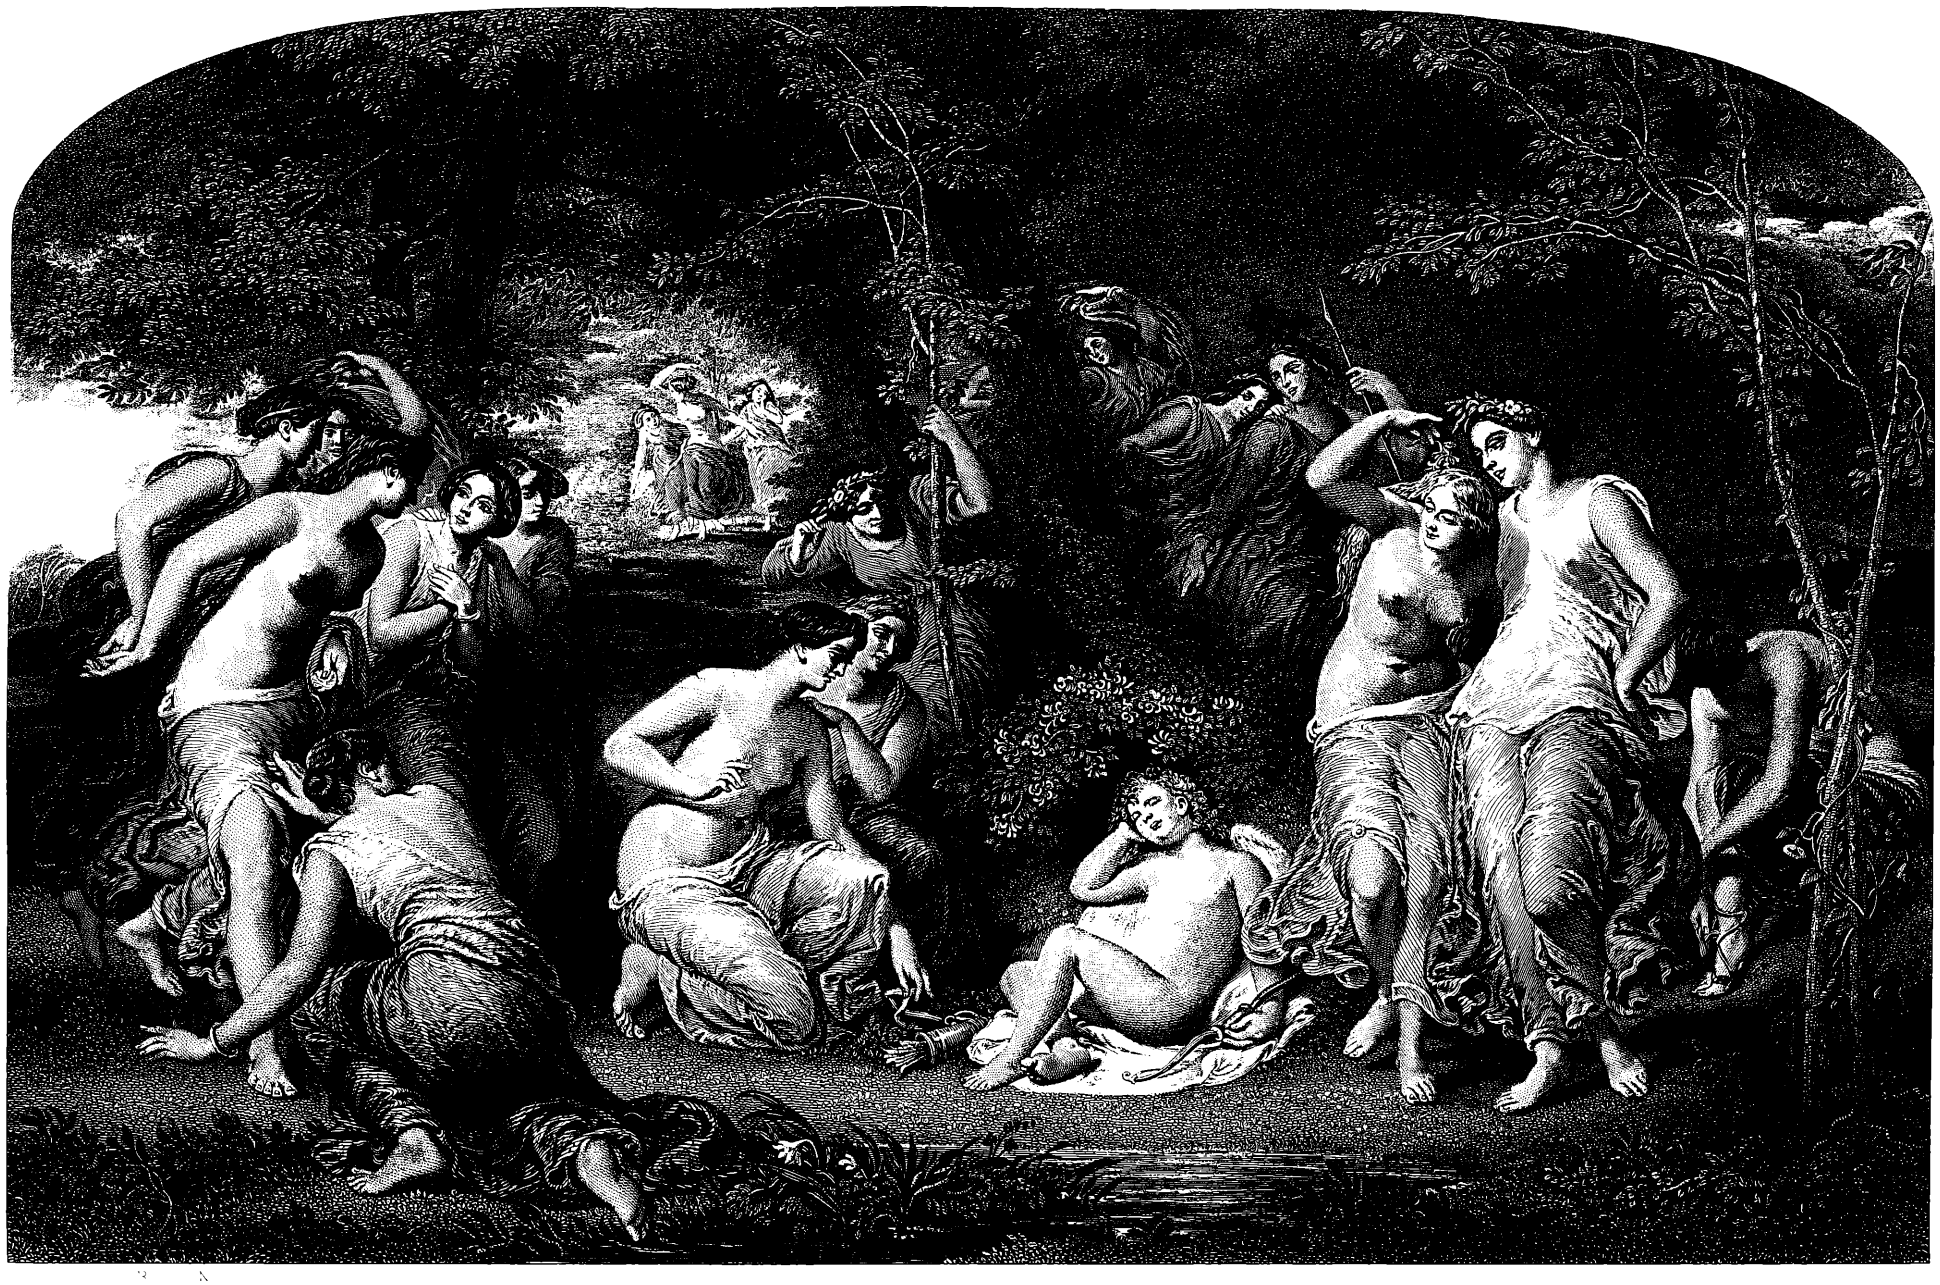
CLII.

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith torn,
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee,
When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
  For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur'd I,
  To swear, against the truth, so foul a lie!

CLIII.

Cupid lay by his brand, and fell asleep:
A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove
Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye Love's brand new-fir'd,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I, sick withal, the help of bath desir'd,
And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
  But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
  Where Cupid got new fire,—my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.



The little love-god, lying once asleep,
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
Which from Love's fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and healthful remedy
For men diseas'd; but I, my mistress' thrall,
  Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
  Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

FROM off a hill whose concave womb re-worded[2]
A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I laid[3] to list the sad-tun'd tale:
Ere long espied a fickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.

Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from the sun,
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcase of a beauty spent and done.
Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of Heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of sear'd age.

[1] Amiss—fault.
[2] Re-worded—echoed.
[3] Laid. So the original. But it is usually more correctly printed lay. The idiomatic grammar of Shakspere's age ought not to be removed.

Stadt-
bücherei
Elbing

Oft did she heave her napkin[1] to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters,[1]
Laund'ring[3] the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted[4] in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe,
In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her levell'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;[5]
Sometimes diverted their poor balls are tied
To th' orbed[6] earth: sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
To every place at once, and nowhere fix'd,
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.

Her hair, nor loose, nor tied in formal plat,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd[7] hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside:
Some in her threaden fillet still did bide,
And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.

A thousand favours from a maund[8] she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,[9]
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margent she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet,
Or monarch's hands, that let not bounty fall
Where want cries "some," but where excess begs all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet mo[10] letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With sleided silk[11] feat and affectedly
Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often gave[12] to tear;
Cried, "O false blood! thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!"
This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh,
Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours, observed as they flew,[13]
Towards this afflicted fancy[14] fastly drew;
And, privileg'd by age, desires to know,
In brief, the grounds and motives of her woe.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,[15]
And comely-distant sits he by her side;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide:
If that from him there may be aught applied
Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
'Tis promis'd in the charity of age.

"Father," she says, "though in me you behold
The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power:
I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
Fresh to myself, if I had self-applied
Love to myself, and to no love beside.

"But woe is me! too early I attended
A youthful suit (it was to gain my grace)
Of one[16] by nature's outwards so commended,
That maiden's eyes stuck over all his face:
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodg'd, and newly deified.

"His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find:
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind;
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise was sawn.[17]

"Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phœnix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet, on that termless skin,
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web it seem'd to wear;
Yet show'd his visage[18] by that cost more[19] dear;
And nice affections wavering stood in doubt
If best 'twere as it was, or best without.

"His qualities were beauteous as his form,
For maiden-tongued he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov'd him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.
His rudeness so with his authoriz'd youth
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

"Well could he ride, and often men would say
That horse his mettle from his rider takes:
Proud of subjection, noble by the sway,

Napkin—handkerchief. Emilia says of Desdemona's fatal handkerchief—

"I am glad I have found this napkin."

Conceited characters—fanciful figures worked on the handkerchief.

[3] Laund'ring—washing.

[4] Pelleted—formed into pellets, or small balls.

[5] Shakspere often employs the metaphor of a piece of ordnance; but what in his plays is generally a slight allusion here becomes a somewhat quaint conceit.

[6] Th' orbed. We retain orbed as a dissyllable, according to the original. Mr. Dyce has the orb'd.

[7] Sheav'd—made of straw collected from sheaves.

[8] Maund—a basket. The word is used in the old translation of the Bible.

[9] Bedded. So the original, the word probably meaning jet embedded, or set, in some other substance. Steevens has beaded jet—jet formed into beads—which Mr. Dyce adopts.

[10] Mo—more. This word is now invariably printed more. It occurs in subsequent stanzas. Why should we destroy this little archaic beauty by a rage for modernising?

[11] Sleided silk. The commentators explain this as "untwisted silk." In the chorus to the fourth act of Pericles, Marina is pictured—

"When she weav'd the sleided silk
With fingers long, small, white as milk.

Percy, in a note on this passage, says, "Untwisted silk, prepared to be used in the weaver's sley." The first part of this description is certainly not correct. The silk is not untwisted, for it must be spun before it is woven; and a strong twisted silk is exactly what was required when letters were to be sealed "feat" (neatly) "to curious secrecy." In Mr. Ramsay's Introduction to his valuable edition of the Paston Letters the old mode of sealing a letter is clearly described:—"It was carefully folded, and fastened at the end by a sort of paper strap, upon which the seal was affixed; and under the seal a string, a silk thread, or even a straw, was frequently placed running around the letter."

[12] Gave. So the original. Malone changes the word to 'gan. This appears to us, although it has the sanction of Mr. Dyce's adoption, an unnecessary change. Gave is here used in the sense of gave the mind to, contemplated, made a movement towards, inclined to. Shakspere has several times "my mind gave me;" and the word may therefore, we think, stand alone here as expressing inclination.

[13] Malone, by making the sentence parenthetical which begins at "Sometime a blusterer," and ends at "swiftest hours," causes the reverend man's attention to be drawn to the scattered fragments of letters as they flew—a very snow-storm of letters. Surely this is nonsense!

"The swiftest hours, observed as they flew,"

clearly show that the reverend man, although he had been engaged in the ruffle, in the turmoil, of the court and city, had not suffered the swiftest hours to pass unobserved. He was a man of experience, and was thus qualified to give advice.

[14] Fancy is often used by Shakspere in the sense of love; but here it means one that is possessed by fancy.

[15] Bat—club.

[16] Of one—the original reads O one.

[17] Sawn. Malone explains this as seen; but Boswell says that the word means sown, and that it is still so pronounced in Scotland.

[18] Visage is the inverted nominative case to show'd.

[19] More. So the original: in all the modern editions we have most.

What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes!
And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

"But quickly on this side the verdict went;
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament,
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case:[1]
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Can[2] for additions; yet their purpos'd trim
Piec'd not his grace, but were all grac'd by him.

"So on the tip of his subduing tongue
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the laugher weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will;

"That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted:
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted;
And dialogued for him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

"Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, theirs in thought assign'd;
And labouring in mo pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe them:[3]

"So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woeful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, (not in part,)
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stalk, and gave him all my flower.

"Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the foil
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

"But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-pass'd perils in her way?
Counsel may stop awhile what will not stay
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

"Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof,
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behoof.
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof!
The one a palate hath that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry It is thy last.

"For further I could say, This man's untrue,
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew,
Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
Thought[4] characters and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulterate heart.

"And long upon these terms I held my city,
Till thus he 'gan besiege me: 'Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to you sworn, to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.

"'All my offences that abroad you see
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not; with acture[5] they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find;
And so much less of shame in me remains,
By how much of me their reproach contains.

"'Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,[6]
Or any of my leisures ever charm'd:
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd;
Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign'd, commanding in his monarchy.

"'Look here what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that they their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

"'And lo! behold these talents[7] of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,[8]
I have receiv'd from many a several fair,
(Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd,)
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sonnets that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.

"'The diamond, why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invis'd[9] properties did tend;
The deep-green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend

---

[1] Case—outward show.

[2] Can is the original reading; but Malone changed it to came, and he justifies the change by a passage in Macbeth, Act I. Sc. III., where he supposes the same mistake occurred. In that passage we did not receive the proposed correction; nor do we think it necessary to receive it here. Can is constantly used by the old writers, especially by Spenser, in the sense of began; and that sense, began for additions, is as intelligible as came for additions. For is used in the sense of as.

[3] There is a similar sarcastic thought in Timon, where the misanthrope, addressing himself to the gold he had found, says—

"Thou'lt go, strong thief,
When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand."

[4] Malone—and he is followed in all modern editions—puts a comma after thought, and says, "It is here, I believe, a substantive." Surely thought is a verb. We have a regular sequence of verbs—heard—saw—knew—thought. How can thought be art? The art is in the expression of the thoughts by "characters and words." He who said, "Words were given us to conceal our thoughts," is a better commentator upon the passage than Malone.

[5] Acture is explained as synonymous with action.

[6] Teen—grief.

[7] Talents is here used in the sense of something precious.

[8] Impleach'd—interwoven.

[9] Invis'd—invisible.

With objects manifold; each several stone,
With wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.

"'Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensiv'd and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I hoard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you enpatron me.

"'O then advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me your minister, for you obeys,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in combined sums.

"'Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit[1] in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings[2] made the blossoms[3] dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,[4]
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

"'But O, my sweet, what labour is't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?
Paling[5] the place which did no form receive,
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyves:
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle 'scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

"'O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly:
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procur'd.

"'How mighty then you are, O hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congest,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

"'My parts had power to charm a sacred sun,
Who, disciplin'd and dieted[6] in grace,
Believ'd her eyes when they to assail begun,
All vows and consecrations giving place.
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

"'When thou impressest, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth,
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame!
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense, 'gainst shame,
And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aloes of all forces, shocks, and fears.

"'Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine,
And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath,
That shall prefer and undertake my troth.'

"This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were levell'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd apace:
O how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate[7] the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue encloses.

"O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear!
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O cleft effect![8] cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extincture hath!

"For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears;
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards, and civil[9] fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

"In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels,[10] all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives,
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows;

"That not a heart which in his level came
Could scape the hail of his all hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And, veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim:
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim;
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.

"Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd,
That the unexperienc'd gave the tempter place,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd?
Ah me! I fell; and yet do question make
What I should do again for such a sake.

"O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd,[11]
Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!"

---

[1] Suit. "The noble suit in court" is, we think, the suit made to her in court. Mr. Dyce says suitors.

[2] Havings. Malone receives this as accomplishments; Mr. Dyce as fortune.

[3] Blossoms—young men, the flower of the nobility.

[4] Of richest coat—of highest descent.

Paling. In the old copy, playing. Malone's emendation of paling is sensible as well as ingenious.

[6] And dieted. The old copy reads I died. A correspondent suggested the change to Malone.

[7] Gate—got, procured.

[8] O cleft effect! The reading of the original is, Or, cleft effect. Malone substituted O cleft effect!

[9] Civil—decorous.

[10] Cautels—deceitful purposes.

[11] Ow'd—owned, his own.

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

DID not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world could not hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee;
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then, thou fair sun, that on this earth doth shine,
Exhale this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To lose an oath, to win a paradise?[1]

II.

Sweet Cytherea, sitting by a brook
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh, and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there:
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refus'd to take her figur'd proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward;
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too froward!

III.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like osiers bow'd.
Study his bias leaves, and makes his books thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live that art can comprehend.
If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,
Which (not to anger bent) is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O do not love that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.[2]

IV.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cytherea, all in love forlorn,
A longing tarriance for Adonis made,
Under an osier growing by a brook,
A brook where Adon used to cool his spleen.
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes, and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly as this queen on him:
He, spying her, bounc'd in, whereas he stood;
O Jove, quoth she, why was not I a flood?

V.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle;
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is, brittle;
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A lily pale, with damask die to grace her,
None fairer, nor none falser to deface her.

Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she coin'd,
Dreading my love, the loss thereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.

She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameth,
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw outburneth;
She fram'd the love, and yet she foil'd the framing,
She bade love last, and yet she fell a turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VI.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,
Because thou lov'st the one, and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such,
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lov'st to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phœbus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd,
Whenas himself to singing he betakes.

[1] The foregoing Sonnet appears, with some variations, in Love's Labour's Lost, the first edition of which was printed in 1598. We give the lines in which the variations occur:—

"'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument."
"Vows are but breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then thou fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,
Exhal'st this vapour vow; in thee it is."

The text of the play is evidently superior to that in The Passionate Pilgrim.

[2] This Sonnet also occurs in Love's Labour's Lost, in which copy there are variations in several lines. In the second we read, "Ah, never faith;" in the third, "faithful prove;" in the fourth, "were oaks;" in the sixth, "would comprehend;" in the eleventh, "lightning bears." The concluding lines are as follow:—

Celestial as thou art, oh pardon, love, this wrong,
That sings heaven's praise with such an earthly tongue.

One god is god of both, as poets feign;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

VII.

Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love,[1]
* * * * * *
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a youngster proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and hounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds;
Once, quoth she, did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
See in my thigh, quoth she, here was the sore:
She showed hers; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

VIII.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon vaded,[2]
Pluck'd in the bud and vaded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alack! too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!
Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.

I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why? thou left'st me nothing in thy will.
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave;
For why? I craved nothing of thee still:
O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee;
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

IX.

Venus, with Adonis[3] sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as he fell to her, she fell to him.
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me;
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms:
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god unlac'd me;
As if the boy should use like loving charms.
Even thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips,
And with her lips on his did act the seizure;
And as she fetched breath, away he skips,
And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
Ah! that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clip me till I run away!

X.

Crabbed age and youth
Cannot live together;
Youth is full of pleasance,
Age is full of care:
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather;
Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short,
Youth is nimble, age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young!
Age, I do defy thee;
O sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinks thou stay'st too long.

XI.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good,
A shining gloss, that vadeth suddenly;
A flower that dies, when first it 'gins to bud;
A brittle glass, that's broken presently:
A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as goods lost are seld or never found,
As vaded gloss no rubbing will refresh,
As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,[4]
So beauty, blemish'd once, for ever's lost,
In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XII.

Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share:
She bade good night, that kept my rest away
And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.
Farewell, quoth she, and come again to-morrow
Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether:
'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
'T may be, again to make me wander thither:
Wander, a word for shadows like myself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

XIII.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.
Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark,
And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;

For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty,
And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow
For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
But now are minutes added to the hours;
To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;[5]
Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
Pack night, peep day; good day, of night now borrow;
Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

[1] The second line is lost.

[2] Vaded—faded. This form of the word often occurs in Shakspere, and has been too frequently changed in reprints.

[3] This Sonnet is found in "Fidessa," by B. Griffin (1596). There are great variations in that copy. Amongst others we have the epithet young before Adonis. If we make a pause after Venus, the epithet is not necessary to the metre. The fourth line is given more metrically in "Fidessa:"—

"And as he fell to her, so she fell to him."

[4] In the twenty-ninth volume of the Gentleman's Magazine a copy of this poem is given, as from an ancient manuscript, in which there are the following variations:—

"And as goods lost are seld or never found,
As faded gloss no rubbing will excite,
As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can unite."

[5] A moon. The original has an hour—evidently a misprint. The emendation of moon, in the sense of month, is by Steevens, and it ought to atone for some faults of the commentator.

SONNETS TO SUNDRY NOTES OF MUSIC.

XIV.

It was a lording's daughter, the fairest one of three,
That liked of her master as well as well might be.
Till looking on an Englishman, the fairest that eye could see,
  Her fancy fell a turning.
Long was the combat doubtful, that love with love did fight,
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:
To put in practice either, alas it was a spite
  Unto the silly damsel.
But one must be refused, more mickle was the pain,
That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain,
For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain:
  Alas, she could not help it!
Thus art, with arms contending, was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away;
Then lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady gay;
  For now my song is ended.

XV.

On a day (alack the day!),
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow;
Air, would I might triumph so!
But, alas, my hand hath sworn
Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet,
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiope were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.[1]

XVI.

My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
  All is amiss:
Love is dying,
Faith's defying,
Heart's denying,
  Causer of this.[2]
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot:
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss;
  O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame!
For now I see,
Inconstancy
  More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
All fears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
  Living in thrall
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
(O cruel speeding!)
  Fraughted with gall.
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal,[3]
My wether's bell rings doleful knell;
My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
With sighs so deep,
Procures[4] to weep,
  In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight.
How sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
  Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not
  Forth; they die:[5]
Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
  Fearfully.
All our pleasure known to us poor swains,
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for Love is dead.
Farewell, sweet lass,[6]
Thy like ne'er was
  For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan:[7]
Poor Coridon
Must live alone,
  Other help for him I see that there is none.

XVII.

Whenas thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou shouldst strike,[8]
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial might:[9]
  Take counsel of some wiser head,
  Neither too young, nor yet unwed.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell;
(A cripple soon can find a halt:)
  But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
  And set her person forth to sell.[10]

---

[1] This beautiful little poem also occurs in Love's Labour's Lost. In that copy, in the second line, we find "is every May." Every, which is repeated in the folio of 1623, is clearly a mistake. In the eleventh line we have—

"But, alack, my hand is sworn."

In the play there is a couplet not found in The Passionate Pilgrim:—

"Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee."

These lines precede "Thou for whom."

[2] We have two other ancient copies of this poem—one in "England's Helicon" (1600); the other in a collection of Madrigals by Thomas Weelkes (1597). In "England's Helicon" these lines are thus given:—

"Love is denying, Faith is defying; Hearts renging (renying), causer of this."

[3] No deal—in no degree. Some deal and no deal were common expressions.

[4] Procures. The curtail dog is the nominative case to this verb.

[5] The reading in Weelkes's Madrigals is an improvement of this passage:—

"Loud bells ring not Cheerfully."

[6] Lass. This is the reading of Weelkes. The Passionate Pilgrim has love.

[7] Moan. This is the reading in "England's Helicon." The Passionate Pilgrim has woe.

[8] Strike. So the original. Mr. Dyce, who seldom indulges in conjectural emendation, alters the word to smite, "for the sake of the rhyme." This we think is scarcely allowable; for there are many examples of loose rhymes in these little poems. In the seventh stanza of this poem we have nought to rhyme with oft.

[9] Fancy is here used as love, and might as power. Steevens, mischievously we should imagine, changed partial might to partial tike; and Malone adopts this reading, which makes Cupid a bulldog.

[10] Sell. The reading of The Passionate Pilgrim is sale. A manuscript in the possession of Mr. Lysons gives us sell.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm[1] ere night;
And then too late she will repent,
That thus dissembled her delight;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say:
"Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then."

And to her will frame all thy ways;
Spare not to spend,—and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear:
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew:
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin, and never for to saint:
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age shall them attaint.[2]
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But soft; enough,—too much I fear,
Lest that my mistress hear my song;
She'll not stick to round me i' th' ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long:
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

XVIII.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yields.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me, and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.[3]

XIX.

As it fell upon a day,
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove[4] of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring;
Everything did banish moan,
Save the nightingale alone:
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till[5] a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull'st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity:
Fie, fie, fie, now would she cry,
Teru, Teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain,
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her griefs so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah! thought I, thou mourn'st in vain;
None take pity on thy pain:
Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee;
Ruthless bears,[6] they will not cheer thee.
King Pandion, he is dead;
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead;
All thy fellow-birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
[Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.[7]]
Whilst as fickle fortune smil'd,
Thou and I were both beguil'd.
Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find.
Every man will be thy friend,
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call:
And with such-like flattering,
"Pity but he were a king."
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
If to women he be bent,
They have him at commandement;
But if fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown:
They that fawn'd on him before,
Use his company no more.

[1] Calm is the reading of The Passionate Pilgrim; the manuscript just mentioned has clear.

[2] These four lines are thus given in Mr. Lysons's manuscript:—

"Think, women love to match with men,
And not to live so like a saint:
Here is no heaven; they holy then
Begin, when age doth them attaint."

The one copy is somewhat more intelligible than the other.

[3] We insert this poem in the order in which it appears in The Passionate Pilgrim.

[4] This poem is also incompletely printed in "England's Helicon;" where it bears the signature Ignoto. There are some variations in the twenty-eight lines there given, as in the case before us, of grove in The Passionate Pilgrim, which in "England's Helicon" is group.

[5] Up-till. This is given against in "England's Helicon."

[6] Bears. In "England's Helicon," beasts.

[7] The poem in "England's Helicon" here ends; but the two lines with which it concludes are wanting in The Passionate Pilgrim.

He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep:
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

SONG.

Take, oh, take those lips away,
  That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes, the break of day,
  Lights that do mislead the morn
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.

Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow,
  Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
  Are of those that April wears.
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.[1]

VERSES AMONG THE ADDITIONAL POEMS TO CHESTER'S LOVE'S MARTYR, 1601.

Let the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,[2]
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou, shrieking harbinger,
Foul pre-currer of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near.

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,[3]
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou, treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phœnix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen
'Twixt the turtle and his queen;
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phœnix' sight:
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together;
To themselves yet either-neither,
Simple were so well compounded:

That it cried how true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne[4]
To the phœnix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love;
As chorus to their tragic scene.

V

THRENOS.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclos'd in cinders lie.

Death is now the phœnix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity:—
'Twas not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be:
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.

---

[1] The collection entitled The Passionate Pilgrim, &c., ends with the Sonnet to Sundry Notes of Music which we have numbered XIX. Malone adds to the collection this exquisite song, of which we find the first verse in Measure for Measure. (See Illustrations, vol. i. p. 378.)

There is a curious coincidence in a passage in The Tempest:—

> "Now I will believe
> That there are unicorns; that in Arabia
> There is one tree, the phœnix' throne."

[3] Can—knows.
[4] Threne—funereal song.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTICE TO THE POEMS.

"If the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather." These are the words which, in relation to the Venus and Adonis, Shakspere addressed, in 1593, to the Earl of Southampton. Are we to accept them literally? Was the Venus and Adonis the first production of Shakspere's imagination? Or did he put out of his view those dramatic performances which he had then unquestionably produced, in deference to the critical opinions which regarded plays as works not belonging to "invention?" We think that he used the words in a literal sense. We regard the Venus and Adonis as the production of a very young man, improved, perhaps, considerably in the interval between its first composition and its publication, but distinguished by peculiarities which belong to the wild luxuriance of youthful power—such power, however, as few besides Shakspere have ever possessed.

A deep thinker and eloquent writer, Julius Charles Hare, thus describes "the spirit of self-sacrifice," as applied to poetry:—

"The might of the imagination is manifested by its launching forth from the petty creek, where the accidents of birth moored it, into the wide ocean of being,—by its going abroad into the world around, passing into whatever it meets with, animating it, and becoming one with it. This complete union and identification of the poet with his poem,—this suppression of his own individual insulated consciousness, with its narrowness of thought and pettiness of feeling,—is what we admire in the great masters of that which for this reason we justly call classical poetry, as representing that which is symbolical and universal, not that which is merely occasional and peculiar. This gives them that majestic calmness which still breathes upon us from the statues of their gods. This invests their works with that lucid transparent atmosphere wherein every form stands out in perfect definiteness and distinctness, only beautified by the distance which idealizes it. This has delivered those works from the casualties of time and space, and has lifted them up like stars into the pure firmament of thought, so that they do not shine on one spot alone, nor fade like earthly flowers, but journey on from clime to clime, shedding the light of beauty on generation after generation. The same quality, amounting to a total extinction of his own selfish being, so that his spirit became a mighty organ through which Nature gave utterance to the full diapason of her notes, is what we wonder at in our own great dramatist, and is the groundwork of all his other powers: for it is only when purged of selfishness that the intellect becomes fitted for receiving the inspirations of genius."*

What Mr. Hare so justly considers as the great moving principle of "classical poetry"—what he further notes as the pre-eminent characteristic of "our own great dramatist"—is abundantly found in that great dramatist's earliest work. Coleridge was the first to point out this pervading quality in the Venus and Adonis; and he has done this so admirably, that it would be profanation were we to attempt to elucidate the point in any other than his own words:—

"It is throughout as if a superior spirit, more intuitive, more intimately conscious, even than the characters themselves, not only of every outward look and act, but of the flux and reflux of the mind in all its subtlest thoughts and feelings, were placing the whole before our view; himself meanwhile unparticipating in the passions, and actuated only by that pleasurable excitement which had resulted from the energetic fervour of his own spirit in so vividly exhibiting what it had so accurately and profoundly contemplated. I think I should have conjectured from these poems, that even then the great instinct which impelled the poet to the drama was secretly working in him, prompting him by a series and never-broken chain of imagery, always vivid, and, because unbroken, often minute,—by the highest effort of the picturesque in words of which words are capable, higher perhaps than was ever realized by any other poet, even Dante not excepted,—to provide a substitute for that visual language, that constant intervention and running comment by tone, look, and gesture, which in his dramatic works he was entitled to expect from the players. His Venus and Adonis seem at once the characters themselves, and the whole representation of those characters by the most consummate actors. You seem to be told nothing, but to see and hear everything. Hence it is, that, from the perpetual activity of attention required on the part of the reader,—from the rapid flow, the quick change, and the playful nature of the thoughts and images,—and, above all, from the alienation, and, if I may hazard such an expression, the utter aloofness of the poet's own feelings from those of which he is at once the painter and the analyst,—that though the very subject cannot but detract from the pleasure of a delicate mind, yet never was poem less dangerous on a moral account."†

* The Victory of Faith; and other Sermons. By Julius Charles Hare, M.A. 1840. P. 277.

Coleridge, in the preceding chapter of his "Literary Life," says—"During the first year that Mr. Wordsworth and I were neighbours, our conversations turned frequently on the two cardinal points of poetry—the power of exciting the sympathy of the reader by a faithful adherence to the truth of nature, and the power of giving the interest of novelty by the modifying colours of imagination." In Coleridge's "Literary Remains" the Venus and Adonis is cited as furnishing a signal example of "that affectionate love of nature and natural objects, without which no man could have observed so steadily, or painted so truly and passionately, the very minutest beauties of the external world." The description of the hare hunt is there given at length as a specimen of this power. A remarkable proof of the completeness as well as accuracy of Shakspere's description presented itself to our mind, in running through a little volume, full of talent, published in 1825—"Essays and Sketches of Character, by the late Richard Ayton, Esq." There is a paper on hunting, and especially on hare-hunting. He says—"I am not one of the perfect fox-hunters of these realms; but having been in the way of late of seeing a good deal of various modes of hunting, I would, for the benefit of the uninitiated, set down the results of my observations." In this matter he writes with a perfect unconsciousness that he is describing what any one has described before. But as accurate an observer had been before him:—

"She (the hare) generally returns to the seat from which she was put up, running, as all the world knows, in a circle, or something sometimes like it, we had better say, that we may keep on good terms with the mathematical. At starting, she tears away at her utmost speed for a mile or more, and distances the dogs half-way: she then returns, diverging a little to the right or left, that she may not run into the mouths of her enemies—a necessity which accounts for what we call the circularity of her course. Her flight from home is direct and precipitate; but on her way back, when she has gained a little time for consideration and stratagem, she describes a curious labyrinth of short turnings and windings, as if to perplex the dogs by the intricacy of her track."

Compare this with Shakspere:—

"And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles,
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles:
The many musits through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes."

Mr. Ayton thus goes on:—

"The hounds, whom we left in full cry, continue their music without remission as long as they are faithful to the scent; as a summons, it should seem, like the seaman's cry, to pull together, or keep together, and it is a certain proof to themselves and their followers that they are in the right way. On the instant that they are 'at fault,' or lose the scent, they are silent. . The weather, in its impression on the scent, is the great father of 'faults;' but they may arise from other accidents, even when the day is in every respect favourable. The intervention of ploughed land, on which the scent soon cools or evaporates, is at least perilous; but sheep-stains, recently left by a flock, are fatal: they cut off the scent irrecoverably—making a gap, as it were, in the clue, in which the dogs have not even a hint for their guidance."

Compare Shakspere again:—

"Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell,
And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell;
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer;
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear:

For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-snuffing hounds are driven to doubt,
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,
As if another chase were in the skies."

† Biographia Literaria, 1817, vol. ii. p. 15.

One more extract from Mr. Ayton :—

"Suppose then, after the usual rounds, that you see the hare at last (a sorry mark for so many foes) sorely beleaguered—looking dark and draggled—and limping heavily along; then stopping to listen—again tottering on a little—and again stopping; and at every step, and every pause, hearing the death-cry grow nearer and louder."

One more comparison, and we have exhausted Shakspere's description :—

"By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still;
Anon their loud alarums he doth hear;
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing bell.

Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn, and return, indenting with the way;
Each envious brier his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay:
For misery is trodden on by many,
And being low never reliev'd by any."

Here, then, be it observed, are not only the same objects, the same accidents, the same movement, in each description, but the very words employed to convey the scene to the mind are often the same in each. It would be easy to say that Mr. Ayton copied Shakspere. We believe he did not. There is a sturdy ingenuousness about his writings which would have led him to notice the Venus and Adonis if he had had it in his mind. Shakspere and he had each looked minutely and practically upon the same scene; and the wonder is, not that Shakspere was an accurate describer, but that in him the accurate is so thoroughly fused with the poetical, that it is one and the same life.

The celebrated description of the courser in the Venus and Adonis is another remarkable instance of the accuracy of the young Shakspere's observation. Not the most experienced dealer ever knew the points of a horse better. The whole poem, indeed, is full of evidence that the circumstances by which the writer was surrounded, in a country district, had entered deeply into his mind, and were reproduced in the poetical form. The bird "tangled in a net"—the "dive-dapper peering through a wave"—the "blue-veined violets"—the

"Red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field"—

the fisher that forbears the "ungrown fry"—the sheep "gone to fold"—the caterpillars feeding on "the tender leaves"—and, not to weary with examples, that exquisite image,

"Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye"—

all these bespeak a poet who had formed himself upon Nature, and not upon books. To understand the value as well as the rarity of this quality in Shakspere, we should open any contemporary poem. Take Marlowe's "Hero and Leander" for example. We read line after line, beautiful, gorgeous, running over with a satiating luxuriousness; but we look in vain for a single familiar image. Shakspere describes what he has seen, throwing over the real the delicious tint of his own imagination. Marlowe looks at Nature herself very rarely; but he knows all the conventional images by which the real is supposed to be elevated into the poetical. His most beautiful things are thus but copies of copies. The mode in which each poet describes the morning will illustrate our meaning :—

"Lo! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
The cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold."

We feel that this is true. Compare—

"By this Apollo's golden harp began
To sound forth music to the ocean;
Which watchful Hesperus no sooner heard
But he the day's bright-bearing car prepar'd,
And ran before, as harbinger of light,
And with his flaring beams mock'd ugly Night,
Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame, and rage,
Dang'd down to hell her loathsome carriage."

We are taught that this is classical.

Coleridge has observed that, "in the Venus and Adonis, the first and most obvious excellence is the perfect sweetness of the versification; its adaptation to the subject; and the power displayed in varying the march of the words without passing into a loftier and more majestic rhythm than was demanded by the thoughts, or permitted by the propriety of preserving a sense of melody predominant." This self-controlling power of "varying the march of the words without passing into a loftier and more majestic rhythm" is, perhaps, one of the most signal instances of Shakspere's consummate mastery of his art, even as a very young man. He who, at the proper season, knew how to strike the grandest music within the compass of our own powerful and sonorous language, in his early productions breathes out his thoughts

"To the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorder."

The sustained sweetness of the versification is never cloying; and yet there are no violent contrasts, no sudden elevations: all is equable in its infinite variety. The early comedies are full of the same rare beauty. In Love's Labour's Lost—The Comedy of Errors—A Midsummer Night's Dream—we have verses of alternate rhymes formed upon the same model as those of the Venus and Adonis, and producing the same feeling of placid delight by their exquisite harmony. The same principles on which he built the versification of the Venus and Adonis exhibited to him the grace which these elegiac harmonies would impart to the scenes of repose in the progress of a dramatic action.

We proceed to the Lucrece. Of that poem the date of the composition is fixed as accurately as we can desire. In the dedication to the Venus and Adonis the poet says—"If your honour seem but pleased I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour." In 1594, a year after the Venus and Adonis, Lucrece was published, and was dedicated to Lord Southampton. This, then, was undoubtedly the "graver labour;" this was the produce of the "idle hours" of 1593. Shakspere was then nearly thirty years of age—the period at which it is held by some he first began to produce anything original for the stage. The poet unquestionably intended the "graver labour" for a higher effort than had produced the "first heir" of his invention. He describes the Venus and Adonis as "unpolished lines"—lines thrown off with youthful luxuriousness and rapidity. The verses of the Lucrece are "untutored lines"—lines formed upon no established model. There is, to our mind, the difference of eight or even ten years in the aspect of these poems—a difference as manifest as that which exists between Love's Labour's Lost and Romeo and Juliet. Coleridge has marked the great distinction between the one poem and the other :—

"The Venus and Adonis did not perhaps allow the display of the deeper passions. But the story of Lucretia seems to favour, and even demand, their intensest workings. And yet we find in Shakespeare's management of the tale neither pathos nor any other dramatic quality. There is the same minute and faithful imagery as in the former poem, in the same vivid colours, inspirited by the same impetuous vigour of thought, and diverging and contracting with the same activity of the assimilative and of the modifying faculties; and with a yet larger display, a yet wider range of knowledge and reflection: and, lastly, with the same perfect dominion, often domination, over the whole world of language."†

It is in this paragraph that Coleridge has marked the difference—which a critic of the very highest order could alone have pointed

* Biographia Literaria, vol. ii. p. 14.

† Biographia Literaria, vol. ii. p. 21.

out—between the power which Shakspere's mind possessed of going out of itself in a narrative poem, and the dramatic power. The same mighty, and to most unattainable, power of utterly subduing the self-conscious to the universal, was essential to the highest excellence of both species of composition—the poem and the drama. But the exercise of that power was essentially different in each. Coleridge, in another place, says—"In his very first production he projected his mind out of his own particular being, and felt, and made others feel, on subjects no way connected with himself except by force of contemplation, and that sublime faculty by which a great mind becomes that on which it meditates."* But this "sublime faculty" went greatly farther when it became dramatic. In the narrative poems of an ordinary man we perpetually see the narrator. Coleridge, in a passage previously quoted, has shown the essential superiority of Shakspere's narrative poems, where the whole is placed before our view, the poet unparticipating in the passions. There is a remarkable example of how strictly Shakspere adhered to this principle in his beautiful poem of A Lover's Complaint. There the poet is actually present to the scene:—

> "From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
> A plaintful story from a sistering vale,
> My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
> And down I laid to list the sad-tun'd tale."

But not one word of comment does he offer upon the revelations of the "fickle maid full pale." The dramatic power, however, as we have said, is many steps beyond this. It dispenses with narrative altogether. It renders a complicated story, or stories, one in the action. It makes the characters reveal themselves, sometimes by a word. It trusts for everything to the capacity of an audience to appreciate the greatest subtleties, and the nicest shades of passion, through the action. It is the very reverse of the oratorical power, which repeats and explains. And how is it able to effect this prodigious mastery over the senses and the understanding? By raising the mind of the spectator, or reader, into such a state of poetical excitement as corresponds in some degree to the excitement of the poet, and thus clears away the mists of our ordinary vision, and irradiates the whole complex moral world in which we for a time live, and move, and have our being, with the brightness of his own intellectual sunlight. Now, it appears to us that, although the Venus and Adonis, and the Lucrece, do not pretend to be the creations of this wonderful power—their forms did not demand its complete exercise—they could not have been produced by a man who did not possess the power, and had not assiduously cultivated it in its own proper field. In the second poem, more especially, do we think the power has reached a higher development, indicating itself in "a yet wider range of knowledge and reflection."

Malone says—"I have observed that Painter has inserted the story of Lucrece in the first volume of his 'Palace of Pleasure,' 1567, on which I make no doubt our author formed his poem." Be it so. The story of Lucrece in Painter's novel occupies four pages. The first page describes the circumstances that preceded the unholy visit of Tarquin to Lucrece; nearly the whole of the last two pages detail the events that followed the death of Lucrece. A page and a half at most is given to the tragedy. This is proper enough in a narrative, whose business it is to make all the circumstances intelligible. But the narrative poet, who was also thoroughly master of the dramatic power, concentrates all the interest upon the main circumstances of the story. He places the scene of those circumstances before our eyes at the very opening:—

> "From the besieged Ardea all in post,
> Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
> Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
> And to Collatium bears," &c.

The preceding circumstances which impel this journey are then rapidly told. Again, after the crowning action of the tragedy, the poet has done. He tells the consequences of it with a brevity and simplicity indicating the most consummate art:—

> "When they had sworn to this advised doom,
> They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
> To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
> And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
> Which being done with speedy diligence,
> The Romans plausibly did give consent
> To Tarquin's everlasting banishment."

He has thus cleared away all the encumbrances to the progress of the main action. He would have done the same had he made Lucrece the subject of a drama. But he has to tell his painful story, and to tell it all: not to exhibit a portion of it, as he would have done had he chosen the subject for a tragedy. The consummate delicacy with which he has accomplished this is beyond all praise, perhaps above all imitation. He puts forth his strength on the accessories of the main incident. He delights to make the chief actors analyze their own thoughts—reflect, explain, expostulate. All this is essentially undramatic, and he meant it to be so. But then, what pictures does he paint of the progress of the action, which none but a great dramatic poet, who had visions of future Macbeths and Othellos before him, could have painted! Look, for example, at that magnificent scene, when

> "No comfortable star did lend his light,"

of Tarquin leaping from his bed, and, softly smiting his falchion on a flint, lighting a torch

> "Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye."

Look, again, at the exquisite domestic incident which tells of the quiet and gentle occupation of his devoted victim:—

> "By the light he spies
> Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
> He takes it from the rushes where it lies."

The hand to which that glove belongs is described in the very perfection of poetry:—

> "Without the bed her other fair hand was,
> On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
> Show'd like an April daisy on the grass."

In the chamber of innocence Tarquin is painted with terrific grandeur, which is overpowering by the force of contrast:—

> "This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
> Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
> Coucheth the fowl below with his wing's shade."

The complaint of Lucrece after Tarquin has departed was meant to be undramatic. The action advances not. The character develops not itself in the action. But the poet makes his heroine bewail her fate in every variety of lament that his boundless command of imagery could furnish. The letter to Collatine is written—a letter of the most touching simplicity:—

> "Thou worthy lord
> Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
> Health to thy person! next vouchsafe to afford
> (If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see)
> Some present speed to come and visit me:
> So I commend me from our house in grief;
> My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Again the action languishes, and again Lucrece surrenders herself to her grief. The

> "Skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy"

is one of the most elaborate passages of the poem, essentially cast in an undramatic mould. But this is but a prelude to the catastrophe, where, if we mistake not, a strength of passion is put forth which is worthy him who drew the terrible agonies of Lear:—

> "Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
> She throws forth Tarquin's name: 'He, he,' she says,
> But more than 'he' her poor tongue could not speak;

* Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 54.

Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
She utters this: "He, he, fair lords, 'tis he,
That guides this hand to give this wound to me.'"

Malone, in his concluding remarks upon the Venus and Adonis, and Lucrece, says—"We should do Shakspeare injustice were we to try them by a comparison with more modern and polished productions, or with our present idea of poetical excellence." This was written in the year 1780—the period which rejoiced in the "polished productions" of Hayley and Miss Seward, and founded its "idea of poetical excellence" on some standard which, secure in its conventional forms, might depart as far as possible from simplicity and nature, to give us words without thought, arranged in verses without music. It would be injustice indeed to Shakspere to try the Venus and Adonis, and Lucrece, by such a standard of "poetical excellence." But we have outlived that period. By way of apology for Shakspere, Malone adds "that few authors rise much above the age in which they live." He further says—"The poems of Venus and Adonis, and the Rape of Lucrece, whatever opinion may be now entertained of them, were certainly much admired in Shakspeare's lifetime." This is consolatory. In Shakspere's lifetime there were a few men that the world has since thought somewhat qualified to establish an "idea of poetical excellence"—Spenser, Drayton, Jonson, Fletcher, Chapman, for example. These were not much valued in Malone's golden age of "more modern and polished productions;" but let that pass. We are coming back to the opinions of this obsolete school; and we venture to think the majority of readers now will not require us to make an apology for Shakspere's poems.

If Malone thought it necessary to solicit indulgence for the Venus and Adonis, and Lucrece, he drew even a more timid breath when he ventured to speak of the Sonnets. "I do not feel any great propensity to stand forth as the champion of these compositions. However, as it appears to me that they have been somewhat underrated, I think it incumbent on me to do them that justice to which they seem entitled." No wonder he speaks timidly. The great poetical lawgiver of his time—the greater than Shakspere, for he undertook to mend him, and refine him, and make him fit to be tolerated by the super-elegant intellects of the days of George III.—had pronounced that the Sonnets were too bad even for his genius to make tolerable. He, Steevens, who would take up a play of Shakspere's in the condescending spirit with which a clever tutor takes up a smart boy's verses—altering a word here, piecing out a line there, commending this thought, shaking his head at this false prosody, and acknowledging upon the whole that the thing is pretty well, seeing how much the lad has yet to learn—he sent forth his decree that nothing less than an Act of Parliament could compel the reading of Shakspere's Sonnets. For a long time mankind bowed before the oracle; and the Sonnets were not read. Wordsworth has told us something about this:—

"There is extant a small volume of miscellaneous poems in which Shakspeare expresses his feelings in his own person. It is not difficult to conceive that the editor, George Steevens, should have been insensible to the beauties of one portion of that volume, the Sonnets; though there is not a part of the writings of this poet where is found, in an equal compass, a greater number of exquisite feelings felicitously expressed. But, from regard to the critic's own credit, he would not have ventured to talk of an act of parliament not being strong enough to compel the perusal of these, or any production of Shakspeare, if he had not known that the people of England were ignorant of the treasures contained in those little pieces." *

That ignorance has been removed; and no one has contributed more to its removal, by creating a school of poetry founded upon Truth and Nature, than Wordsworth himself. The critics of the last century have passed away:—

"Peor and Baälim
Forsake their temples dim."

By the operation of what great sustaining principle is it that we have come back to the just appreciation of "the treasures contained in those little pieces?" The poet-critic will answer:—

"There never has been a period, and perhaps never will be, in which vicious poetry, of some kind or other, has not excited more zealous admiration, and been far more generally read, than good; but this advantage attends the good, that the individual, as well as the species, survives from age to age; whereas, of the depraved, though the species be immortal, the individual quickly perishes; the object of present admiration vanishes, being supplanted by some other as easily produced, which, though no better, brings with it at least the irritation of novelty, —with adaptation, more or less skilful, to the changing humours of the majority of those who are most at leisure to regard poetical works when they first solicit their attention. Is it the result of the whole, that, in the opinion of the writer, the judgment of the people is not to be respected? The thought is most injurious; and, could the charge be brought against him, he would repel it with indignation. The people have already been justified, and their eulogium pronounced by implication, when it is said, above—that, of good poetry, the individual, as well as the species, survives. And how does it survive but through the people? what preserves it but their intellect and their wisdom?

'Past and future are the wings
On whose support, harmoniously conjoin'd,
Moves the great spirit of human knowledge.'—MS.

The voice that issues from this spirit is that vox populi which the Deity inspires. Foolish must he be who can mistake for this a local acclamation, or a transitory outcry—transitory though it be for years, local though from a nation! Still more lamentable is his error who can believe that there is anything of divine infallibility in the clamour of that small though loud portion of the community, ever governed by factitious influence, which under the name of the PUBLIC, passes itself, upon the unthinking, for the PEOPLE." †

It is this perpetual mistake of the public for the people that has led to the belief that there was a period when Shakspere was neglected. He was always in the heart of the people. There, in that deep, rich soil, have the Sonnets rested during two centuries; and here and there in remote places have the seeds put forth leaves and flowers. All young imaginative minds now rejoice in their hues and their fragrance. But this preference of the fresh and beautiful of poetical life to the pot-pourri of the last age must be a regulated love. Those who, seeing the admiration which now prevails for these outpourings of "exquisite feelings felicitously expressed," talk of the Sonnets as equal, if not superior, to the greatest of the poet's mighty dramas, compare things that admit of no comparison. Who would speak in the same breath of the gem of Cupid and Psyche, and the Parthenon? In the Sonnets, exquisite as they are, the poet goes not out of himself (at least in the form of the composition), and he walks, therefore, in a narrow circle of art. In the Venus and Adonis, and the Lucrece, the circle widens. But in the Dramas the centre is the Human Soul, the circumference the Universe.

* Preface to Poetical Works.

† Preface to Poetical Works.

PLAYS ASCRIBED TO SHAKSPERE.

LOCRINE.

THE subject of this tragedy was a favourite with the early poets. We find it in "The Mirror of Magistrates," in Spenser, and in Drayton; occupying seven stanzas of "The Faery Queen" (Book II. Canto 10), and fifty lines of the "Poly-Olbion." The legend of Brutus is circumstantially related in Milton's "History of England," where the story of Locrine is told with the power of a poet:—

"After this, Brutus, in a chosen place, builds Troja Nova, changed in time to Trinovantum, now London, and began to enact laws, Heli being then high-priest in Judæa; and having governed the whole isle twenty-four years, died, and was buried in his new Troy. His three sons, Locrine, Albanact, and Camber, divide the land by consent. Locrine has the middle part, Lœgria; Camber possessed Cambria, or Wales; Albanact, Albania, now Scotland. But he in the end, by Humber, king of the Hunns, who with a fleet invaded that land, was slain in fight, and his people drove back into Lœgria. Locrine and his brother go out against Humber; who, now marching onwards, was by them defeated, and in a river drowned, which to this day retains his name. Among the spoils of his camp and navy were found certain young maids, and Estrildis above the rest, passing fair, the daughter of a king in Germany; from whence Humber, as he went wasting the sea-coast, had led her captive; whom Locrine, though before contracted to the daughter of Corineus, resolves to marry. But being forced and threatened by Corineus, whose authority and power he feared, Guendolen the daughter he yields to marry, but in secret loves the other: and ofttimes retiring, as to some private sacrifice, through vaults and passages made under ground, and seven years thus enjoying her, had by her a daughter, equally fair, whose name was Sabra. But when once his fear was off, by the death of Corineus, not content with secret enjoyment, divorcing Guendolen, he made Estrildis now his queen. Guendolen, all in rage, departs into Cornwall, where Madan, the son she had by Locrine, was hitherto brought up by Corineus, his grandfather. And gathering an army of her father's friends and subjects, gives battle to her husband by the river Sture; wherein Locrine, shot with an arrow, ends his life. But not so ends the fury of Guendolen; for Estrildis, and her daughter Sabra, she throws into a river; and, to leave a monument of revenge, proclaims that the stream be thenceforth called after the damsel's name, which, by length of time, is changed now to Sabrina, or Severn."

In "Comus" Milton lingers with delight about the same story:—

"There is a gentle nymph not far from hence,
That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn stream,
Sabrina is her name, a virgin pure;
Whilome she was the daughter of Locrine,
That had the sceptre from his father Brute.
She, guiltless damsel, flying the mad pursuit
Of her enraged stepdame, Guendolen,
Commended her fair innocence to the flood,
That stay'd her flight with his cross-flowing course."

The tragedy of "Locrine" was originally printed in quarto, under the following title:—"The lamentable Tragedie of Locrine, the eldest sonne of King Brutus, discoursing the warres of the Britaines and Hunnes, with their Discomfiture: The Britaines victorie, with their Accidents, and the death of Albanact. No less pleasant than profitable. Newly set foorth, ouerseene and corrected, by W. S. London, printed by Thomas Creede. 1595." It was entered in the books of the Stationers' Company on the 20th of July, 1594. The play concludes with some homespun lines, which, to a certain extent, fix the date:—

"Lo! here the end of lawless treachery,
Of usurpation, and ambitious pride.
And they that for their private amours dare
Turmoil our land, and set their broils abroach,
Let them be warned by these premises.
And as a woman was the only cause
That civil discord was then stirred up,
So let us pray for that renowned maid
That eight-and-thirty years the sceptre sway'd,
In quiet peace and sweet felicity;
And every wight that seeks her grace's smart,
Would that this sword were pierced in his heart!"

The thirty-eighth year of Queen Elizabeth's reign began on the 17th of November, 1595; and it would therefore appear that these lines were written after the entry at Stationers' Hall; and that the piece, if acted at all, was presented in the latter part of the year of which the first edition bears the date. The question then arises, whether the expression in the title-page of that edition, "Newly set foorth, ouerseene and corrected, by W. S.," implies that W. S. had corrected and published a play of an elder date; and that involves the further question whether W. S. was the original author, or one who undertook to repair a work that had fallen into his hands. Steevens says—"Supposing for a moment that W. S. here stood for our great poet's name (which is extremely improbable), these words prove that Shakspere was not the writer of this performance. If it was only set forth, overseen, and corrected, it was not composed, by him." This is not a very logical inference from the words of the title-page; nor is this an isolated case of prominently setting forth the correction of a play. The following title-page is, we think, an exact parallel to that of "Locrine:"—"A pleasant Conceited Comedie called Love's Labours Lost. As it was presented before her Highness this last Christmas. Newly corrected and augmented by W. Shakespeare." Here the corrector and augmenter is the undoubted author; and so the appearance of W. S. in the title-page of "Locrine," as its overseer and corrector, does not prove that "it was not composed" by W. S. We have no earlier trace that W. S. was held to be William Shakspere than the publication of "Locrine" in the folio of 1664. If the publishers of that edition of Shakspere's works were misled by the initials W. S., they are not the only persons who have thought that these initials could only belong to the greatest of writers. Shakspere has been made a political economist upon the strength of them. He was, indeed, a much better political economist than many of the statesmen of his time; but he did not in 1581 write "A compendious or briefe examination of certayne ordinary complaints, &c., by W. S.," which in the last century was printed with his name. The author of that very able pamphlet was William

Stafford. The theory of Steevens with regard to "Locrine" is that it was written by Marlowe, who died in 1593; that it was entered on the Stationers' books as Marlowe left it; that some revision was necessary; and that it was published with the initials of the reviser, William Smith, in 1595. In 1596 William Smith printed a collection of fifty sonnets, entitled, "Chloris, or the Complaint of the passionate despised Shepheard." In "England's Helicon," printed in 1600, there is a little poem entitled "Corin's Dream of his fair Chloris," bearing the initials W. S., which is no doubt by the same William Smith. We extract the first eight lines of this poem :—

> "What time bright Titan in the zenith sat,
> And equally the fixed poles did heat:
> When to my flock my daily woes I chat,
> And underneath a broad beech took my seat.
> The dreaming god, which Morpheus poets call,
> Augmenting fuel to my Ætna's fire,
> With sleep possessing my weak senses all,
> In apparitions makes my hopes aspire."

In the "Censura Literaria" (vol. v. p. 113) an account is given of a work printed in 1577, entitled "The Golden Aphroditis: a pleasant discourse penned by John Grange, gentleman," in which a poem is also found by W. S., which is thus described :—"Eighteen commendatory lines succeed, by W. S. This probably was Wm. Smith, the writer of other poesies. Shakspeare it could not be; both on account of the date, and because he thus useth the commonplace process of compliment employed in that age, in which mythology and personification are made to halt for it." We extract four lines from these commendatory verses :—

> "Here Virtue seems to check at Vice, and Wisdom Folly taunts
> Here Venus she is set at nought, and dame Diane she vaunts.
> Here Pallas Cupid doth detest, and all his carpet-knights:
> Here doth she show that youthful imps in folly most delights."

Here, then, was a W. S. appearing as a poet in 1577, and again in 1596. "Locrine," in 1595, is newly set forth, &c., by W. S. The same anonymous person might have written a play in the very early days of the English stage, contemporary with the first performances of Peele, Greene, Marlowe, and Kyd; he might have revised it and published it in 1595. Very little is known of this author; nothing of his personal history. A copy or two are in existence of his fifty sonnets; and, if that be fame, his little book has been sold for £30 in our own day. Seventy years after the first publication of "Locrine," it is reprinted in a collection of Shakspere's works; but we have not a particle of evidence that it was traditionally ascribed to Shakspere. The principle which appears to have determined the publishers of our poet's works in 1664 to add to their "impression" a collection of "seven plays never before printed in folio" appears to have been a very simple one. They took all which they found bearing the initials W. S., or the name William Shakspere, as may be seen from the following table :—

Title of Play.	Initials, or Name, on Title.	Date.
Pericles, Prince of Tyre	William Shakespeare	1609
Tragedie of Locrine . . .	W. S.	1595
First Part of the Life of Sir John Oldcastle . .	1. No name or initial 2. William Shakespeare.	1600 1600
Chronicle Historie of Thomas Lord Cromwell .	1. No name or initial 2. W. S. . . .	1602 1613
The London Prodigall.	William Shakespeare	1605
The Puritaine. .	W. S. . .	1607
A Yorkshire Tragedie	W. Shakespeare	1608

The name of Shakspere affixed to the title of any of these plays cannot, as we have before observed in our notice of Pericles, be received as evidence of the authorship. "Sir John Oldcastle," of which two editions were published in 1600 by the same bookseller, the one with Shakspere's name, the other without (the one without a name being the most correct), was unquestionably not written by Shakspere, because we have record of a payment to the actual writers.

This circumstance compelled us to inquire into the authorship of Pericles, almost wholly with reference to the internal evidence. And upon the same principle we must examine "The London Prodigal" and "The Yorkshire Tragedy." It is manifest that the initials W. S. upon the title-pages of the early copies cannot be received as evidence at all of the authorship, however convenient it might have been for a publisher to accept them as evidence fifty years after Shakspere's death. W. S. might, without any attempt to convey the notion that "Locrine" was written by Shakspere, have fairly stood for William Smith; and in the same way the W. S. of "Thomas Lord Cromwell" and the W. S. of "The Puritan" might have represented Wentworth Smith, a well-known dramatic author at the date of the publication of those plays, who wrote many pieces in conjunction with the best poets of that prolific period of the stage. We proceed to an analysis of "Locrine," not, as we would repeat, to attempt any display of ingenuity in finding parallels or contrasts, but, inquiring into the broad principles of Shakspere's art, to apply something like a test of the genuineness of those productions which have been assigned to him at various periods since they were written, some very loosely and hastily, as we think, and others upon grounds that demand a patient and careful examination.

According to Tieck, "Locrine" is the earliest of Shakspere's dramas. He has a theory that it has altogether a political tendency :—"It seems to have reference to the times when England was suffering through the parties formed in favour of Mary Stuart, and to have been written before her execution, while attacks were feared at home, and invasions from abroad." It was corrected by the author, and printed, he further says, in 1595, when another Spanish invasion was feared. We confess ourselves utterly at a loss to recognise in "Locrine" the mode in which Shakspere usually awakens the love of country. The management in this particular is essentially different from that of King John and Henry V. "Locrine" is one of the works which Tieck has translated, and his translation is no doubt a proof of the sincerity of his opinions; yet he says, frankly enough, "It bears the marks of a young poet unacquainted with the stage, who endeavours to sustain himself constantly in a posture of elevation, who purposely neglects the necessary rising and sinking of tone and effect, and who with wonderful energy endeavours from beginning to end to make his personages speak in the same highly-wrought and poetical language, while at the same time he shakes out all his school learning on every possible occasion." To reduce this very just account of the play to elementary criticism, Tieck says, first, that the action of the play is not conducted upon dramatic principles; second, that the language is not varied with the character and situation; third, that the poetry is essentially conventional, being the reflection of the author's school learning. It must be evident to all our readers that these characteristics are the very reverse of Shakspere. Schlegel says of "Locrine" —"The proofs of the genuineness of this piece are not altogether unambiguous; the grounds for doubt, on the other hand, are entitled to attention. However, this question is immediately connected with that respecting Titus Andronicus, and must be at the same time resolved in the affirmative or negative." We dissent entirely from this opinion. It appears to us that the differences are as strikingly marked between "Locrine" and Titus Andronicus as between Titus Andronicus and Othello. Those productions were separated by at least twenty years. The youth might have produced Aaron; the perfect master of his art, Iago. There is the broad mark of originality in the characterization and language of Titus Andronicus. The terrible passions which are there developed by the action find their vent in the appropriate language of passion, the bold and sometimes rude outpourings of nature. The characters of "Locrine" are moved to passion, but first and last they speak out of books. In Shakspere, high poetry is the most natural language of passion. It belongs to the state of excitement in which the character is placed; it harmonizes with the excited state of the reader or of the audience. But the whole imagery of "Locrine" is mythological. In a speech of twenty lines we have Rhadamanthus, Hercules, Eurydice, Erebus, Pluto, Mors, Tantalus, Pelops, Tithonus, Minos, Jupiter, Mars, and Tisiphone. The mythological pedantry is carried to such an extent, that the play, though unquestionably written in sober sadness, is a perfect travesty of this peculiarity of the early dramatists. Conventional as Greene and Marlowe are in their imagery, a single act of "Locrine" contains more of this tinsel than all their plays put together, prone as they are to this species of decoration. In the author of "Locrine" it becomes so entirely ridiculous, that this quality alone would decide us to say that Marlowe had nothing to do with it, or Greene either. There is another peculiarity, also, in "Locrine" which distinguishes it as much from Titus Andronicus as it does from the accredited works of the best dramatists of the early period. We allude to the incessant repetitions of a phrase, in the endeavour to be forcible and rhetorical. Sparingly used, all poets know the power of an echo which intensifies the original sound; but we will select a few such passages from "Locrine" which are the mere platitudes of weakness and inexperience :—

"These arms, my lords, these never-daunted arms."
"This heart, my lords, this ne'er-appalled heart."
"Accursed stars, damn'd and accursed stars."
"Brutus, that was a glory to us all,
Brutus, that was a terror to his foes."
"For at this time, yea at this present time."
"Casts such a heat, yea such a scorching heat."
"Since mighty kings are subject to mishap
(Ay, mighty kings are subject to mishap)."
"But this foul day, this foul accursed day."

No doubt we may find this rhetorical form amongst the founders of our drama, and often in an excess which approaches to the ridiculous: take a passage from Greene's "Orlando Furioso" for example :—

Although my country's love, dearer than pearl,
Or mines of gold, might well have kept me back;
The sweet conversing with my king and friends,
Left all for love, might well have kept me back;
The seas by Neptune hoised to the heavens,
Whose dangerous flaws might well have kept me back;
The savage Moors and Anthropophagi,
Whose lands I pass'd, might well have kept me back;
The doubt of entertainment in the event
When I arriv'd, might well have kept me back;
But so the fame of fair Angelica
Stamp'd in my thoughts the figure of her love,
As neither country, king, or seas, or cannibals,
Could by despairing keep Orlando back."

We have the same sort of elaborate repetition in "Locrine:"—

"If Fortune favour me in mine attempts,
Thou shalt be queen of lovely Albion.
Fortune shall favour me in mine attempts,
And make thee queen of lovely Albion."

The latter passage, as well as that of Greene, is evidently part of the system of rhetoric upon which both writers proceeded, although in Greene the management is more spirited. We know of nothing like examples of this system in Shakspere, except in one playful piece of comedy, where the principle is applied with the greatest nicety of art:—

"Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When nought would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Por. If you had known the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honour to contain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring."
Merchant of Venice, Act V.

Let us, however, proceed to a rapid examination of "Locrine" in its action and characterization.

The dumb-show, as it is called, of "Locrine," is tolerably decisive as to the date of the performance. It belongs essentially to that period when the respective powers of action and of words were imperfectly understood; when what was exhibited to the eye required to be explained, and what was conveyed to the imagination of the audience by speech was to be made more intelligible by a sign-painting pantomime. Nothing could be more characteristic of a very rude state of art, almost the rudest, than the dumb-shows which introduce each act of "Locrine." Act I. is thus heralded :—

"Thunder and lightning. Enter Ate in black, with a burning torch in one hand, and a bloody sword in the other. Presently let there come forth a lion running after a bear; then come forth an archer, who must kill the lion in a dumb-show, and then depart. Ate remains."

Ate then tells us, in good set verse, that a mighty lion was killed by a dreadful archer; and the seventeen lines in which we are told this are filled with a very choice description of the lion before he was shot, and after he was shot. And what has this to do with the subject of the play? It is an acted simile :—

"So valiant Brute, the terror of the world,
Whose only looks did scare his enemies,
The archer Death brought to his latest end.
O, what may long abide above this ground,
In state of bliss and healthful happiness!"

In the second act we have a dumb-show of Perseus and Andromeda; in the third, "a crocodile sitting on a river's bank, and a little snake stinging it;" in the fourth, Omphale and Hercules; in the fifth, Jason, Medea, and Creon's daughter. Ate, who is the great show-woman of these scenes, introduces her puppets on each occasion with a line or two of Latin, and always concludes her address with "So:"—"So valiant Brute"—"So fares it with young Locrine"—"So Humber"—"So martial Locrine"—"So Guendolen." A writer in the Edinburgh Review most justly calls "Locrine" "a characteristic work of its time." If we were to regard these dumb-shows as the most decisive marks of its chronology, we should carry the play back to the age when the form of the moralities was in some degree indispensable to a dramatic performance; when the action could not move and develop itself without the assistance of something approaching to the character of a chorus. Thus in "Tancred and Gismunda," originally acted before Queen Elizabeth in 1568, previous to the first act "Cupid cometh out of the heavens in a cradle of flowers, drawing forth upon the stage, in a blue twist of silk, from his left hand, Vain Hope, Brittle Joy; and with a carnation twist of silk from his right hand, Fair Resemblance, Late Repentance." We have there choruses at the conclusion of other acts; and, previous to the fourth act, not only "Megæra riseth out of hell, with the other furies," but she subsequently mixes in the main action, and throws her snake upon Tancred. Whatever period, therefore, we may assign to "Locrine," varying between the date of "Tancred and Gismunda" and its original publication in 1594, we may be sure that the author, whoever he was, had not power enough to break through the trammels of the early stage. He had not that confidence in the force of natural action and just characterization which would allow a drama to be wholly dramatic. He wanted that high gift of imagination which conceives and produces these qualities of a drama; and he therefore dealt as with an unimaginative audience. The same want of the dramatic power renders his play a succession of harangues, in which the last thing thought of is the appropriateness of language to situation. The first English dramatists, and those who worked upon their model, appear to have gone upon the principle that they produced the most perfect work of art when they took their art entirely out of the province of nature. The highest art is a representation of nature in her very highest forms; something which is above common reality, but at the same time real. The lowest art embodies a principle opposite to nature; something purely conventional, and consequently always uninteresting, often grotesque and ridiculous. "Locrine" furnishes abundant examples of the characteristics of a school of art which may be considered as the antithesis of the school of Shakspere.

The first scene introduces us to "Brutus carried in a chair." With him are his three sons, Locrine, Camber, and Albanact; Corineus and Asaracus, his brothers; Guendolen, the daughter of Corineus; with other personages. Brutus informs the assembly of his approaching death; and his brothers tell him of his great renown; which speeches encourage Brutus to take a very self-satisfying view of the whole course of his life, from the period of his flight from Italy to his quelling of the giants of Albion. However, the dying man at last proceeds to business; divides the kingdom amongst his sons, and directs that Locrine shall marry Guendolen. Having effected all this at an expense of words which would be somewhat weakening to a person in health, he very opportunely dies, and his son and brother break out into the following rhapsodies:—

"Loc. Accursed stars, damn'd and accursed stars,
To abbreviate my noble father's life!
Hard-hearted gods, and too envious fates,
Thus to cut off my father's fatal thread!
Brutus, that was a glory to us all,
Brutus, that was a terror to his foes,
Alas! too soon by Demogorgon's knife
The martial Brutus is bereft of life:
No sad complaints may move just Æacus.
Cor. No dreadful threats can fear judge Rhadamanth.
Wert thou as strong as mighty Hercules,
That tam'd the hugy monsters of the world,
Play'dst thou as sweet on the sweet-sounding lute
As did the spouse of fair Eurydice,
That did enchant the waters with his noise,
And made stones, birds, and beasts, to lead a dance
Constrain'd the hilly trees to follow him,
Thou couldst not move the judge of Erebus,
Nor move compassion in grim Pluto's heart;
For fatal Mors expecteth all the world,
And every man must tread the way of death.
Brave Tantalus, the valiant Pelops' sire,
Guest to the gods, suffer'd untimely death;
And old Tithonus, husband to the morn,
And eke grim Minos, whom just Jupiter
Deign'd to admit unto his sacrifice.
The thund'ring trumpets of bloodthirsty Mars,
The fearful rage of fell Tisiphone,
The boisterous waves of humid ocean,
Are instruments and tools of dismal death.
Then, noble cousin, cease to mourn his chance,
Whose age and years were signs that he should die.
It resteth now that we inter his bones,
That was a terror to his enemies.
Take up the corse, and, princes, hold him dead,
Who while he liv'd upheld the Trojan state.
Sound drums and trumpets; march to Troynovant,
There to provide our chieftain's funeral."

At the end of the first act Locrine and Guendolen are married; but a comic scene is interposed, in which Strumbo, a cobbler, talks of Cuprit and Dina, and in the same breath of the fourth book of Lactantius. It is evident that the author of this play could not produce the lowest buffoonery without making a parade of his book-knowledge.

The second act opens with the arrival of Humber, the king of the Scythians, with Estrild his wife, and Hubba his son. The lady is rapturous in her admiration of Albion:—

"The plains, my lord, garnish'd with Flora's wealth,
And overspread with particolour'd flowers,
Do yield sweet contentation to my mind.
The airy hills enclos'd with shady groves,
The groves replenish'd with sweet chirping birds,
The birds resounding heavenly melody,
Are equal to the groves of Thessaly;
Where Phœbus, with the learned ladies nine,
Delight themselves with music's harmony,
And from the moisture of the mountain-tops
The silent springs dance down with murmuring streams,
And water all the ground with crystal waves.
The gentle blasts of Eurus' modest wind,
Moving the pittering leaves of Silvan's woods,
Do equal it with Tempe's paradise;
And thus consorted all to one effect,
Do make me think these are the happy isles,
Most fortunate, if Humber may them win."

After strutting about, and talking of Fortune, and Boreas, and Semiramis, and Lucifer, and Penthesilea, these Scythian scholars move forward, and the cobbler appears again upon the scene, and refuses the "press-money" which a captain offers him. Subsequently the Scythians burn the cobbler's house, with his wife in it; but he goes to the wars with Albanact, and has the honour of fighting with the king of the Scythians. Humber is routed; and talks, as is very natural with people when they are in great distress, about Briareus, Olympus, and Minerva. However, the tide of battle turns again, and Albanact is routed; and kills himself, after a denunciation of Fortune, which furnishes the most satisfactory evidence of the greatness of his ambition who was resolved to do so many wonderful things after he had cut his own throat:—

"Curs'd be her charms, damn'd be her cursed charms,
That do delude the wayward hearts of men,
Of men that trust unto her fickle wheel,
Which never leaveth turning upside-down!
O gods, O heavens, allot me but the place
Where I may find her hateful mansion.
I'll pass the Alps to wat'ry Meroe,
Where fiery Phœbus in his chariot,
The wheels whereof are deck'd with emeralds,
Casts such a heat, yea such a scorching heat,
And spoileth Flora of her checker'd grass;
I'll overturn the mountain Caucasus,
Where fell Chimæra, in her triple shape,
Rolleth hot flames from out her monstrous paunch,
Scaring the beasts with issue of her gorge;
I'll pass the frozen zone, where icy flakes,
Stopping the passage of the fleeting ships,
Do lie, like mountains, in the congeal'd sea:
Where if I find that hateful house of hers,
I'll pull the fickle wheel from out her hands,
And tie herself in everlasting bands."

He very appropriately concludes with six Latin hexameters before he kills himself. It is difficult to say which is the most ludicrous—the solemn raving of the hero, or the burlesque of the cobbler and his man.

In the third act Locrine comes against Humber, and finally defeats him, after a great many words uttered in the same "Ercles' vein." We hopelessly look for any close parallel of the fustian of this play in the accredited works of Greene, or Marlowe, or Kyd, who redeemed their pedantry and their extravagance by occasional grandeur and sweetness. The dialogue of "Locrine," from first to last, is inflated beyond all comparison with any contemporary performance with which we are acquainted. Most readers are familiar with a gentleman who, when he is entreated to go down, says, "I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also." The valiant Pistol had, no doubt, diligently studied "Locrine;" but he was a faint copyist of such sublime as the following:—

"You ugly spirits that in Cocytus mourn,
And gnash your teeth with dolorous laments;
You fearful dogs, that in black Lethe howl,
And scare the ghosts with your wide-open throats;
You ugly ghosts, that flying from these dogs

Do plunge yourselves in Puryflegethon ;
Come all of you, and with your shrieking notes
Accompany the Britons' conquering host.
Come, fierce Erinnys, horrible with snakes ;
Come, ugly furies, armed with your whips ;
You threefold judges of black Tartarus,
And all the army of your hellish fiends,
With new-found torments rack proud Locrine's bones !"

We do not get rid of Humber, who of all the characters excels in this line, until the end of the fourth act; previous to which happy event of his death Locrine has fallen in love with Estrild, his prisoner; and the lady, after a very brief wooing, requites his love, under the assurance that Queen Guendolen shall do her no harm. The following lines, in which Locrine describes the arrangements that he has made for the indulgence of his passion, furnish almost the only example of a passage in the play approaching to something like natural and appropriate language :—

" Nigh Durolitum, by the pleasant Ley,
Where brackish Thamis slides with silver streams,
Making a breach into the grassy downs,
A curious arch of costly marble fraught
Hath Locrine framed underneath the ground ;
The walls whereof, garnish'd with diamonds,
With opals, rubies, glistering emeralds,
And interlac'd with sun-bright carbuncles,
Lighten the room with artificial day :
And from the Ley with water-flowing pipes
The moisture is deriv'd into this arch,
Where I have plac'd fair Estrild secretly.
Thither eftsoons, accompanied with my page,
I visit covertly my heart's desire,
Without suspicion of the meanest eye,
For love aboundeth still with policy.
And thither still means Locrine to repair,
Till Atropos cut off mine uncle's life."

In the fifth act we hear of the death of Corineus; upon which Locrine commands that Estrild shall be queen in the room of Guendolen. The rightful wife, upon hearing of her misfortune, calls upon the winds and the clouds and the sun, and other such allies of tragic personages, to assist her in her distress, and she does not call in vain :—

" Behold the heavens do wail for Guendolen ;
The shining sun doth blush for Guendolen ;
The liquid air doth weep for Guendolen ;
The very ground doth groan for Guendolen.
Ay, they are milder than the Britain king,
For he rejecteth luckless Guendolen."

Her son arrives, and changes her temper in a moment from sorrow to revenge :—

" Then henceforth farewell womanish complaints !
All childish pity henceforth then farewell !
But cursed Locrine, look unto thyself :
For Nemesis, the mistress of revenge,
Sits arm'd at all points on our dismal blades :
And cursed Estrild, that inflam'd his heart,
Shall, if I live, die a reproachful death."

A battle ensues, in which Locrine is defeated; but previously the ghost of Corineus appears, and his speech is no unfavourable specimen of the power of the writer :—

" Behold, the circuit of the azure sky
Throws forth sad throbs, and grievous suspires,
Prejudicating Locrine's overthrow.
The fire casteth forth sharp darts of flames ;
The great foundation of the triple world
Trembleth and quaketh with a mighty noise,
Presaging bloody massacres at hand.
The wandering birds that flutter in the dark
(When hellish night, in cloudy chariot seated,
Casteth her mists on shady Tellus' face,
With sable mantles covering all the earth)
Now flies abroad amid the cheerful day,
Foretelling some unwonted misery.
The snarling curs of darken'd Tartarus,
Sent from Avernus' ponds by Rhadamanth,
With howling ditties pester every wood.
The wat'ry ladies, and the lightfoot fauns,
And all the rabble of the woody nymphs,
All trembling hide themselves in shady groves,
And shroud themselves in hideous hollow pits.
The boisterous Boreas thund'reth forth revenge :
The stony rocks cry out on sharp revenge :
The thorny bush pronounceth dire revenge.
Now, Corineus, stay and see revenge."

The last four lines furnish another example of that species of repetition which we have previously noticed. We have four lines very similar in Lodge's " Wounds of Civil War :"—

" Thy colour'd wings, steeped in purple blood,
Thy blinding wreath, distain'd in purple blood,
Thy royal robes, wash'd in my purple blood,
Shall witness to the world thy thirst of blood."

Locrine and Estrild each kill themselves; and Sabren, previous to her completion of the tragedy, speaks some lines which, with a few other scattered passages here and there, afford evidence that, if the author possessed little or nothing of what may be properly called dramatic power, he might, could he have shaken off the false learning and extravagance of his school, have produced something which with proper culture might have ripened into poetry :—

" You mountain nymphs which in these deserts reign,
Cease off your hasty chase of savage beasts !
Prepare to see a heart oppress'd with care ;
Address your ears to hear a mournful style !
No human strength, no work can work my weal,
Care in my heart so tyrant-like doth deal.
You Dryades, and lightfoot Satyri,
You gracious fairies, which at even-tide
Your closets leave, with heavenly beauty stor'd,
And on your shoulders spread your golden locks ;
You savage bears, in caves and darken'd dens,
Come wail with me the martial Locrine's death ;
Come mourn with me for beauteous Estrild's death !
Ah ! loving parents, little do you know
What sorrow Sabren suffers for your thrall."

Can we, then, believe that " Locrine " was the earliest work of Shakspere, as Tieck would believe? or are we to think with Schlegel that it belongs to the same class, and the same hand, as Titus Andronicus? We doubt much whether it is the work of a very young man at all. It is wrought up to the author's conception of a dramatic poem; it has no inequalities: its gross defects were intended to be beauties. It was written unquestionably by one who had received a scholastic training, and who saw the whole world of poetry in the remembrance of what he had read; he looked not upon the heart of men; he looked not even upon the commonest features of external nature. Did Shakspere work thus in the poems that we know he produced when a young man? Assuredly not. If his training had been scholastic, his good sense would have taught him to see something in poetry besides the echo of his scholarship. Nor can " Locrine " be compared with Titus Andronicus. The faults of that play are produced by the uncontrolled energy which, straining for effect in action and passion, destroys even its own strength through the absence of calmness and repose. Even Shakspere could not at first perceive the universal truth which is contained in his own particular direction to the players :—" In the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) the whirlwind of passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness."

We have already apprised our readers that the opinions we entertain with regard to the authorship of " Locrine " are directly opposed to those of Tieck, who has translated the play. The passages we have selected are, we think, fair examples of the average character of the poetry; but Tieck has pointed out one passage which he considers demonstrative of the hand of Shakspere. He supposes that "Locrine" was enlarged and improved by our poet previous to the edition of 1595; and he says—"In this new edition are doubtless added many verses adapted to the circumstances of the time; but particularly the beautiful rhymed stanzas in the fourth act, which so distinctly remind us of his Sonnets and the Venus and Adonis, that these alone would prove the genuineness of the drama." We subjoin the stanzas:—

"Enter Soldiers, leading in ESTRILD.

Est. What prince soe'er, adorn'd with golden crown
Doth sway the regal sceptre in his hand,
And thinks no chance can ever throw him down,
Or that his state shall everlasting stand,
Let him behold poor Estrild in this plight,
The perfect platform of a troubled wight.

Once was I guarded with Mavortial bands,
Compass'd with princes of the noble blood;
Now am I fallen into my foemen's hands,
And with my death must pacify their mood.
O life, the harbour of calamities!
O death, the haven of all miseries!

I could compare my sorrows to thy woe,
Thou wretched queen of wretched Pergamus,
But that thou view'dst thy enemies' overthrow.
Nigh to the rock of high Caphareus
Thou saw'st their death, and then departedst thence:
I must abide the victors' insolence.

The gods, that pitied thy continual grief,
Transform'd thy corpse, and with thy corpse thy care;
Poor Estrild lives, despairing of relief,
For friends in trouble are but few and rare.
What said I, few? ay, few, or none at all,
For cruel Death made havoc of them all.

Thrice happy they whose fortune was so good
To end their lives, and with their lives their woes!
Thrice hapless I, whom Fortune so withstood,
That cruelly she gave me to my foes!
O soldiers, is there any misery
To be compar'd to Fortune's treachery?"

SIR JOHN OLDCASTLE.

PART I.

THE mode in which some of the German critics have spoken of this play is a rebuke to dogmatic assertions and criticism. Schlegel says —putting "Sir John Oldcastle," "Thomas Lord Cromwell," and "The Yorkshire Tragedy" in the same class—"The three last pieces are not only unquestionably Shakspere's, but in my opinion they deserve to be classed among his best and maturest works. . . . . 'Thomas Lord Cromwell' and 'Sir John Oldcastle' are biographical dramas, and models in this species; the first is linked, from its subject, to Henry VIII., and the second to Henry V." Tieck is equally confident in assigning the authorship of this play to Shakspere. Ulrici, on the contrary, takes a more sober view of the matter. He says—"The whole betrays a poet who endeavoured to form himself on Shakspere's model, nay, even to imitate him, but who stood far below him in mind and talent." Our own critics, relying upon the internal evidence, agreed in rejecting it. Malone could "not perceive the least trace of our great poet in any part of this play." He observes that it was originally entered on the Stationers' registers without the name of Shakspere; but he does not mention the fact that, of two editions printed in 1600, one bears the name of Shakspere, the other not. The one which has the name says—"As it hath bene lately acted by the Right honorable the Earle of Notingham, Lord High Admirall of England, his Seruants." In 1594 a play of Shakspere's might have been acted, as we believe Hamlet was, at Henslowe's theatre, which was that of the Lord High Admiral his servants; but in 1600 a play of Shakspere's would have unquestionably been acted by the Lord Chamberlain his servants. However, this conjectural evidence is quite unnecessary. Henslowe, the head of the Lord Admiral's company, as we learn by his Diary, on the 16th of October, 1599, paid "for The first part of the Lyfe of Sir Jhon Ouldcastell, and in earnest of the Second Pte, for the use of the company, ten pound;" and the money was received by "Thomas Downton" "to pay Mr. Monday, Mr. Drayton, Mr. Wilson, and Hathaway." We might here dismiss the question of the authorship of this play, did it not furnish a very curious example of the imperfect manner in which it was attempted to imitate the excellence and to rival the popularity of Shakspere's best historical plays at the time of their original production. It is not the least curious also of the circumstances connected with "The First Part of Sir John Oldcastle," that, whilst the bookseller affixed the name of Shakspere to the performance, it has been supposed that the Falstaff of his Henry IV. was pointed at in the following prologue:—

> "The doubtful title, gentlemen, prefix'd
> Upon the argument we have in hand,
> May breed suspense, and wrongfully disturb
> The peaceful quiet of your settled thoughts.
> To stop which scruple, let this brief suffice:
> It is no pamper'd glutton we present,
> Nor aged counsellor to youthful sin,
> But one, whose virtue shone above the rest,
> A valiant martyr, and a virtuous peer;
> In whose true faith and loyalty, express'd
> Unto his sovereign and his country's weal,
> We strive to pay that tribute of our love
> Your favours merit. Let fair truth be grac'd,
> Since forg'd invention former time defac'd."

In the Introductory Notice to Henry IV. we have adverted to the opinion that the Sir John Falstaff of Shakspere's Henry IV. was originally called Sir John Oldcastle; and the question is again touched upon in the Introductory Notice to The Merry Wives of Windsor. The line in the prologue which we have just quoted—

> "Since forg'd invention former time defac'd"—

might appear to point to an earlier period of the stage than that in which Shakspere's Henry IV. was produced. Indeed, the old play of "The Famous Victories" contains the character of Sir John Oldcastle. He is a low, ruffianly sort of fellow, who may be called "an aged counsellor to youthful sin;" but he is not represented as "a pampered glutton." In the Notice to Henry IV. we said—"In our opinion, there was either another play besides 'The Famous Victories' in which the name of Oldcastle was introduced, or the remarks of contemporary writers applied to Shakspere's Falstaff, who had originally borne the name of Oldcastle. The following passage is from Fuller's 'Church History:'—'Stage-poets have themselves been very bold with, and others very merry at, the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, whom they have fancied a boon companion, a jovial royster, and a coward to boot. The best is, Sir John Falstaff hath relieved the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, and of late is substituted buffoon in his place.' This description of Fuller cannot apply to the Sir John Oldcastle of 'The Famous Victories.' The dull dog of that play is neither a jovial companion nor a coward to boot." We added—"Whether or not Shakspere's Falstaff was originally called Oldcastle, Shakspere was, after the character was fairly established as Falstaff, anxious to vindicate himself from the charge that he had attempted to represent the Oldcastle of history. In the epilogue to the Second Part of Henry IV. we find this passage:—'For anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man.'" The Second Part of Henry IV., the epilogue of which contains this passage, was entered in the Stationers' registers in 1600, and was published in that year. When "The First Part of Sir John Oldcastle" was published in the same year, Falstaff is distinctly recognised as the companion of Prince Henry. In that play Henry V. is represented as robbed by the parson of Wrotham, a very queer hedge-priest indeed, bearing the name of Sir John, as if in rivalry of another Sir John; and the following dialogue takes place:—

> "Sir John. Sirrah, no more ado; come, come, give me the money you have. Despatch; I cannot stand all day.
> K. Henry. Well, if thou wilt needs have it, here it is. Just the proverb, one thief robs another. Where the devil are all my old thieves? Falstaff, that villain, is so fat, he cannot get on his horse; but methinks Poins and Peto should be stirring hereabouts.
> Sir John. How much is there on 't, o' thy word?"

Falstaff is again mentioned in the same scene by the priest, who asserts that the king was once a thief; and in answer to the question, "How canst thou tell?" replies—

> "How? because he once robbed me before I fell to the trade myself, when that foul villainous guts, that led him to all that roguery, was in his company there, that Falstaff."

We have here tolerable evidence that Falstaff was "not the man"

Oldcastle in 1600. And yet the following very remarkable letter, or dedication, is written some years after:—

"To my noble friend Sir Henry Bourchier:

"Sir Harry Bourchier, you are descended of noble ancestry, and in the duty of a good man love to hear and see fair reputation preserved from slander and oblivion. Wherefore to you I dedicate this edition of Ocleve, where Sir John Oldcastle appears to have been a man of valour and virtue, and only lost in his own times because he would not bow under the foul superstition of Papistry, from whence, in so great a light of Gospel and learning, that there is not yet a more universal departure, is to me the greatest scorn of men. But of this more in another place, and in preface will you please to hear me that which follows? A young gentle lady of your acquaintance, having read the works of Shakespeare, made me this question: How Sir John Falstaffe, or Fastolf as it is written in the statute-book of Maudlin College, in Oxford, where every day that society were bound to make memory of his soul, could be dead in Harry the Fifth's time and again live in the time of Harry the Sixth to be banished for cowardice? Whereto I made answer that this was one of those humours and mistakes for which Plato banished all poets out of his commonwealth; that Sir John Falstaff was in those times a valiant soldier, as appears by a book in the Herald's office, dedicated unto him by a herald who had been with him, if I well remember, for the space of 25 years in the French wars; that he seems also to have been a man of learning, because in a library of Oxford I find a book of dedicating churches sent from him for a present unto Bishop Wainfleet, and inscribed with his own name. That in Shakespeare's first show of Harry the Fifth, the person with which he undertook to play a buffoon was not Falstaff, but Sir John Oldcastle; and that, offence being worthily taken by personages descended from his title, as peradventure by many others also who ought to have him in honourable memory, the poet was put to make an ignorant shift of abusing Sir John Falstophe, a man not inferior of virtue, though not so famous in piety as the other, who gave witness unto the trust of our reformation with a constant and resolute martyrdom, unto which he was pursued by the priests, bishops, monks, and friars, of those days. Noble sir, this is all my preface. God keep you, and me, and all Christian people, from the bloody designs of that cruel religion.

"Yours in all observance,

"RICH. JAMES."

This letter is contained in a manuscript preserved in the Bodleian Library, written by Dr. Richard James, who died in 1638. The manuscript to which it is prefixed is entitled "The Legend and Defence of the Noble Knight and Martyr, Sir John Oldcastel," and has been published by Mr. Halliwell, having been pointed out to him by the Rev. Dr. Bliss.

The "young gentle lady" who, according to this letter, was so well employed in studying Shakspere's historical plays, read them as many other persons read, without any very accurate perception of what essentially belongs to the province of imagination, and of what is literally true. Whatever similarity there may be in the names of Sir John Falstaff and Sir John Fastolf, the young lady might have perceived that the poet had not the slightest intention of proposing the Fastolf of Henry VI. as the Falstaff of Henry IV. Assuredly the Falstaff that we last see in the closing scene of the Second Part of Henry IV.—a jester, surfeit-swelled, old, profane, as the king denounces him—is not the Fastolf that makes his appearance at the battle of Patay, in the First Part of Henry VI., and is subsequently degraded from being a Knight of the Garter for his conduct on that occasion. In these scenes of Henry VI. Shakspere drew an historical character, and represented an historical fact. The degradation of Fastolf was in all probability an unjust sentence, as unjust as that pronounced by the worthy writer of the letter in the Bodleian Library, that the wittiest of all Shakspere's creations was a "buffoon," and that he might be confounded with the very commonplace knight whose only distinction was the garter on his leg. Fastolf was a respectable personage, no doubt, in his day, but not "sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff." It appears to us, therefore, that, in the same manner as the "young gentle lady" and Dr. Richard James, somewhat ignorantly, as we think, confounded Fastolf and Falstaff, so they erred in a similar way by believing that "in Shakespeare's first show of Harry the Fifth, the person with which he undertook to play a buffoon was not Falstaff, but Sir John Oldcastle." Fuller, in his "Worthies," speaking of Sir John Falstaff, has the same complaint, as we have seen, against "stage-poets." Now, admitting what appears possible, that Shakspere in his Henry IV. originally had the name of Oldcastle where we now find that of Falstaff, is it likely that he could have meant the champion of the Reformation of Wickliff, who was cruelly put to death for heresy in the fourth year of Henry V., to have been the boon companion of the youthful prince; and who, before the king went to the French wars, died quietly in his bed, "e'en at the turning of the tide?" And yet there is little doubt that, when Shakspere adopted a name familiar to the stage, he naturally raised up this species of absurd misconception, which had the remarkable fate of being succeeded by a mistake still more absurd, that Falstaff and Fastolf were one and the same. It is, however, extremely probable that there were other plays in which the character of Sir John Oldcastle was presented historically, and falsely presented; that from this circumstance Shakspere saw the necessity of substituting another name for Oldcastle, and of making the declaration, "Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man;" and that the authors of the play before us, "The First Part of Sir John Oldcastle," adopted a subject with which the public mind was at that time familiar, and presented Sir John Oldcastle upon the stage, in a manner that would be agreeable to "personages descended from his title," and to the great body of the people "who ought to have him in honourable memory." Whether the reputation of Oldcastle derived much benefit from their labours remains to be seen.

The play opens with a quarrel in the street of Hereford between Lord Herbert, Lord Powis, and their followers; which is put down by the judges, who are holding the assize in the town. The commencement of the conflict, in which blood was shed, is thus described:—

"Lord Powis detracted from the power of Rome,
Affirming Wickliff's doctrine to be true,
And Rome's erroneous: hot reply was made
By the lord Herbert; they were traitors all
That would maintain it. Powis answered,
They were as true, as noble, and as wise,
As he; they would defend it with their lives;
He nam'd, for instance, sir John Oldcastle,
The lord Cobham: Herbert replied again,
He, thou, and all, are traitors that so hold.
The lie was given, the several factions drawn,
And so enrag'd that we could not appease it."

The second scene introduces us to the Bishop of Rochester denouncing Lord Cobham (Oldcastle) as a heretic to the Duke of Suffolk. The bishop is supported by Sir John of Wrotham, whose zeal is so boisterous as to receive the following rebuke from the duke:—

"Oh, but you must not swear; it ill becomes
One of your coat to rap out bloody oaths."

The king appears to hear the complaint of the churchman; and he promises to send for Oldcastle, "and school him privately." In the third scene we have Lord Cobham and an aged servant, and Lord Powis arrives in disguise, and is concealed by Cobham. In the second act we have a comic scene, amusing enough, but anything but original; a sumner arrives to cite Lord Cobham before the Ecclesiastical Court, and the old servant of the noble reformer makes the officer eat the citation. Nashe tells us, in his "Pierce Pennylesse," that he once saw Robert Greene "make an apparitor eat his citation, wax and all, very handsomely served 'twixt two dishes." We have something like the same incident in the play of the "Pinner of Wakefield." The scene changes to London, where we have an assembly of rebels, who give out that Oldcastle will be their general. In the next scene, which is probably the best sustained of the play, we have Henry and Lord Cobham in conference :—

* On the Character of Sir John Falstaff (1841).

"K. Henry. 'Tis not enough, lord Cobham, to submit ;
You must forsake your gross opinion.
The bishops find themselves much injured ;
And though, for some good service you have done,
We for our part are pleas'd to pardon you,
Yet they will not so soon be satisfied.
Cob. My gracious lord, unto your majesty,
Next unto my God, I do owe my life ;
And what is mine, either by nature's gift,
Or fortune's bounty, all is at your service.
But for obedience to the pope of Rome,
I owe him none ; nor shall his shaveling priests,
That are in England, alter my belief.
If out of Holy Scripture they can prove
That I am in an error, I will yield,
And gladly take instruction at their hands :
But otherwise, I do beseech your grace
My conscience may not be encroach'd upon.
K. Henry. We would be loth to press our subjects' bodies,
Much less their souls, the dear redeemed part
Of Him that is the ruler of us all
Yet let me counsel you, that might command.
Do not presume to tempt them with ill words,
Nor suffer any meetings to be had
Within your house ; but to the uttermost
Disperse the flocks of this new gathering sect.
Cob. My liege, if any breathe, that dares come forth,
And say, my life in any of these points
Deserves the attainder of ignoble thoughts,
Here stand I, craving no remorse at all,
But even the utmost rigour may be shown."

The Bishop of Rochester appears, and denounces Cobham for the contempt shown to his citation ; the king reproves the bishop and dismisses Oldcastle in safety. It is evident that the dramatic capabilities of such a scene furnish an occasion for the display of high poetical power. The interview between Henry and his faithful friend and adherent ; the anxiety of the reformer to vindicate himself from disloyalty, whilst he honestly supported his own opinions ; the natural desire of the king to resist innovation, whilst he respected the virtues of the innovator,—points like these would have been handled by Shakspere, or one imbued with his spirit, in a manner that would have lived and abided in our memories. The lines that we have quoted, which are the best in the scene, furnish a sufficient proof that the subject was in feeble hands.

The third act opens to us the conspiracy of Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey. The conspirators meet Lord Cobham. The mode in which they introduce their purpose is spirited and dramatic. Cobham has invited them to his house, and promises them hunters' fare and a hunt. Cambridge thus replies, before he presents the paper which discloses the plot :—

"Cam. Nay, but the stag which we desire to strike
Lives not in Cowling : if you will consent,
And go with us, we'll bring you to a forest
Where runs a lusty herd ; among the which
There is a stag superior to the rest,
A stately beast, that, when his fellows run,
He leads the race, and beats the sullen earth,
As though he scorn'd it, with his trampling hoofs ;
Aloft he bears his head, and with his breast,
Like a huge bulwark, counterchecks the wind
And, when he standeth still, he stretcheth forth
His proud ambitious neck, as if he meant
To wound the firmament with forked horns.
Cob. 'Tis pity such a goodly beast should die.
Cam. Not so, sir John ; for he is tyrannous,
And gores the other deer, and will not keep
Within the limits are appointed him.
Of late he's broke into a several,
Which doth belong to me, and there he spoils
Both corn and pasture. Two of his wild race,
Alike for stealth and covetous encroaching,
Already are remov'd ; if he were dead,
I should not only be secure from hurt,
But with his body make a royal feast."

Cobham then dissembles, and asks—

"Is not this a train laid to entrap my life?"

They offer to swear fidelity ; but he requires them only to subscribe the writing. The time and place of meeting are appointed, and they part. Cobham puts the paper in his pocket, and goes off to betray them to the king. The state morality of the age of Elizabeth might, perhaps, have made this incident more palatable to an audience of that day than to ourselves ; but we doubt whether Shakspere would have put this burden upon the soul of one whom he wished to represent as a hero and a martyr. We have more scenes of the rebels ; followed by the scene which we have already noticed of the parson robbing the king. The same worthy divine is afterwards found in the king's camp, dicing with his Majesty ; and then the robbery is discovered, and the robber pardoned. The rebels who were in the field, headed by Sir Roger Acton, are routed. The Bishop of Rochester affirms that they were incited by Cobham, who arrives at the moment of the accusation to prove his loyalty by denouncing Scroop, Grey, and Cambridge. The king is satisfied ; but subsequently the Bishop of Rochester seizes Cobham, and confines him in the Tower, from which he very soon escapes. With the exception of a scene in which Cambridge and the other conspirators are seized by the king, the whole of the fifth act is occupied by the wanderings of Cobham and his wife, their disguises, and their escapes. The following scene is happily imagined and gracefully expressed :—

"Cob. Come, madam, happily escap'd. Here let us sit ;
This place is far remote from any path ;
And here awhile our weary limbs may rest
To take refreshing, free from the pursuit
Of envious Rochester.
L. Cob. But where, my lord,
Shall we find rest for our disquiet minds?
There dwell untamed thoughts, that hardly stoop
To such abasement of disdained rags :
We were not wont to travel thus by night,
Especially on foot.
Cob. No matter, love,
Extremities admit no better choice ;
And, were it not for thee, say froward time
Impos'd a greater task, I would esteem it
As lightly as the wind that blows upon us :
But in thy sufferance I am doubly task'd ;
Thou wast not wont to have the earth thy stool,
Nor the moist dewy grass thy pillow, nor
Thy chamber to be the wide horizon.
L. Cob. How can it seem a trouble, having you
A partner with me in the worst I feel?
No, gentle lord, your presence would give ease
To death itself, should he now seize upon me.
[She produces some bread and cheese and a bottle.
Behold, what my foresight has underta'en,
For fear we faint ; they are but homely cates ;
Yet, sauc'd with hunger, they may seem as sweet
As greater dainties we were wont to taste.
Cob. Praise be to Him whose plenty sends both this
And all things else our mortal bodies need!
Nor scorn we this poor feeding, nor the state
We now are in ; for what is it on earth,
Nay, under heaven, continues at a stay?
Ebbs not the sea, when it hath overflow'd?
Follows not darkness, when the day is gone?
And see we not sometimes the eye of heaven

Dimm'd with o'er-flying clouds? There's not that work
Of careful nature, or of cunning art,
How strong, how beauteous, or how rich it be,
But falls in time to ruin. Here, gentle madam,
In this one draught I wash my sorrow down. [Drinks.

The persecuted pair fall asleep; and a murdered body being found near them, they are apprehended as the murderers, and conducted to trial. They are discharged through the discovery of the real murderer; and fly with Lord Powis into Wales.

It will be evident, from this analysis, that "The First Part of Sir John Oldcastle" is entirely deficient in dramatic unity. Shakspere, in representing a series of historical events, did not, of course, attempt to sustain that unity of idea which we see so strikingly in his best tragedies and comedies. We have not one great action, but a succession of actions; and yet, through his wonderful power of characterization, and his skill in grouping a series of events round one leading event, we have a principle upon which the mind can determinately rest, and rightly comprehend the whole dramatic movement. In the play before us there is no distinct relation between one scene and another. We forget the connection between Oldcastle and the events in which he is implicated; and when he himself appears on the scene, the development of character, in which a real poet would have luxuriated, is made subordinate to the hurry of the perplexed though monotonous movement of the story. Thoroughly to understand the surpassing power of Shakspere in the management of the historical drama, it might be desirable to compare John, or Richard II., or Richard III., or Henry VIII., with this play; but, after all, the things do not admit of comparison.

THOMAS LORD CROMWELL.

THE first edition of this play was published in 1602, under the title of "The Chronicle History of Thomas Lord Cromwell." No name or initials of any author appear in the title-page. In 1613 appeared "The true Chronicle Historie of the whole life and death of Thomas Lord Cromwell. As it hath beene sundry times publikely Acted by the Kings Majesties Seruants. Written by W. S." In 1602 the registers of the Stationers' Company had the entry of "A Booke called the Lyfe and Deathe of the Lord Cromwell, as yt was lately acted by the Lord Chamberleyn his servants." It appears, therefore, that the play was originally performed, and continued to be performed, by the company in which Shakspere was a chief proprietor. In the Introductory Notice to Henry VIII. we have attempted to show that Shakspere produced that play as a new play in 1613. It is easy to understand why, in 1613, it might recommend the sale of "Thomas Lord Cromwell" to put W. S. on the title-page, whether those initials represented the real writer, or were meant to imply that the writer was William Shakspere. Beyond these initials there is no external evidence whatever to attribute the play to the great dramatizer of English history.

Schlegel, as we have seen, calls "Sir John Oldcastle" and "Thomas Lord Cromwell" "biographical dramas, and models in this species." We have no hesitation in affirming that a biographical drama, especially such a drama as "Thomas Lord Cromwell," is essentially undramatic. "Oldcastle" takes a portion only of the life of its hero; but "Cromwell" gives us the story of the man from his boyhood to his execution. The resemblance which it bears to any play of Shakspere's is solely in the structure of the title; and that parallel holds good only with regard to one play, Lear, according to its original title, the "True Chronicle Historie of the life and death of King Lear and his three Daughters." In the folio collection of 1623 we have, indeed, "The Life and Death of King John," "The Life and Death of Richard II.," "The Life of King Henry V.," "The Life and Death of Richard III.," and "The Life of King Henry VIII." So, in the same edition, we have "The Life and Death of Julius Cæsar." But our readers are perfectly aware that in all these dramas a very small portion of the life of the hero of each is included in the action. Shakspere knew his art too well to attempt to teach history dramatically by connecting a series of isolated events solely by their relation to a principal agent, without any other dependence. Nothing, for example, can be more complete in itself than the action of Richard II., or that of Henry V., of Richard III., and of Henry VIII. We have in these pieces nearly all the condensation which pure tragedy requires. But in "Thomas Lord Cromwell," on the contrary, what Shakspere would have told in a few words, reserving himself for an exhibition of character in the more striking situations, is actually presented to us in a succession of scenes that have no relation to any action of deepening interest—chapter upon chapter of which might have been very well spared, if one chapter, that of the elevation and fall of Cromwell, had occupied a space proportioned to its importance.

We begin the drama in the shop of old Cromwell, the blacksmith, at Putney, where young Cromwell, with a want of sense that ill accords with his future advancement, insists that his father's men shall leave off work because their noise disturbs his study. His father comes, and, like a sensible and honest man, reproves his son for his vagaries; and then the ambitious youth, who proclaims the purpose of his presaging soul, that he will build a palace

> "As fine as is king Henry's house at Sheen,"

thus soliloquises :—

> "Why should my birth keep down my mounting spirit?
> Are not all creatures subject unto time,
> To time, who doth abuse the cheated world,
> And fills it full of hodge-podge bastardy?
> There's legions now of beggars on the earth
> That their original did spring from kings;
> And many monarchs now, whose fathers were
> The riff-raff of their age: for time and fortune
> Wears out a noble train to beggary;
> And from the dunghill millions do advance
> To state and mark in this admiring world.
> This is but course, which in the name of fate
> Is seen as often as it whirls about.
> The river Thames, that by our door doth pass,
> His first beginning is but small and shallow;
> Yet, keeping on his course, grows to a sea.
> And likewise Wolsey, the wonder of our age,
> His birth as mean as mine, a butcher's son;
> Now who within this land a greater man?
> Then, Cromwell, cheer thee up, and tell thy soul,
> That thou may'st live to flourish and control."

The young man, who despises work, immediately gets employment without seeking it—to be secretary to the English merchants at Antwerp. Then commences the secondary action of the drama, which consists of the adventures of one Banister, an English merchant, who is persecuted by Bagot, a usurer, and relieved by a foreign merchant. It is by no means clear what this has to do with Thomas Lord Cromwell; but it may be satisfactory to know that eventually the usurer is hanged, and the merchant is restored to competence.

It would have been difficult, with all the author's contempt for unity of action, to have contrived to have told the whole story of Cromwell dramatically; and so he occasionally gives us a chorus. The second act thus opens :—

> "Now, gentlemen, imagine that young Cromwell's
> In Antwerp, leiger for the English merchants;
> And Banister, to shun this Bagot's hate,
> Hearing that he hath got some of his debts,
> Is fled to Antwerp, with his wife and children;
> Which Bagot hearing, is gone after them,
> And thither sends his bills of debt before,
> To be reveng'd on wretched Banister.
> What doth fall out, with patience sit and see,
> A just requital of false treachery."

Cromwell has nothing to do with this "just requital of false treachery"—which requital consists in the usurer being arrested for purchasing the king's stolen jewels. Cromwell gets as tired of keeping accounts as he previously was of the din of his father's smithy; so all in a moment he throws up his commission, and sets off upon his travels to Italy, having very opportunely met in Antwerp with Hodge, his father's man. And so we get through the second act.

In the third act the capricious lad and his servant are standing penniless upon the bridge at Florence, and their immediate necessities are relieved by the generous Italian merchant who was succouring the distress of the Englishman in the first act. Cromwell is always moving; and he sets off for Bononia, where he rescues, by a stratagem, Russell, the Earl of Bedford, from the agents of the French king. We have the chorus again in the middle of the act:—

"Thus far you see how Cromwell's fortune pass'd.
The earl of Bedford, being safe in Mantua,
Desires Cromwell's company into France,
To make requital for his courtesy;
But Cromwell doth deny the earl his suit,
And tells him that those parts he meant to see,
He had not yet set footing on the land;
And so directly takes his way to Spain;
The earl to France; and so they both do part.
Now let your thoughts, as swift as is the wind,
Skip some few years that Cromwell spent in travel;
And now imagine him to be in England,
Servant unto the master of the rolls;
Where in short time he there began to flourish:
An hour shall show you what few years did cherish."

The scene shifts to London, where Sir Christopher Hales is giving an entertainment to Cardinal Wolsey and Sir Thomas More, with Cromwell waiting on the guests. The sudden preferment of Cromwell to the highest confidence of Wolsey is accomplished with a celerity which was perfectly necessary when the poet had so many events to tell us:—

"Wol. Sir Christopher, is that your man?
Hales. An't like
Your grace, he is a scholar, and a linguist;
One that hath travelled through many parts
Of Christendom, my lord.
Wol. My friend, come nearer: have you been a traveller?
Crom. My lord,
I have added to my knowledge the Low Countries,
With France, Spain, Germany, and Italy;
And though small gain of profit I did find,
Yet it did please my eye, content my mind.
Wol. What do you think then of the several states
And princes' courts as you have travelled?
Crom. My lord, no court with England may compare,
Neither for state, nor civil government.
Lust dwells in France, in Italy, and Spain,
From the poor peasant to the prince's train.
In Germany and Holland, riot serves;
And he that most can drink, most he deserves.
England I praise not for I here was born,
But that she laughs the others unto scorn.
Wol. My lord, there dwells within that spirit more
Than can be discern'd by the outward eye:—
Sir Christopher, will you part with your man?
Hales. I have sought to proffer him unto your lordship;
And now I see he hath preferr'd himself.
Wol. What is thy name?
Crom. Cromwell, my lord.
Wol. Then, Cromwell, here we make thee solicitor
Of our causes, and nearest, next ourself
Gardiner, give you kind welcome to the man."

The fourth act opens again with a chorus:—

"Now, Cromwell's highest fortunes do begin.
Wolsey, that lov'd him as he did his life,
Committed all his treasure to his hands.
Wolsey is dead; and Gardiner, his man,
Is now created bishop of Winchester.
Pardon if we omit all Wolsey's life,
Because our play depends on Cromwell's death.
Now sit, and see his highest state of all,
His height of rising, and his sudden fall.
Pardon the errors are already past,
And live in hope the best doth come at last.
My hope upon your favour doth depend,
And looks to have your liking ere the end."

It was certainly needless for the author to apologize for omitting "all Wolsey's life;" but the apology is curious as exhibiting his rude notions of what was properly within the province of the drama. We have now Cromwell, after the death of Wolsey, become Sir Thomas Cromwell; and Gardiner makes a sudden resolution that he will have his head. The Florence merchant comes to London in want; and we presently find him at the hospitable board of Cromwell, with money-bags showered upon him, and his debts paid. We have in this act a scene between Gardiner and Cromwell which, feeble as it is, is amongst the best passages of the play:—

"Crom. Good morrow to my lord of Winchester: I know
You bear me hard about the abbey lands.
Gard. Have I not reason, when religion's wronged?
You had no colour for what you have done.
Crom. Yes, the abolishing of antichrist,
And of his popish order from our realm.
I am no enemy to religion;
But what is done, it is for England's good.
What did they serve for, but to feed a sort
Of lazy abbots and of full-fed friars?
They neither plough nor sow, and yet they reap
The fat of all the land, and suck the poor.
Look, what was theirs is in king Henry's hands;
His wealth before lay in the abbey lands.
Gard. Indeed these things you have alleg'd, my lord;
When, God doth know, the infant yet unborn
Will curse the time the abbeys were pull'd down.
I pray now where is hospitality?
Where now may poor distressed people go,
For to relieve their need, or rest their bones,
When weary travel doth oppress their limbs?
And where religious men should take them in,
Shall now be kept back with a mastiff dog;
And thousand thousand——"

Gardiner suborns witnesses to impute treasonable words to Cromwell, and absolves them by crucifix and holy water.

The real action of the play commences at the fourth act; all which precedes might have been told by a skilful poet in a dozen lines. The fifth act presents us the arrest of Cromwell; and after a soliloquy in the Tower, and a very feeble scene between the unhappy man, Gardiner, and the Dukes of Suffolk and Norfolk, his son is introduced, of whom we have before heard nothing:—

"Lieu. Here is your son, sir, come to take his leave.
Crom. To take his leave? Come hither, Harry Cromwell.
Mark, boy, the last words that I speak to thee:
Flatter not fortune, neither fawn upon her;
Gape not for state, yet lose no spark of honour;
Ambition, like the plague, see thou eschew it:
I die for treason, boy, and never knew it.
Yet let thy faith as spotless be as mine,
And Cromwell's virtues in thy face shall shine:
Come, go along, and see me leave my breath,
And I'll leave thee upon the floor of death."

Cromwell leaves the stage for his execution with this speech:—

"Exec. I am your deathsman; pray, my lord, forgive me.
Crom. Even with my soul. Why, man, thou art my doctor,
And bring'st me precious physic for my soul.
My lord of Bedford, I desire of you
Before my death a corporal embrace.
Farewell, great lord; my love I do commend,
My heart to you; my soul to heaven I send.
This is my joy, that ere my body fleet,
Your honour'd arms are my true winding-sheet

Farewell, dear Bedford; my peace is made in heaven.
Thus falls great Cromwell, a poor ell in length,
To rise to unmeasur'd height, wing'd with new strength,
The land of worms, which dying men discover:
My soul is shrin'd with heaven's celestial cover."

It would be a waste of time to attempt to show that "Thomas Lord Cromwell" could not have been written by Shakspere. Its entire management is most unskilful; there is no art whatever in the dramatic conception of plot or character; from first to last there is scarcely a passage that can be called poetry; there is nothing in it that gives us a notion of a writer capable of better things; it has none of the faults of the founders of the stage—false taste, extravagance, riches needlessly paraded. We are acquainted with no dramatic writer of mark or likelihood, who was a contemporary of Shakspere, to whom it may be assigned. If W. S. were Wentworth Smith, it must have been unlucky for him in his own time that his initials might excite a comparison with the great master of the stage, however fortunate he may have been in having descended to after-times in the same volume with ten historical plays that probably first stimulated his weak ambition.

THE LONDON PRODIGAL.

THIS comedy was first published in 1605, with the following title:—"The London Prodigall. As it was plaide by the Kings Maiesties seruants. By William Shakespeare, London. Printed by T. C. for Nathaniel Butter." It was probably written after the death of Elizabeth; for in the second act we have, "I am a commander, sir, under the king." There is no entry of the play in the Stationers' registers. Schlegel says—"If we are not mistaken, Lessing pronounced this piece to be Shakspere's, and wished to bring it on the German stage." Tieck also assigns this comedy to Shakspere. Hazlitt says—"'Locrine' and 'The London Prodigal,' if they were Shakspeare's at all, must have been amongst the sins of his youth." This is at best a hasty opinion; for there can be no doubt whatever that these two plays belong to different periods, and that each is characteristic of its period. They must have been separated by at least twenty years. If in "Locrine" we could find any natural power, any of that instinctive knowledge of art, that constitutes genius, we might inquire whether it was possible that the youthful Shakspere could have produced the work. We find in it, not the faults of a very young man, but the habits which belong to a vicious system, in which the writer has had a complete training. We therefore reject it. Putting the date of its publication out of the question, we are satisfied, from the general tone of "The London Prodigal," that it represents the manners of the last years of Elizabeth, or the first of James. If Shakspere wrote it, therefore, he must have written it after his comic powers were fully matured; after he had produced Much Ado about Nothing, Twelfth Night, As You Like It, The Merry Wives of Windsor. The belief is almost too extravagant to be gravely controverted.

The comedy opens with the arrival from Venice of the merchant Flowerdale senior, who had left his son Matthew under the guardianship of his brother, Flowerdale junior, a London merchant. The uncle tells the father of the reckless course of the young man. The father takes this view of the matter:—"Believe me, brother, they that die most virtuous have in their youth lived most vicious; and none knows the danger of the fire more than he that falls into it." This, we undertake to say, is not the morality of Shakspere: it is a tolerance beyond his tolerance. But it is the morality which prevails in "The London Prodigal." The uncle goes on to say that the son is a continual swearer, a breaker of his oaths, a mighty brawler, a great drinker, one that will borrow of any man. The youth knocks at the door; and the father disguised is to be represented as dead. A will is produced by which the son is disinherited; and it is justice to him to say that he displays the same indifference about the loss of fortune as about the death of his father. Old Flowerdale lends him £20 in his assumed character, and agrees to engage with him as a servant. A wooing now commences after a strange fashion. Sir Lancelot Spurcock has three daughters, of whom Luce, the most attractive, has three suitors—Sir Arthur Greenshield, whom she prefers; Oliver, a Devonshire clothier, whom the father patronises; and young Flowerdale, who is rejected both by father and daughter. A more heartless scoundrel certainly never presented himself in worshipful society. His father being named, he thus speaks of him:—

> "Ay, God be praised, he is far enough;
> He is gone a pilgrimage to Paradise,
> And left me to cut a caper against care.
> Luce, look on me that am as light as air."

His father, who in his assumed character of a servant is called Kester, is desirous to marry his son to the lady; and he thus devises a plan for overcoming the prudential scruples of Sir Lancelot:—

> "Presently we'll go and draw a will,
> Where we'll set down land that we never saw;
> And we will have it of so large a sum,
> Sir Lancelot shall entreat you take his daughter.
> This being form'd, give it master Weathercock,
> And make Sir Lancelot's daughter heir of all;
> And make him swear never to show the will
> To any one, until that you be dead.
> This done, the foolish changing Weathercock
> Will straight discourse unto Sir Lancelot
> The form and tenor of your testament.
> Ne'er stand to pause of it; be rul'd by me:
> What will ensue, that shall you quickly see."

The device succeeds. The covetous knight rejects the honest clothier, and Luce is married against her will to the heartless profligate, who thus discloses the nature of his love in confidence to Kester:—

> "And thou shalt see, when once I have my dower,
> In mirth we'll spend full many a merry hour.
> As for this wench, I not regard a pin,
> It is her gold must bring my pleasures in."

The father and uncle concert to arrest the prodigal on his return from church, that they may try the temper of his wife. The libertine braves it out when this resolve is carried into effect; but the unhappy woman clings to him, now he is her husband, with a tenderness that in the hands of a real poet might have been worked up into subsequent situations of uncommon beauty:—

> "Sir Lanc. I am cozen'd, and my hopefullest child undone.
> M. Flow. You are not cozen'd, nor is she undone.
> They slander me; by this light, they slander me.
> Look you, my uncle here's an usurer,
> And would undo me; but I'll stand in law;
> Do you but bail me, you shall do no more
> You, brother Civet, and master Weathercock, do but bail me,
> And let me have my marriage-money paid me,
> And we'll ride down, and your own eyes shall see
> How my poor tenants there will welcome me.
> You shall but bail me, you shall do no more:—
> And you, you greedy gnat, their bail will serve!
> Flow. Jun. Ay, sir, I'll ask no better bail.
> Sir Lanc. No, sir, you shall not take my bail, nor his,
> Nor my son Civet's: I'll not be cheated, I.
> Shrieve, take your prisoner; I'll not deal with him.
> Let his uncle make false dice with his false bones;
> I will not have to do with him: mock'd, gull'd, and wrong'd!
> Come, girl, though it be late, it falls out well;
> Thou shalt not live with him in beggar's hell.
> Luce. He is my husband, and high heaven doth know
> With what unwillingness I went to church;
> But you enforc'd me, you compell'd me to it.
> The holy churchman pronounc'd these words but now,
> 'I must not leave my husband in distress:'
> Now I must comfort him, not go with you.
> Sir Lanc. Comfort a cozener! on my curse forsake him.
> Luce. This day you caus'd me on your curse to take him.
> Do not, I pray, my grieved soul oppress:
> God knows my heart doth bleed at his distress."

The wife refuses to go home with her father; and she is left with her husband and his uncle:—

"Luce. O go not yet, good master Flowerdale:
Take my word for the debt, my word, my bond.
M. Flow. Ay, by ——, uncle, and my bond too.
Luce. Alas, I ne'er ought nothing but I paid it;
And I can work: alas, he can do nothing.
I have some friends perhaps will pity me:
His chiefest friends do seek his misery.
All that I can or beg, get, or receive,
Shall be for you. O do not turn away:
Methinks, within a face so reverend,
So well experienc'd in this tottering world,
Should live some feeling of a maiden's grief:
For my sake, his father's and your brother's sake,
Ay, for your soul's sake, that doth hope for joy,
Pity my state; do not two souls destroy.
Flow. Jun. Fair maid, stand up: not in regard of him,
But in pity of thy hapless choice,
I do release him. Master sheriff, I thank you;
And, officers, there is for you to drink.
Here, maid, take this money; there is a hundred angels:
And, for I will be sure he shall not have it,
Here, Kester, take it you, and use it sparingly;
But let not her have any want at all.
Dry your eyes, niece; do not too much lament
For him whose life hath been in riot spent:
If well he useth thee, he gets him friends;
If ill, a shameful end on him depends. [Exit FLOWERDALE Jun.
M. Flow. A plague go with you for an old fornicator!
Come, Kit, the money; come, honest Kit.
Flow. Sen. Nay, by my faith, sir, you shall pardon me.
M. Flow. And why, sir, pardon you? Give me the money, you old rascal, or I will make you.
Luce. Pray hold your hands; give it him, honest friend.
Flow. Sen. If you be so content, with all my heart.
[Gives the money.
M. Flow. Content, sir? 'sblood! she shall be content whether she will or no. A rattle-baby come to follow me! Go, get you gone to the greasy chuff your father; bring me your dowry, or never look on me.
Flow. Sen. Sir, she hath forsook her father and all her friends for you.
M. Flow. Hang thee, her friends and father, all together!
Flow. Sen. Yet part with something to provide her lodging.
M. Flow. Yes, I mean to part with her and you; but if I part with one angel, hang me at a post. I'll rather throw them at a cast of dice, as I have done a thousand of their fellows."

The unmitigated villain deserts his wife after this brutality. She is, necessarily, protected by his father; and, disguised as "a Dutch frow," enters into the service of her own married sister. Matthew Flowerdale loses his hundred angels at the gaming-table; robs Spurcock's unmarried daughter upon the highway; is reduced to starvation and beggary; receives alms from his own wife in her Dutch mask; and thus shows how the medicine misfortune has operated upon his soul:—"By this hand, this Dutch wench is in love with me. Were it not admirable to make her steal all Civet's plate, and run away?" Of course the fellow has his deserts. He is about to be taken to prison on a charge of robbery, and on suspicion of having murdered his wife. The Dutch frow, who sees his arrest, throws off her dress, and the following scene quickly leads to a happy conclusion:—

"Luce. I am no trull, neither outlandish frow:
Nor he nor I shall to the prison go.
Know you me now? nay, never stand amaz'd.
Father, I know I have offended you;
And though that duty wills me bend my knees
To you in duty and obedience,
Yet this way do I turn, and to him yield
My love, my duty, and my humbleness.
Sir Lanc. Bastard in nature! kneel to such a slave?
Luce. O master Flowerdale, if too much grief
Have not stopp'd up the organs of your voice,
Then speak to her that is thy faithful wife;
Or doth contempt of me thus tie thy tongue?
Turn not away; I am no Æthiop,
No wanton Cressid, nor a changing Helen;
But rather one made wretched by thy loss.
What! turn'st thou still from me? O then
I guess thee wofull'st among hapless men.
M. Flow. I am indeed, wife, wonder among wives!
Thy chastity and virtue hath infus'd
Another soul in me, red with defame,
For in my blushing cheeks is seen my shame."

Old Flowerdale also throws off his disguise, and the son rejoices in a kind wife and a forgiving father:—

"M. Flow. My father! O, I shame to look on him.
Pardon, dear father, the follies that are past.
Flow. Sen. Son, son, I do; and joy at this thy change,
And applaud thy fortune in this virtuous maid,
Whom Heaven hath sent to thee to save thy soul.
Luce. This addeth joy to joy; high Heaven be prais'd.
Weath. Master Flowerdale, welcome from death, good master Flowerdale. 'Twas said so here, 'twas said so here, good faith.
Flow. Sen. I caus'd that rumour to be spread myself,
Because I'd see the humours of my son,
Which to relate the circumstance is needless.
And, sirrah, see
You run no more into that same disease:
For he that's once cur'd of that malady,
Of riot, swearing, drunkenness, and pride,
And falls again into the like distress,
That fever's deadly, doth till death endure:
Such men die mad, as of a calenture.
M. Flow. Heaven helping me, I'll hate the course as hell.
Flow. Jun. Say it, and do it, cousin, all is well.
Sir Lanc. Well, being in hope you'll prove an honest man,
I take you to my favour."

If Shakspere had chosen such a plot, in which the sudden repentance of the offender was to compensate for the miseries he had inflicted, he would have made the prodigal retain some sense of honour, some remorse amidst his recklessness—something that would have given the assurance that his contrition was not hypocrisy. We have little doubt that the low moral tone of the writer's own mind produced the low morality of the plot and its catastrophe. We see in this play that confusion of principles of which the stage was too long the faithful mirror. In Shakspere the partition which separates levity and guilt is never broken down; thoughtlessness and dishonour are not treated with equal indulgence. This is quite argument enough to prove that Shakspere could not have written this comedy, nor rendered the least assistance in its composition. If it exhibited any traces of his wit or his poetry, we should still reject it upon this sole ground.

THE PURITAN.

THE first edition of this comedy was published in 1607, under the following title:—"The Puritaine or the Widdow of Watling-streete. Acted by the Children of Paules. Written by W. S." The entry of the play appears in the Stationers' registers of the same year. It was printed, as we have seen, in the third edition of Shakspere's works; and was ascribed to Shakspere by Gildon in 1702. Gildon probably relied upon its publication as Shakspere's in the third collected edition of his plays. Our own critics of recent times have uniformly rejected it. Schlegel inclines to the opinion that Shakspere wrote it; and he produces this curious theory:—"One of my literary friends, intimately acquainted with Shakspere, was of opinion that the poet must have wished to write a play for once in the style of Ben Jonson, and that in this way we must account for the difference between the present piece and his usual manner. To follow out this idea, however, would lead to a very nice critical investigation." Such an investigation would, we believe, bring us to the conclusion that "The Puritan" is as unlike Ben Jonson as it is unlike Shakspere. If it possesses little of the wit, the buoyancy, the genial good-humour, the sparkling poetry, the deep philosophy, and the universal characterization of Shakspere, it wants in the same degree the nice discrimination of shades of character, the sound judgment, the careful management of the plot, the lofty and indignant satire, the firm and gorgeous rhetoric, of Jonson. As a comedy of manners "The Puritan" is at once feeble and extravagant. The author cannot paint classes in painting individuals. "The Puritan" is a misnomer. We have no representation of the formal manners of that class. The family of the Widow of Watling Street is meant to be Puritanical, but it is difficult to discover wherein they differ from the rest of the world, except in the coarse exhibition of the loose morality of one of their servants, who professes to lie, though he swears not, and is willing to steal if the crime is called by some gentler name. Yet the comedy is not without spirit and interest. The events are improbable, and some of the intrigues are superfluous; but the action seldom lingers; and if the characters seem unnatural, they are sufficiently defined to enable us to believe that such characters did exist, and might have been copied from the life by the author. It is this individual painting that constitutes the essential difference between the comedy of almost every writer as compared with Shakspere. Old Aubrey said, with a truth which might have been imitated by critics of higher pretension—"His comedies will remain wit as long as the English tongue is understood, for that he handles mores hominum; now our present writers reflect so much upon particular persons and coxcombities that twenty years hence they will not be understood."

The first scene introduces us to the widow, ostentatiously weeping for the death of her husband. She is surrounded by a silly son, a brother not over-wise, and two daughters of "no characters at all," except that one vows she will never marry, and the other declares herself entirely of an opposite inclination. The whelp of a son refuses to weep for his father, and the mother thus chides him:—

Wid. O thou past-grace, thou! Out of my sight, thou graceless imp! thou grievest me more than the death of thy father. O thou stubborn only son! Hadst thou such an honest man to thy father —that would deceive all the world to get riches for thee, and canst thou not afford a little salt water? He that so wisely did quite overthrow the right heir of those lands, which now you respect not: up every morning betwixt four and five; so duly at Westminster-hall every term-time, with all his cards and writings, for thee, thou wicked Absalon O dear husband!"

The widow vows on her knees an awful vow:—

> "O may I be the by-word of the world,
> The common talk at table in the mouth
> Of every groom and waiter, if e'er more
> I entertain the carnal suit of man!"

The second scene introduces us to the chief actor in the piece, Pyeboard, a profligate scholar, who unites the professions of a poet and a swindler. Mr. Dyce, in his valuable edition of George Peele's works, says that George Pyeboard is the same as George Peele, "Peel signifying a board with a long handle with which bakers put things in and out of the oven." It is somewhat hard upon the memory of Peele to assume, as some have assumed, that Pyeboard was meant as a portrait of him. The exact date of Peele's death has not been ascertained; but an allusion to his death is made by Meres in 1598. He was no doubt a man of profligate habits; as were too many of the unhappy race of authors in those days, when uncertain occupation and dependence upon the great made them more than usually ready to snatch at passing gratifications. The "Merrie conceited Jests of George Peele, Gentleman, sometime a Student in Oxford," was published in 1627, and in that tract there are two stories told of Peele which are very nearly similar to two of the tricks of Pyeboard in "The Puritan:" both may have been mere inventions or exaggerations. In the following passage of "The Puritan" there is probably a melancholy truth as to the condition of men of letters in that age. Pyeboard is addressing himself to an old soldier, Skirmish:—

"As touching my profession; the multiplicity of scholars, hatched and nourished in the idle calms of peace, makes them, like fishes, one devour another; and the community of learning has so played upon affections, that thereby almost religion is come about to phantasy, and discredited by being too much spoken of, in so many and mean mouths. I myself, being a scholar and a graduate, have no other comfort by my learning, but the affection of my words, to know how, scholar-like, to name what I want; and can call myself a beggar both in Greek and Latin. And therefore, not to cog with peace, I'll not be afraid to say, 'tis a great breeder, but a barren nourisher; a great getter of children, which must either be thieves or rich men, knaves or beggars.

Skir. Well, would I had been born a knave then, when I was born a beggar! for if the truth was known, I think I was begot when my father had never a penny in his purse.

Pye. Puh! faint not, old Skirmish; let this warrant thee—facilis descensus Averni—'tis an easy journey to a knave; thou may'st be a knave when thou wilt: and Peace is a good madam to all other professions, and an errant drab to us. Let us handle her accordingly, and by our wits thrive in despite of her For since the law lives by quarrels, the courtier by smooth good-morrows, and every profession makes itself greater by imperfections, why not we then by shifts, wiles, and forgeries? And seeing our brains are our only patrimonies, let's spend with judgment; not like a desperate son and heir, but like a sober and discreet Templar: one that will never march beyond the bounds of his allowance."

Pyeboard resolves to be a fortune-teller, and proposes to Skirmish to be a conjurer, and so they are to deceive the widow and her family. We are presently introduced in the Marshalsea Prison to Captain Idle, who has committed what he calls a common offence—a highway robbery. Captain Idle is to be released by a stratagem of Pyeboard. The gold chain of Sir Godfrey Plus, the widow's brother, is to be stolen by his Puritanical servant, and to be discovered by the instrumentality of the military highwayman. As the action advances the plot thickens. The widow and one of her daughters refuse honest suitors; and when Idle is redeemed from prison (which the knight effects in a moment with the hope of finding his chain) the worthy confederates propose to marry the ladies. The fortune-telling and conjuration scenes are amusing enough, but they will scarcely furnish any extracts. In the end, however, the stratagems of the scholar and the captain are discovered; and the widow and her daughter are rescued from their hands on their way to church to be married. The affections of the ladies are very quickly transferred to other suitors; and so the play ends. The following scene, which occurs in the third act, is one of the incidents which is told, with some variation, of the hero of the "Merrie conceited Jests." Pye-board is under arrest for debt; and he persuades the bailiffs to go with him to a house "to receive five pound of a gentleman for the device of a mask here drawn in this paper." The following scene ensues:—

"A Gallery in a Gentleman's House.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Who knocks? Who's at door? We had need of a porter. [Opens the door.

Pye. [Within.] A few friends here. Pray is the gentleman, your master, within?

Ser. Yes; is your business to him? [Servant opens the door.

Enter PYEBOARD, PUTTOCK, RAVENSHAW, and DOGSON.

Pye. Ay, he knows it, when he sees me: I pray you, have you forgot me?

Ser. Ay, by my troth sir; pray come near; I'll in and tell him of you. Please you to walk here in the gallery till he comes. [Exit Servant.

Pye. We will attend his worship. Worship, I think; for so much the posts at his door should signify, and the fair coming-in, and the wicket; else I neither knew him nor his worship: but 'tis happiness he is within doors, whatsoe'er he be. If he be not too much a formal citizen he may do me good. [Aside.]—Serjeant and yeoman, how do you like this house? Is't not most wholesomely plotted?

Rav. 'Troth, prisoner, an exceeding fine house.

Pye. Yet I wonder how he should forget me,—for he never knew me. [Aside.] No matter; what is forgot in you will be remembered in your master. A pretty comfortable room this, methinks: you have no such rooms in prison now?

Put. O, dog-holes to't.

Pye. Dog-holes, indeed! I can tell you, I have great hope to have my chamber here shortly, nay, and diet too; for he is the most free-heartedest gentleman, where he takes you would little think it. And what a fine gallery were here for me to walk and study and make verses!

Put. O, it stands very pleasantly for a scholar.

Enter Gentleman.

Pye. Look what maps, and pictures, and devices, and things, neatly, delicately—Mass, here he comes; he should be a gentleman; I like his beard well.—All happiness to your worship.

Gent. You are kindly welcome, sir.

Put. A simple salutation.

Rav. Mass, it seems the gentleman makes great account of him.

Pye. I have the thing here for you, sir.—[Takes the Gentleman apart.] I beseech you, conceal me, sir; I'm undone else. [Aside.] I have the mask here for you, sir; look you, sir. I beseech your worship, first pardon my rudeness, for my extremes make me bolder than I would be. I am a poor gentleman, and a scholar, and now most unfortunately fallen into the fangs of unmerciful officers; arrested for debt, which, though small, I am not able to compass, by reason I am destitute of lands, money, and friends; so that if I fall into the hungry swallow of the prison, I am like utterly to perish, and with fees and extortions be pinched clean to the bone. Now, if ever pity had interest in the blood of a gentleman, I beseech you vouchsafe but to favour that means of my escape which I have already thought upon.

Gent. Go forward.

Put. I warrant he likes it rarely.

Pye. In the plunge of my extremities, being giddy, and doubtful what to do, at last it was put into my labouring thoughts to make a happy use of this paper; and to blear their unlettered eyes, I told them there was a device for a mask drawn in't, and that (but for their interception) I was going to a gentleman to receive my reward for't. They, greedy at this word, and hoping to make purchase of me, offered their attendance to go along with me. My hap was to make bold with your door, sir, which my thoughts showed me the most fairest and comfortablest entrance; and I hope I have happened right upon understanding and pity. May it please your good worship, then, but to uphold my device, which is to let one of your men put me out at a back-door, and I shall be bound to your worship for ever.

Gent. By my troth, an excellent device.

Put. An excellent device, he says; he likes it wonderfully.

Gent. O' my faith, I never heard a better.

Rav. Hark, he swears he never heard a better, serjeant.

Put. O, there's no talk on't; he's an excellent scholar, and especially for a mask.

Gent. Give me your paper, your device; I was never better pleased in all my life: good wit, brave wit, finely wrought! Come in, sir, and receive your money, sir."

The prisoner, of course, escapes.

There is no doubt considerable truth in this picture: but it is not such truth as we find in Shakspere; it belongs to the temporary and the personal, not the permanent and the universal. Such is the characteristic merit of the whole comedy, whatever merit it has.

A YORKSHIRE TRAGEDY.

INTRODUCTORY NOTICE.

"A YORKSHIRE TRAGEDIE. Not so new, as lamentable and true. Written by W. Shakespeare." This was the title of the original edition of the play printed in 1608. Upon a subsequent title we have "All's One, or, One of the four Plaies in one, called a Yorkshire Tragedy." We may receive "All's One" as the general title of four short plays represented in the same day, and standing in the place of a regular tragedy or comedy. Of the four plays thus presented, it is remarkable that "The Yorkshire Tragedy" is the only one which appears to have been published; that was entered, on the 2nd of May, 1608, on the Stationers' registers, as "A booke The Yorkshire Tragedy, written by Wylliam Shakespere." The publisher of the play, Thomas Pavyer, in 1605, entered "A ballad of lamentable Murther done in Yorkshire, by a Gent. upon two of his owne Children, sore wounding his Wyfe and Nurse." The fact upon which the ballad and the tragedy are founded is thus related in Stow's Chronicle, under the year 1604:—"Walter Calverly, of Calverly, in Yorkshire, Esquire, murdered two of his young children, stabbed his wife into the body with full purpose to have murdered her, and instantly went from his house to have slain his youngest child at nurse, but was prevented. For which fact at his trial in York he stood mute, and was judged to be pressed to death, according to which judgment he was executed at the castle of York the 5th of August."

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

HUSBAND.
MASTER of a College.
A Knight (a Magistrate).
Several Gentlemen.
OLIVER, } Servants.
RALPH, }
SAMUEL, }

Other Servants and Officers.

A little Boy, &c.

WIFE.

Maid-Servant.

SCENE,—CALVERLY, in YORKSHIRE.

SCENE I.—A Room in Calverly Hall.

Enter OLIVER and RALPH.

Oliv. Sirrah Ralph, my young mistress is in such a pitiful passionate humour for the long absence of her love—

Ralph. Why, can you blame her? Why, apples hanging longer on the tree than when they are ripe, makes so many fallings; viz. mad wenches, because they are not gathered in time, are fain to drop of themselves, and then 'tis common you know for every man to take them up.

Oliv. Mass, thou say'st true, 'tis common indeed! But, sirrah, is neither our young master returned, nor our fellow Sam come from London?

Ralph. Neither of either, as the puritan bawd says. 'Slid, I hear Sam. Sam's come; here he is; tarry;—come i' faith: now my nose itches for news.

Oliv. And so does mine elbow.

Sam. [within.] Where are you there? Boy, look you walk my horse with discretion. I have rid him simply: I warrant his skin sticks to his back with very heat. If he should catch cold and get the cough of the lungs, I were well served, were I not?

Enter SAM.

What, Ralph and Oliver!

Both. Honest fellow Sam, welcome i' faith. What tricks hast thou brought from London?

Sam. You see I am hanged after the truest fashion three hats, and two glasses bobbing upon them; two rebato wires upon my breast, a cap-case by my side, a brush at my back, an almanack in my pocket, and three ballads in my codpiece. Nay, I am the true picture of a common servingman.

Oliv. I'll swear thou art; thou may'st set up when thou wilt: there's many a one begins with less, I can tell thee, that proves a rich man ere he dies. But what's the news from London, Sam?

Ralph. Ay, that's well said; what's the news from London, sirrah? My young mistress keeps such a puling for her love.

Sam. Why, the more fool she; ay, the more ninnyhammer she.

Oliv. Why, Sam, why?

Sam. Why, he is married to another long ago.

Both. I' faith? You jest.

Sam. Why, did you not know that till now? Why, he's married, beats his wife, and has two or three children by her. For you must note, that any woman bears the more when she is beaten.

Ralph. Ay, that's true, for she bears the blows.

Oliv. Sirrah Sam, I would not for two years' wages my young mistress knew so much; she'd run upon the left hand of her wit, and ne'er be her own woman again.

Sam. And I think she was blessed in her cradle, that he never came in her bed. Why, he has consumed all, pawned his lands, and made his university brother stand in wax for him: there's a fine phrase for a scrivener. Puh! he owes more than his skin is worth.

Oliv. Is't possible?

Sam. Nay, I'll tell you moreover, he calls his wife whore, as familiarly as one would call Moll and Doll; and his children bastards, as naturally as can be.—But what have we here? I thought 'twas something pull'd down my breeches; I quite forgot my two poking-sticks: these came from London. Now anything is good here that comes from London.

Oliv. Ay, far fetched, you know, Sam.—But speak in your conscience i' faith; have not we as good poking-sticks i' the country, as need to be put in the fire?

Sam. The mind of a thing is all; the mind of a thing is all; and as thou saidst even now, far-fetched are the best things for ladies.

Oliv. Ay, and for waiting-gentlewomen too.

Sam. But, Ralph, what, is our beer sour this thunder?

Ralph. No, no, it holds countenance yet.

Sam. Why, then follow me; I'll teach you the finest humour to be drunk in: I learned it at London last week.

Both. I' faith? Let's hear it, let's hear it.

Sam. The bravest humour! 'twould do a man good to be drunk

in it: they call it knighting in London, when they drink upon their knees.

Both. 'Faith, that's excellent.

Sam. Come, follow me; I'll give you all the degrees of it in order. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Another Apartment in the same.

Enter WIFE.

Wife. What will become of us? All will away:
My husband never ceases in expense,
Both to consume his credit and his house;
And 'tis set down by heaven's just decree,
That riot's child must needs be beggary.
Are these the virtues that his youth did promise?
Dice and voluptuous meetings, midnight revels,
Taking his bed with surfeits; ill beseeming
The ancient honour of his house and name?
And this not all, but that which kills me most,
When he recounts his losses and false fortunes,
The weakness of his state so much dejected,
Not as a man repentant, but half mad,
His fortunes cannot answer his expense,
He sits, and sullenly locks up his arms,
Forgetting heaven, looks downward; which makes him
Appear so dreadful that he frights my heart:
Walks heavily, as if his soul were earth;
Not penitent for those his sins are past,
But vex'd his money cannot make them last.
A fearful melancholy, ungodly sorrow.
O, yonder he comes; now in despite of ills
I'll speak to him, and I will hear him speak,
And do my best to drive it from his heart.

Enter HUSBAND.

Hus. Pox o' the last throw! It made five hundred angels
Vanish from my sight. I am damn'd, I'm damn'd;
The angels have forsook me. Nay, it is Certainly true; for he that has no coin
Is damn'd in this world; he is gone, he's gone.

Wife. Dear husband.

Hus. O! most punishment of all, I have a wife.

Wife. I do entreat you, as you love your soul,
Tell me the cause of this your discontent.

Hus. A vengeance strip thee naked! thou art cause,
Effect, quality, property; thou, thou, thou! [Exit.

Wife. Bad turn'd to worse; both beggary of the soul
And of the body;—and so much unlike
Himself at first, as if some vexed spirit
Had got his form upon him. He comes again.

Re-enter HUSBAND.

He says I am the cause: I never yet
Spoke less than words of duty and of love.

Hus. If marriage be honourable, then cuckolds are honourable, for they cannot be made without marriage. Fool! what meant I to marry to get beggars? Now must my eldest son be a knave or nothing; he cannot live upon the fool, for he will have no land to maintain him. That mortgage sits like a snaffle upom mine inheritance, and makes me chew upon iron. My second son must be a promoter, and my third a thief, or an under-putter; a slave pander. Oh, beggary, beggary, to what base uses dost thou put a man! I think the devil scorns to be a bawd; he bears himself more proudly, has more care of his credit.—Base, slavish, abject, filthy poverty!

Wife. Good sir, by all our vows I do beseech you,
Show me the true cause of your discontent.

Hus. Money, money, money; and thou must supply me.

Wife. Alas, I am the least cause of your discontent;
Yet what is mine, either in rings or jewels,
Use to your own desire; but I beseech you,
As you are a gentleman by many bloods,
Though I myself be out of your respect,
Think on the state of these three lovely boys
You have been father to.

Hus. Puh! bastards, bastards, bastards; begot in tricks, begot in tricks.

Wife. Heaven knows how those words wrong me: but I may Endure these griefs among a thousand more.
O call to mind your lands already mortgag'd,
Yourself wound into debts, your hopeful brother
At the university in bonds for you,
Like to be seiz'd upon; and——

Hus. Have done, thou harlot,
Whom, though for fashion-sake I married,
I never could abide. Think'st thou, thy words
Shall kill my pleasures? Fall off to thy friends;
Thou and thy bastards beg; I will not bate
A whit in humour. Midnight, still I love you,
And revel in your company! Curb'd in,
Shall it be said in all societies,
That I broke custom? that I flagg'd in money?
No, those thy jewels I will play as freely
As when my state was fullest.

Wife. Be it so.

Hus. Nay, I protest (and take that for an earnest), [Spurns her.
I will for ever hold thee in contempt,
And never touch the sheets that cover thee,
But be divorc'd in bed, till thou consent
Thy dowry shall be sold, to give new life
Unto those pleasures which I most affect.

Wife. Sir, do but turn a gentle eye on me,
And what the law shall give me leave to do,
You shall command.

Hus. Look it be done. Shall I want dust,
And like a slave wear nothing in my pockets
[Holds his hands in his pockets.
But my bare hands, to fill them up with nails?
O much against my blood! Let it be done.
I was never made to be a looker-on,
A bawd to dice; I'll shake the drabs myself,
And make them yield: I say, look it be done.

Wife. I take my leave: it shall. [Exit.

Hus. Speedily, speedily.
I hate the very hour I chose a wife:
A trouble, trouble! Three children, like three evils,
Hang on me. Fie, fie, fie! Strumpet and bastards!

Enter Three Gentlemen.

Strumpet and bastards!

1 Gent. Still do these loathsome thoughts jar on your tongue?
Yourself to stain the honour of your wife,
Nobly descended? Those whom men call mad,
Endanger others; but he's more than mad
That wounds himself; whose own words do proclaim
Scandals unjust, to soil his better name.
It is not fit; I pray, forsake it.

2 Gent. Good sir, let modesty reprove you.

3 Gent. Let honest kindness sway so much with you.

Hus. Good den; I thank you, sir; how do you? Adieu!
I am glad to see you. Farewell instructions, admonitions.
[Exeunt Gentlemen.

Enter a Servant.

How now, sirrah? What would you?

Ser. Only to certify you, sir, that my mistress was met by the way, by them who were sent for her up to London by her honourable uncle, your worship's late guardian.

Hus. So, sir, then she is gone; and so may you be;
But let her look the thing be done she wots of,
Or hell will stand more pleasant than her house
At home. [Exit Servant.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Well or ill met, I care not.

Hus. No, nor I.

Gent. I am come with confidence to chide you.

Hus. Who? me?

* Promoter—informer.

Chide me? Do't finely then; let it not move me:
For if thou chid'st me angry, I shall strike.
Gent. Strike thine own follies, for 'tis they deserve
To be well beaten. We are now in private;
There's none but thou and I. Thou art fond and peevish;
An unclean rioter; thy lands and credit
Lie now both sick of a consumption:
I am sorry for thee. That man spends with shame,
That with his riches doth consume his name;
And such art thou.
Hus. Peace!
Gent. No, thou shalt hear me further.
Thy father's and forefathers' worthy honours,
Which were our country monuments, our grace,
Follies in thee begin now to deface.
The spring-time of thy youth did fairly promise
Such a most fruitful summer to thy friends
It scarce can enter into men's beliefs
Such dearth should hang upon thee. We that see it
Are sorry to believe it. In thy change,
This voice into all places will be hurl'd—
Thou and the devil have deceiv'd the world.
Hus. I'll not endure thee.
Gent. But of all the worst,
Thy virtuous wife, right honourably allied,
Thou hast proclaim'd a strumpet.
Hus. Nay, then I know thee;
Thou art her champion, thou; her private friend;
The party you wot on.
Gent. O ignoble thought!
I am past my patient blood. Shall I stand idle,
And see my reputation touch'd to death?
Hus. It has gall'd you, this; has it?
Gent. No, monster; I will prove
My thoughts did only tend to virtuous love.
Hus. Love of her virtues? there it goes.
Gent. Base spirit,
To lay thy hate upon the fruitful honour
Of thine own bed! [They fight, and the HUSBAND is hurt.
Hus. Oh!
Gent. Wilt thou yield it yet?
Hus. Sir, sir, I have not done with you.
Gent. I hope, nor ne'er shall do. [They fight again.
Hus. Have you got tricks? Are you in cunning with me?
Gent. No, plain and right:
He needs no cunning that for truth doth fight.
[HUSBAND falls down.
Hus. Hard fortune! am I levell'd with the ground?
Gent. Now, sir, you lie at mercy.
Hus. Ay, you slave.
Gent. Alas, that hate should bring us to our grave!
You see, my sword's not thirsty for your life:
I am sorrier for your wound than you yourself.
You're of a virtuous house; show virtuous deeds,
'Tis not your honour, 'tis your folly bleeds.
Much good has been expected in your life;
Cancel not all men's hopes; you have a wife,
Kind and obedient; heap not wrongful shame
On her and your posterity; let only sin be sore,
And by this fall, rise never to fall more.
And so I leave you. [Exit.
Hus. Has the dog left me then,
After his tooth has left me? O, my heart
Would fain leap after him. Revenge, I say;
I'm mad to be reveng'd. My strumpet wife,
It is thy quarrel that rips thus my flesh,
And makes my breast spit blood;—but thou shalt bleed.
Vanquish'd? got down? unable even to speak?
Surely 'tis want of money makes men weak:
Ay, 'twas that o'erthrew me: I'd ne'er been down else. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Another Room in the same.

Enter WIFE, in a riding-suit, and a Servant.

Ser. 'Faith, mistress, if it might not be presumption
In me to tell you so, for his excuse
You had small reason, knowing his abuse.
Wife. I grant I had; but, alas,
Why should our faults at home be spread abroad?
'Tis grief enough within doors. At first sight
Mine uncle could run o'er his prodigal life
As perfectly as if his serious eye
Had number'd all his follies:
Knew of his mortgag'd lands, his friends in bonds,
Himself wither'd with debts; and in that minute
Had I added his usage and unkindness,
'Twould have confounded every thought of good:
Where now, fathering his riots on his youth,
Which time and tame experience will shake off—
Guessing his kindness to me (as I smooth'd him
With all the skill I had, though his deserts
Are in form uglier than an unshap'd bear),
He's ready to prefer him to some office
And place at court; a good and sure relief
To all his stooping fortunes. 'Twill be a means, I hope,
To make new league between us, and redeem
His virtues with his lands.
Ser. I should think so, mistress. If he should not now be kind to you, and love you, and cherish you up, I should think the devil himself kept open house in him.
Wife. I doubt not but he will. Now prithee leave me; I think I hear him coming.
Ser. I am gone. [Exit.
Wife. By this good means I shall preserve my lands,
And free my husband out of usurers' hands.
Now there's no need of sale; my uncle's kind:
I hope, if aught, this will content his mind.
Here comes my husband.

Enter HUSBAND.

Hus. Now, are you come? Where's the money? Let's see the money. Is the rubbish sold? those wise-acres, your lands? Why, when? The money? Where is it? Pour it down; down with it, down with it: I say, pour't on the ground; let's see it, let's see it.
Wife. Good sir, keep but in patience, and I hope my words shall like you well. I bring you better comfort than the sale of my dowry.
Hus. Ha! what's that?
Wife. Pray do not fright me, sir, but vouchsafe me hearing, My uncle, glad of your kindness to me and mild usage (for so I made it to him), hath, in pity of your declining fortunes, provided a place for you at court, of worth and credit; which so much overjoyed me—
Hus. Out on thee, filth! over and overjoyed, when I'm in torment? [Spurns her.] Thou politic whore, subtiler than nine devils, was this thy journey to nunck? to set down the history of me, of my state and fortunes? Shall I, that dedicated myself to pleasure, be now confined in service? to crouch and stand like an old man i' the hams, my hat off? I that could never abide to uncover my head i' the church? Base slut! this fruit bear thy complaints.
Wife. O, heaven knows
That my complaints were praises, and best words,
Of you and your estate. Only, my friends
Knew of your mortgag'd lands, and were possess'd
Of every accident before I came.
If you suspect it but a plot in me,
To keep my dowry, or for mine own good,
Or my poor children's, (though it suits a mother
To show a natural care in their reliefs,)
Yet I'll forget myself to calm your blood:
Consume it, as your pleasure counsels you.
And all I wish even clemency affords;
Give me but pleasant looks, and modest words.
Hus. Money, whore, money, or I'll—— [Draws a dagger.

Enter a Servant hastily.

What the devil! How now! thy hasty news?
Ser. May it please you, sir——
Hus. What! may I not look upon my dagger? Speak, villain, or I will execute the point on thee: Quick, short.

Ser. Why, sir, a gentleman from the university stays below to speak with you. [Exit.

Hus. From the university? so; university:—that long word runs through me. [Exit.

Wife. Was ever wife so wretchedly beset?
Had not this news stepp'd in between, the point
Had offer'd violence unto my breast.
That which some women call great misery
Would show but little here; would scarce be seen
Among my miseries. I may compare,
For wretched fortunes, with all wives that are.
Nothing will please him, until all be nothing.
He calls it slavery to be preferr'd;
A place of credit, a base servitude.
What shall become of me, and my poor children,
Two here, and one at nurse? my pretty beggars!
I see how ruin with a palsy hand
Begins to shake the ancient seat to dust:
The heavy weight of sorrow draws my lids
Over my dankish eyes I can scarce see;
Thus grief will last;—it wakes and sleeps with me. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another Apartment in the same.

Enter HUSBAND and the MASTER of a College.

Hus. Please you draw near, sir; you're exceeding welcome.

Mast. That's my doubt! I fear I come not to be welcome.

Hus. Yes, howsoever.

Mast. 'Tis not my fashion, sir, to dwell in long circumstance, but to be plain and effectual; therefore to the purpose. The cause of my setting forth was piteous and lamentable. That hopeful young gentleman, your brother, whose virtues we all love dearly, through your default and unnatural negligence lies in bond executed for your debt,—a prisoner; all his studies amazed, his hope struck dead, and the pride of his youth muffled in these dark clouds of oppression.

Hus. Umph, umph, umph!

Mast. O you have killed the towardest hope of all our university: wherefore, without repentance and amends, expect ponderous and sudden judgments to fall grievously upon you. Your brother, a man who profited in his divine employments, and might have made ten thousand souls fit for heaven, is now by your careless courses cast into prison, which you must answer for; and assure your spirit it will come home at length.

Hus. O God! oh!

Mast. Wise men think ill of you; others speak ill of you; no man loves you: nay, even those whom honesty condemns, condemn you And take this from the virtuous affection I bear your brother; never look for prosperous hour, good thoughts, quiet sleep, contented walks, nor anything that makes man perfect, till you redeem him. What is your answer? How will you bestow him? Upon desperate misery, or better hopes?—I suffer till I hear your answer.

Hus. Sir, you have much wrought with me; I feel you in my soul: you are your art's master. I never had sense till now; your syllables have cleft me. Both for your words and pains I thank you. I cannot but acknowledge grievous wrongs done to my brother; mighty, mighty, mighty, mighty wrongs. Within, there!

Enter a Servant.

Hus. Fill me a bowl of wine. [Exit Servant.
Alas, poor brother, bruis'd with an execution for my sake!

Mast. A bruise indeed makes many a mortal sore,
Till the grave cure them.

Re-enter Servant with wine.

Hus. Sir, I begin to you; you've chid your welcome.

Mast. I could have wish'd it better for your sake.
I pledge you, sir:—To the kind man in prison.

Hus. Let it be so. Now, sir, if you please to spend but a few minutes in a walk about my grounds below, my man here shall attend you. I doubt not but by that time to be furnished of a sufficient answer, and therein my brother fully satisfied.

Mast. Good sir, in that the angels would be pleas'd,
And the world's murmurs calm'd; and I should say,
I set forth then upon a lucky day. [Exeunt MASTER and Servant.

Hus. O thou confused man! Thy pleasant sins have undone thee; thy damnation has beggared thee. That heaven should say we must not sin, and yet made women; give our senses way to find pleasure, which, being found, confounds us! Why should we know those things so much misuse us? O, would virtue had been forbidden! We should then have proved all virtuous; for 'tis our blood to love what we are forbidden. Had not drunkenness been forbidden, what man would have been fool to a beast, and zany to a swine,—to show tricks in the mire? What is there in three dice, to make a man draw thrice three thousand acres into the compass of a little round table, and with the gentleman's palsy in the hand shake out his posterity thieves or beggars? 'Tis done; I have done 't, i' faith: terrible, horrible misery!—How well was I left Very well, very well. My lands showed like a full moon about me; but now the moon's in the last quarter,—waning, waning; and I am mad to think that moon was mine; mine, and my father's, and my forefathers'; generations, generations.—Down goes the house of us; down, down it sinks. Now is the name a beggar; begs in me. That name which hundreds of years has made this shire famous, in me and my posterity runs out. In my seed five are made miserable besides myself: my riot is now my brother's gaoler, my wife's sighing, my three boys' penury, and mine own confusion.
Why sit my hairs upon my cursed head? [Tears his hair.
Will not this poison scatter them? O, my brother's
In execution among devils that
Stretch him and make him give; and I in want,
Not able for to live, nor to redeem him!
Divines and dying men may talk of hell,
But in my heart her several torments dwell;
Slavery and misery. Who, in this case,
Would not take up money upon his soul?
Pawn his salvation, live at interest?
I, that did ever in abundance dwell,
For me to want, exceeds the throes of hell.

Enter a little Boy with a Top and Scourge.

Son. What ail you, father? Are you not well? I cannot scourge my top as long as you stand so. You take up all the room with your wide legs? Puh! you cannot make me afraid with this; I fear no visards, nor bugbears.

[He takes up the Child by the skirts of his long coat with one hand, and draws his dagger with the other.

Hus. Up, sir, for here thou hast no inheritance left.

Son. O, what will you do, father? I am your white boy.

Hus. Thou shalt be my red boy; take that. [Strikes him.

Son. O, you hurt me, father.

Hus. My eldest beggar,
Thou shalt not live to ask an usurer bread;
To cry at a great man's gate; or follow,
"Good your honour," by a coach; no, nor your brother:
'Tis charity to brain you.

Son. How shall I learn, now my head's broke?

Hus. Bleed, bleed, [Stabs him.
Rather than beg. Be not thy name's disgrace;
Spurn thou thy fortunes first; if they be base,
Come view thy second brother's. Fates! My children's blood
Shall spin into your faces; you shall see,
How confidently we scorn beggary! [Exit with his Son.

SCENE V

A Maid discovered with a Child in her arms; the Mother on a couch by her, asleep.

Maid. Sleep, sweet babe; sorrow makes thy mother sleep:
It bodes small good when heaviness falls so deep.
Hush, pretty boy; thy hopes might have been better.
'Tis lost at dice, what ancient honour won:
Hard, when the father plays away the son!
Nothing but Misery serves in this house;
Ruin and Desolation. Oh!

* The game called passage, or pass dice, was played with three dice.

Enter HUSBAND, with his Son bleeding.

Hus. Whore, give me that boy. [Strives with her for the Child.
Maid. O help, help! Out, alas! murther, murther!
Hus. Are you gossiping, you prating, sturdy quean?
I'll break your clamour with your neck. Down stairs;
Tumble, tumble, headlong. So:—
[He throws her down, and stabs the Child.
The surest way to charm a woman's tongue,
Is—break her neck: a politician did it.
Son. Mother, mother; I am kill'd, mother! [WIFE awakes.
Wife. Ha, who's that cried? O me! my children,
Both, both, bloody, bloody! [Catches up the youngest Child.
Hus. Strumpet, let go the boy; let go the beggar.
Wife. O, my sweet husband!
Hus. Filth, harlot!
Wife. O, what will you do, dear husband?
Hus. Give me the bastard!
Wife. Your own sweet boy—
Hus. There are too many beggars.
Wife. Good my husband—
Hus. Dost thou prevent me still?
Wife. O God!
Hus. Have at his heart. [Stabs at the Child in her arms.
Wife. O, my dear boy!
Hus. Brat, thou shalt not live to shame thy house—
Wife. Oh, heaven! [She is hurt, and sinks down.
Hus. And perish!—Now be gone
There's whores enough, and want would make thee one.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. O sir, what deeds are these?
Hus. Base slave, my vassal!
Com'st thou between my fury to question me?
Ser. Were you the devil, I would hold you, sir.
Hus. Hold me?—Presumption! I'll undo thee for it.
Ser. 'Sblood, you have undone us all, sir.
Hus. Tug at thy master?
Ser. Tug at a monster.
Hus. Have I no power? Shall my slave fetter me?
Ser. Nay, then the devil wrestles I am thrown.
Hus. O villain! now I'll tug thee, now I'll tear thee;
Set quick spurs to my vassal; bruise him, trample him.
So; I think thou wilt not follow me in haste.
My horse stands ready saddled. Away, away;
Now to my brat at nurse, my sucking beggar:
Fates, I'll not leave you one to trample on. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Court before the House.

Enter HUSBAND; to him the MASTER of the College.

Mast. How is it with you, sir?
Methinks you look of a distracted colour.
Hus. Who, I, sir? 'Tis but your fancy.
Please you walk in, sir, and I'll soon resolve you:
I want one small part to make up the sum,
And then my brother shall rest satisfied.
Mast. I shall be glad to see it: Sir, I'll attend you. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—A Room in the House.

The WIFE, Servant, and Children, discovered.

Ser. Oh, I am scarce able to heave up myself,
He has so bruis'd me with his devilish weight,
And torn my flesh with his blood-hasty spur:
A man before of easy constitution,
Till now hell power supplied, to his soul's wrong:
O how damnation can make weak men strong!

Enter the MASTER of the College and Two Servants.

Ser. O the most piteous deed, sir, since you came!
Mast. A deadly greeting! Hath he summ'd up these
To satisfy his brother? Here's another
And by the bleeding infants, the dead mother.
Wife. Oh! oh!
Mast. Surgeons! surgeons! she recovers life:—
One of his men all faint and bloodied!
1 Ser. Follow; our murtherous master has took horse
To kill his child at nurse. O, follow quickly.
Mast. I am the readiest; it shall be my charge
To raise the town upon him.
1 Ser. Good sir, do follow him.
[Exeunt MASTER and Two Servants.
Wife. O my children.
1 Ser. How is it with my most afflicted mistress?
Wife. Why do I now recover? Why half live,
To see my children bleed before mine eyes?
A sight able to kill a mother's breast, without
An executioner.—What, art thou mangled too?
1 Ser. I, thinking to prevent what his quick mischiefs
Has so soon acted, came and rush'd upon him.
We struggled; but a fouler strength than his
O'erthrew me with his arms: then did he bruise me,
And rent my flesh, and robb'd me of my hair;
Like a man mad in execution,
Made me unfit to rise and follow him.
Wife. What is it has beguil'd him of all grace,
And stole away humanity from his breast?
To slay his children, purpose to kill his wife,
And spoil his servants—

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Please you to leave this most accursed place:
A surgeon waits within.
Wife. Willing to leave it?
'Tis guilty of sweet blood, innocent blood:
Murther has took this chamber with full hands,
And will ne'er out as long as the house stands. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A High Road.

Enter HUSBAND. He falls.

Hus. O stumbling jade! The spavin overtake thee!
The fifty diseases stop thee!
Oh, I am sorely bruised! Plague founder thee!
Thou runn'st at ease and pleasure. Heart of chance!
To throw me now, within a flight o' the town,
In such plain even ground too! 'Sfoot, a man
May dice upon it, and throw away the meadows.
Filthy beast!
[Cry within.] Follow, follow, follow.
Hus. Ha! I hear sounds of men, like hue and cry.
Up, up, and struggle to thy horse; make on;
Despatch that little beggar, and all's done.
[Cry within.] Here, here; this way, this way.
Hus. At my back? Oh,
What fate have I! my limbs deny me go.
My will is 'bated; beggary claims a part.
O could I here reach to the infant's heart!

Enter the MASTER of the College, Three Gentlemen, and Attendants with halberds.

All. Here, here; yonder, yonder.
Mast. Unnatural, flinty, more than barbarous!
The Scythians, even the marble-hearted Fates,
Could not have acted more remorseless deeds,
In their relentless natures, than these of thine.
Was this the answer I long waited on?
The satisfaction for thy prison'd brother?
Hus. Why, he can have no more of us than our skins,
And some of them want but flaying.
1 Gent. Great sins have made him impudent.
Mast. He has shed so much blood, that he cannot blush.
2 Gent. Away with him; bear him to the justice's.

A gentleman of worship dwells at hand:
There shall his deeds be blaz'd.
Hus. Why, all the better.
My glory 'tis to have my action known;
I grieve for nothing, but I miss'd of one.
Mast. There's little of a father in that grief:
Bear him away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IX.—A Room in the House of a Magistrate.

Enter a Knight, and Three Gentlemen.

Knight. Endanger'd so his wife? murther'd his children?
1 Gent. So the cry goes.
Knight. I am sorry I e'er knew him;
That ever he took life and natural being
From such an honour'd stock, and fair descent,
Till this black minute without stain or blemish.
1 Gent. Here come the men.

Enter MASTER of the College, &c., with the Prisoner.

Knight. The serpent of his house! I am sorry,
For this time, that I am in place of justice.
Mast. Please you, sir——
Knight. Do not repeat it twice; I know too much
Would it had ne'er been thought on! Sir, I bleed for you.
1 Gent. Your father's sorrows are alive in me.
What made you show such monstrous cruelty?
Hus. In a word, sir, I have consumed all, played away long-acre; and I thought it the charitablest deed I could do, to cozen beggary, and knock my house o' the head.
Knight. O, in a cooler blood you will repent it.
Hus. I repent now that one is left unkill'd;
My brat at nurse. I would full fain have wean'd him.
Knight. Well, I do not think, but in to-morrow's judgment,
The terror will sit closer to your soul,
When the dread thought of death remembers you
To further which, take this sad voice from me,
Never was act play'd more unnaturally.
Hus. I thank you, sir.
Knight. Go, lead him to the gaol:
Where justice claims all, there must pity fail.
Hus. Come, come; away with me. [Exeunt HUSBAND, &c.
Mast. Sir, you deserve the worship of your place:
Would all did so! In you the law is grace.
Knight. It is my wish it should be so.—Ruinous man!
The desolation of his house, the blot
Upon his predecessors' honour'd name!
That man is nearest shame, that is past shame. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—Before Calverly Hall.

Enter HUSBAND guarded, MASTER of the College, Gentlemen, and Attendants.

Hus. I am right against my house,—seat of my ancestors:
I hear my wife's alive, but much endanger'd
Let me entreat to speak with her, before
The prison gripe me.

His WIFE is brought in.

Gent. See, here she comes of herself.
Wife. O my sweet husband, my dear distress'd husband,
Now in the hands of unrelenting laws,
My greatest sorrow, my extremest bleeding;
Now my soul bleeds.
Hus. How now? Kind to me? Did I not wound thee?
Left thee for dead?
Wife. Tut, far, far greater wounds did my breast feel;
Unkindness strikes a deeper wound than steel.
You have been still unkind to me.
Hus. 'Faith, and so I think I have;
I did my murthers roughly out of hand,
Desperate and sudden; but thou hast devis'd
A fine way now to kill me: thou hast given mine eyes
Seven wounds apiece. Now glides the devil from me,
Departs at every joint; heaves up my nails.
O catch him, torments that were ne'er invented!
Bind him one thousand more, you blessed angels,
In that pit bottomless! Let him not rise
To make men act unnatural tragedies;
To spread into a father, and in fury
Make him his children's executioner;
Murther his wife, his servants, and who not!—
For that man's dark, where heaven is quite forgot.
Wife. O my repentant husband!
Hus. O my dear soul, whom I too much have wrong'd;
For death I die, and for this have I long'd.
Wife. Thou shouldst not, be assur'd, for these faults die
If the law could forgive as soon as I. [The Two Children laid out.
Hus. What sight is yonder?
Wife. O, our two bleeding boys,
Laid forth upon the threshold.
Hus. Here's weight enough to make a heart-string crack.
O, were it lawful that your pretty souls
Might look from heaven into your father's eyes,
Then should you see the penitent glasses melt,
And both your murthers shoot upon my cheeks!
But you are playing in the angels' laps,
And will not look on me, who, void of grace,
Kill'd you in beggary.
O that I might my wishes now attain,
I should then wish you living were again,
Though I did beg with you, which thing I fear'd:
O, 'twas the enemy my eyes so blear'd!
O, would you could pray heaven me to forgive,
That will unto my end repentant live!
Wife. It makes me even forget all other sorrows,
And live apart with this.
Offi. Come, will you go?
Hus. I'll kiss the blood I spilt, and then I'll go:
My soul is bloodied, well may my lips be so.
Farewell, dear wife; now thou and I must part;
I of thy wrongs repent me with my heart.
Wife. O stay; thou shalt not go.
Hus. That's but in vain; you see it must be so.
Farewell, ye bloody ashes of my boys!
My punishments are their eternal joys.
Let every father look into my deeds,
And then their heirs may prosper, while mine bleeds.
[Exeunt HUS. and Officers.
Wife. More wretched am I now in this distress,
Than former sorrows made me.
Mast. O kind wife,
Be comforted; one joy is yet unmurther'd;
You have a boy at nurse; your joy's in him.
Wife. Dearer than all is my poor husband's life.
Heaven give my body strength, which is yet faint
With much expense of blood, and I will kneel,
Sue for his life, number up all my friends
To plead for pardon for my dear husband's life.
Mast. Was it in man to wound so kind a creature?
I'll ever praise a woman for thy sake.
I must return with grief; my answer's set;
I shall bring news weighs heavier than the debt.
Two brothers, one in bond lies overthrown,
This on a deadlier execution. [Exeunt omnes.

NOTICE ON THE AUTHORSHIP OF A YORKSHIRE TRAGEDY.

THE event upon which this little drama is founded happened in 1604; the play was published in 1608. If it were written by Shakspere then, as his name on the title-page would lead us to believe, it must have been written when he was at the height of his power and of his fame. The question, therefore, as to his authorship of this play lies within very narrow limits. On the one hand we have the assertion of the publisher, in his entry upon the Stationers' registers, and in the title-page of the book, that Shakspere was the author; on the other hand we have to consider the manifest improbability that one who essentially viewed human events and passions through the highest medium of poetry should have taken up a subject of temporary interest to dramatize upon a prosaic principle. The English stage is familiar with works of extensive and permanent popularity which present to the senses the literal movement of some domestic tragedy, in which, from the necessary absence of the poetical spirit, the feelings of the audience are harassed and tortured without any compensation from that highest power of art which subdues the painful in and through the beautiful. "George Barnwell" and "The Gamester" are ready examples of tragedies of this class; and, without going into any minute comparisons, it is easy to understand that the principle upon which such works are composed is essentially different from that which presides over Hamlet and Lear and Othello. There was a most voluminous dramatic writer in Shakspere's time, Thomas Heywood, whose pen was ready to seize upon a subject of passing interest, such as the frantic violence of the unhappy Mr. Calverly. Charles Lamb, after quoting two very pathetic scenes from a tragedy of this writer, "A Woman Killed with Kindness," says—"Heywood is a sort of prose Shakspeare. His scenes are to the full as natural and affecting. But we miss the poet, that which in Shakspeare always appears out and above the surface of the nature. Heywood's characters, his country gentlemen, &c., are exactly what we see (but of the best kind of what we see) in life. Shakspeare makes us believe, while we are among his lovely creations, that they are nothing but what we are familiar with, as in dreams new things seem old; but we awake, and sigh for the difference." We have no doubt that Heywood could have written the "Yorkshire Tragedy;" we greatly question whether Shakspere would have written it. The play, however, is one of sterling merit in its limited range; and as it is also a remarkable specimen of a species of drama of which we have very few other examples of the Shaksperian age, we have printed it entire. It is scarcely necessary for us to enter upon any minute criticism in this place, especially as we shall have to revert to the general principle of the suitableness of such a subject to Shakspere's powers, when we give an account of "Arden of Feversham," a tragedy of an earlier date, which has also been imputed to our great poet. A writer in the Retrospective Review, analyzing the "Yorkshire Tragedy," says—"There is no reason why Shakspeare should not have written it, any more than why he should." The reason why Shakspere should not have written it is, we think, to be deduced from the circumstance that he, who had never even written a comedy in which the scene is placed in his own country in his own times, would very unwillingly have gone out of his way to dramatize a real incident of horror, occurring in Yorkshire in 1604, which of necessity could only have been presented to the senses of an audience as a fact admitting of very little elevation by a poetical treatment which might seize upon their imaginations. There is, no doubt, in this little drama the evidence of a sound judgment, relying upon the truth of the representation for its effect; and the patience and gentleness of the wife, as contrasted with the selfish ferocity of the husband, add to the intensity of the pain which the representation produces. The Retrospective reviewer further says—"If he (Shakspere) had written it, on the principle of merely dramatizing the known fact, he would not have done it much better than it is here done; and there were many of his contemporaries who could have done it quite as well." We agree with this assertion. If the "Yorkshire Tragedy" had been done better than it is—that is, if the power of the poet had more prevailed in it—it would not have answered the purpose for which it was intended; it would, in truth, have been a mistake in art. Shakspere would not have committed this mistake. But then we doubt whether he would have consented at all to have had a circle drawn around him by the anti-poetical, within which his mastery over the spirits of the earth and of the air was unavailing. There were other men amongst his contemporaries to whom these limits would not have been imprisonment; who might say with Hamlet, "I could be bounded in a nut-shell, and count myself a king of infinite space." Thomas Heywood was one of the number. We extract from that writer the concluding scene of "A Woman Killed with Kindness," in which a faithless but repentant wife receives, when dying, the forgiveness of her husband. We request our readers to compare this with the last scene of the "Yorkshire Tragedy," in which the murderer of her children, when about to be led to execution, is in the same spirit forgiven by his outraged wife:—

"Frankford. How do you, woman?
Mrs. Anne. Well, Mr. Frankford, well; but shall be better
I hope within this hour. Will you vouchsafe
(Out of your grace and your humanity)
To take a spotted strumpet by the hand?
Frankford. This hand once held my heart in faster bonds
Than now 'tis grip'd by me. God pardon them
That made us first break hold.
Mrs. Anne. Amen, amen.
Out of my zeal to heaven, whither I'm now bound,
I was so impudent to wish you here;
And once more beg your pardon. Oh! good man,
And father to my children, pardon me.
Pardon, O pardon me: my fault so heinous is,
That if you in this world forgive it not,
Heaven will not clear it in the world to come.
Faintness hath so usurp'd upon my knees,
That kneel I cannot, but on my heart's knees
My prostrate soul lies thrown down at your feet
To beg your gracious pardon. Pardon, O pardon me.
Frankford. As freely from the low depth of my soul
As my Redeemer hath forgiven his death,
I pardon thee. I will shed tears for thee;
Pray with thee; and, in mere pity of thy weak estate,
I'll wish to die with thee.
All. So do we all.
Nicholas. So will not I;
I'll sigh and sob, but, by my faith, not die.
Sir Francis. O, Mr. Frankford, all the near alliance
I lose by her, shall be supplied in thee:
You are my brother by the nearest way;
Her kindred has fall'n off, but yours doth stay.
Frankford. Even as I hope for pardon at that day,
When the great Judge of heaven in scarlet sits,
So be thou pardon'd. Though thy rash offence
Divorc'd our bodies, thy repentant tears
Unite our souls.
Sir Charles. Then comfort, Mistress Frankford,
You see your husband hath forgiven your fall;
Then rouse your spirits, and cheer your fainting soul.
Susan. How is it with you?
Sir Francis. How d'ye feel yourself?
Mrs. Anne. Not of this world.
Frankford. I see you are not, and I weep to see it.
My wife, the mother to my pretty babes!
Both those lost names I do restore thee back,
And with this kiss I wed thee once again:
Though thou art wounded in thy honour'd name,
And with that grief upon thy deathbed liest,
Honest in heart, upon my soul, thou diest.
Mrs. Anne. Pardon'd on earth, soul, thou in heaven art free,
Once more: thy wife dies thus embracing thee. [Dies."

ARDEN OF FEVERSHAM.

In 1592 was first published "The lamentable and true Tragedie of M. Arden of Feversham in Kent." Subsequent editions of this tragedy appeared in 1599 and 1633. Lillo, the author of "George Barnwell," who died in 1739, left an unfinished tragedy upon the same subject, in which he has used the play of the sixteenth century very freely, but with considerable judgment. In 1770 the "Arden of Feversham originally published in 1592 was for the first time ascribed to Shakspere. It was then reprinted by Edward Jacob, a resident of Feversham (who also published a history of that town and port), with a preface, in which he endeavours to prove that the tragedy was written by Shakspere, upon the fallacious principle that it contains certain expressions which are to be found in his acknowledged works. This is at once the easiest and the most unsatisfactory species of evidence. Resemblances such as this may consist of mere conventional phrases, the common property of all the writers of a particular period. If the phrases are so striking that they must have been first created by an individual process of thought, the repetition of them is no proof that they have been twice used by the same person. Another may have adopted the phrase, perhaps unconsciously. General resemblances of style lead us into a wider range of inquiry; but even here we have a narrow enclosed ground compared with the entire field of criticism, which includes not only style but the whole system of the poet's art. It has been recently said of this play, "Arden of Feversham, a domestic tragedy, would, in point of absolute merit, have done no discredit to the early manhood of Shakspeare himself; but, both in conception and execution, it is quite unlike even his earliest manner; while, on the other hand, its date cannot possibly be removed so far back as the time before which his own style had demonstrably been formed."* Tieck has translated the tragedy into German, and he assigns it with little hesitation to Shakspere. Ulrici also subscribes to this opinion; but he makes a lower estimate of its merit than his brother critic. The versification he holds to be tedious and monotonous, and the dialogue, he says, is conducted with much exaggeration of expression. The play appears to us deserving of a somewhat full consideration. It was printed as early as 1592, and was most probably performed several years earlier; the event which forms its subject took place in 1551. What is very remarkable, too, for a play of this period (and in this opinion we differ from Ulrici), there is very little extravagance of language; and the criminal passion in all its stages is conducted with singular delicacy. There are many passages, too, which aim to be poetical, and are, in fact, poetical; but for the most part they want that vivifying dramatic power which makes the poetry doubly effective from its natural and inseparable union with the situation which calls it forth, and the character which gives it utterance. The tragedy is founded upon a real event, which had been popularly told with great minuteness of detail; and the dramatist has evidently thought it necessary to present all the points of the story, and in so doing has of course sometimes divided and weakened the interest. Of invention, properly so called, there is necessarily very little; but there is still some invention, and that of a nature to show that the author had an imaginative conception of incident and character. Upon the whole, we should be inclined to regard it as the work of a young man; and the question then arises whether that young man was Shakspere. If "Arden of Feversham," like the "Yorkshire Tragedy," had been founded upon an event which happened in Shakspere's mature years, that circumstance would have been decisive against his being in any sense of the word the author. But whilst we agree with the writer in the Edinburgh Review that "both in conception and execution it is quite unlike even his earliest manner," we are not so confident that "its date cannot possibly be removed so far back as the time before which his own style had demonstrably been formed." Whether it be due to the absorbing nature of the subject, or to the mode in which the story is dramatically treated, we think that "Arden of Feversham" cannot be read for the first time without exciting a very considerable interest; and this interest is certainly not produced by any violent exhibitions of passion, any sudden transitions of situation, or any exciting display of rhetoric or poetry; but by a quiet and natural succession of incidents, by a tolerably consistent, if not highly forcible, delineation of character, and by equable and unambitious dialogue, in which there is certainly less extravagance of expression than we should readily find in any of the writers for the stage between 1585 and 1592. Do we then think that "Arden of Feversham" belongs to the early manhood of Shakspere? We do not think so with any confidence; but we do think that, considering its date, it is a very remarkable play, and we should be at a loss to assign it to any writer whose name is associated with that early period of the drama, except to Shakspere. In questions of this nature there may be a conviction resulting from an examination of the whole evidence, the reasons for which cannot be satisfactorily communicated to others. But we are less anxious to make our readers think with us than to enable them to think for themselves; and we shall endeavour to effect this object in the analysis to which we now proceed.

The murder of Arden of Feversham must have produced an extraordinary and even permanent sensation in an age when deeds of violence were by no means unfrequent. Holinshed's Chronicle was first published in 1577; the event happened twenty-six years before, but the writer of the Chronicle says—"The which murder, for the horribleness thereof, although otherwise it may seem to be but a private matter, and therefore as it were impertinent to this history, I have thought good to set it forth somewhat at large, having the instructions delivered to me by them that have used some diligence to gather the true understanding of the circumstances." The narrative in Holinshed occupies seven closely printed columns, and all the details are brought out with a remarkable graphic power. We have no doubt that this narrative strongly seized upon the imagination of the writer of the play. To judge correctly of the poetical art of that writer we must follow the narrative step by step. The relative position of the several parties is thus described:—

"This Arden was a man of a tall and comely personage, and matched in marriage with a gentlewoman, young, tall, and well favoured of shape and countenance, who chancing to fall in familiarity with one Mosbie, a tailor by occupation, a black swart man, servant to the Lord North, it happened this Mosbie upon some mistaking to fall out with her; but she being desirous to be in favour with him again, sent him a pair of silver dice by one Adam Foule, dwelling at the Flower-de-luce, in Feversham. After which he resorted to her again, and oftentimes lay in Arden's house; and although (as it was said) Arden perceived right well their mutual familiarity to be much greater than their honesty, yet because he would not offend her, and so lose the benefit he hoped to gain at some of her friends' hands in bearing with her lewdness, which he might have lost if he should have fallen out with her, he was contented to wink at her filthy disorder, and both permitted and also invited Mosbie very often to lodge in his house. And thus it continued a good space before any practice was begun by them against Master Arden. She at length, inflamed in love with Mosbie, and loathing her husband, wished, and after practised, the means how to hasten his end."

* Edinburgh Review, vol. lxxi. p. 471.

The first evidence of a sound judgment in the dramatist is the rejection of the imputation of the chronicler that Arden connived at the conduct of his wife from mercenary motives. In the opening scene he puts Arden in a thoroughly different position. The play opens with a dialogue between Master Arden and his friend Master Franklin, in which Franklin exhorts him to cheer up his spirits because the king has granted him letters-patent of the lands of the abbey of Feversham. This is the answer of Arden :—

" Franklin, thy love prolongs my weary life ;
And but for thee, how odious were this life,
That shows me nothing, but torments my soul ;
And those foul objects that offend mine eyes,
Which make me wish that, for this veil of heaven,
The earth hung over my head and cover'd me!
Love-letters post 'twixt Mosbie and my wife,
And they have privy meetings in the town
Nay, on his finger did I spy the ring
Which, at our marriage, the priest put on :
Can any grief be half so great as this ? "

Presently Arden breaks out into a burst of passion, and Franklin thus counsels him :—

" Be patient, gentle friend, and learn of me
To ease thy grief and save her chastity :
Entreat her fair ; sweet words are fittest engines
To raze the flint walls of a woman's breast :
In any case be not too jealous,
Nor make no question of her love to thee,
But, as securely, presently take horse,
And lie with me at London all this term ;
For women, when they may, will not,
But, being kept back, straight grow outrageous."

Alice, the wife of Arden, enters ; and he accuses her, but mildly, of having called on Mosbie in her sleep ; the woman dissembles, and they part in peace. We have then the incident of the silver dice sent to the paramour by Adam of the Flower-de-luce. The chronicler has represented Alice as the principal agent in procuring the murder of her husband ; and the dramatist has, it appears to us with considerable skill, shown the woman from the first under the influence of a headlong passion, which cannot stop to conceal its purposes, which has no doubts, no suspicions, no fears. The earnestness with which she proceeds in her terrible design is thoroughly tragic ; and her ardour is strikingly contrasted with the more cautious guilt of her chief accomplice. She avows her passion for Mosbie to the landlord of the Flower-de-luce ; she openly prompts Arden's own servant Michael to murder his master, tempting him with a promise to promote his suit to Mosbie's sister. The first scene between Mosbie and Alice is a striking one :—

" Mosbie. Where is your husband ?
Alice. 'Tis now high water, and he is at the quay.
Mosbie. There let him : henceforward, know me not.
Alice. Is this the end of all thy solemn oaths ?
Is this the fruit thy reconcilement buds ?
Have I for this given thee so many favours,
Incurr'd my husband's hate, and out, alas !
Made shipwreck of mine honour for thy sake ?
And dost thou say, henceforward know me not ?
Remember when I lock'd thee in my closet,
What were thy words and mine ? Did we not both
Decree to murder Arden in the night ?
The heavens can witness, and the world can tell,
Before I saw that falsehood look of thine,
'Fore I was tangled with thy 'ticing speech,
Arden to me was dearer than my soul,—
And shall be still. Base peasant, get thee gone,
And boast not of thy conquest over me,
Gotten by witchcraft and mere sorcery.
For what hast thou to countenance my love,
Being descended of a noble house,
And match'd already with a gentleman,
Whose servant thou may'st be ?—and so, farewell.
Mosbie. Ungentle and unkind Alice, now I see
That which I ever fear'd, and find too true :
A woman's love is as the lightning flame,
Which even in bursting forth consumes itself.
To try thy constancy have I been strange.
Would I had never tried, but liv'd in hopes !
Alice. What needs thou try me, whom thou never found false ?
Mosbie. Yet, pardon me, for love is jealous.
Alice. So lists the sailor to the mermaid's song ;
So looks the traveller to the basilisk.
I am content for to be reconcil'd,
And that I know will be mine overthrow.
Mosbie. Thine overthrow ? First let the world dissolve.
Alice. Nay, Mosbie, let me still enjoy thy love,
And, happen what will, I am resolute."

It is impossible to doubt, whoever was the writer of this play, that we have before us the work of a man of no ordinary power. The transitions of passion in this scene are true to nature ; and, instead of the extravagant ravings of the writers of this early period of our drama, the appropriateness of the language to the passion is most remarkable. There is poetry, too, in the ordinary sense of the word, but the situation is not encumbered with the ornament. We would remark also, what is very striking throughout the play, that the versification possesses that freedom which we find in no other writer of the time but Shakspere. Ulrici holds a contrary opinion, but we cannot consent to surrender our judgment to a foreign ear. There is, too, in this scene the condensation of Shakspere, that wonderful quality by which he makes a single word convey a complex idea :—

" Is this the fruit thy reconcilement buds ? "

is an example of this quality. The whole scene is condensed. A writer of less genius, whoever he was, would have made it thrice as long. The guilty pair being reconciled, Mosbie says that he has found a painter who can so cunningly produce a picture that the person looking on it shall die. Alice is for more direct measures—for a poison to be given in her husband's food. Here again the Chronicle is followed :—

" There was a painter dwelling in Feversham, who had skill of poisons, as was reported ; she therefore demanded of him whether it were true that he had such skill in feat or not ? And he denied not but that he had indeed. Yea, said she, but I would have such a one made as should have most vehement and speedy operation to despatch the eater thereof. That can I do, quoth he ; and forthwith made her such a one."

The painter enters, and his reward, it appears, is to be Susan Mosbie. The painter is a dangerous and wicked person, but he speaks of his art and of its inspiration with a high enthusiasm :—

" For, as sharp-witted poets, whose sweet verse
Make heavenly gods break off their nectar-draughts,
And lay their ears down to the lowly earth,
Use humble promise to their sacred muse ;
So we, that are the poets' favourites,
Must have a love. Ay, love is the painter's muse,
That makes him frame a speaking countenance,
A weeping eye that witnesseth heart's grief."

The conference is interrupted by the entrance of Arden, of whom Mosbie readily asks a question about the abbey-lands. The following

* For—instead of.

scene ensues, and it is an example of the judgment with which the dramatist has adopted the passage from the Chronicle, that Arden "both permitted and also invited Mosbie very often to lodge in his house," without at the same time compromising his own honour :—

"Arden. Mosbie, that question we'll decide anon.
Alice, make ready my breakfast, I must hence. [Exit ALICE.
As for the lands, Mosbie, they are mine
By letters-patent of his majesty.
But I must have a mandat for my wife;
They say you seek to rob me of her love:
Villain, what mak'st thou in her company?
She's no companion for so base a groom.
Mosbie. Arden, I thought not on her, I came to thee;
But rather than I'll put up this wrong——
Franklin. What will you do, sir?
Mosbie. Revenge it on the proudest of you both.
[Then ARDEN draws forth MOSBIE'S sword.
Arden. So, sirrah, you may not wear a sword,
The statute made against artificers forbids it.
I warrant that I do.* Now use your bodkin,
Your Spanish needle, and your pressing-iron;
For this shall go with me: And mark my words,—
You, goodman botcher, 'tis to you I speak,—
The next time that I take thee near my house,
Instead of legs, I'll make thee crawl on stumps.
Mosbie. Ah, master Arden, you have injur'd me,
I do appeal to God and to the world.
Franklin. Why, canst thou deny thou wert a botcher once?
Mosbie. Measure me what I am, not what I once was.
Arden. Why, what art thou now but a velvet drudge,
A cheating steward, and base-minded peasant?
Mosbie. Arden, now hast thou belch'd and vomited
The rancorous venom of thy mis-swoln heart.
Hear me but speak: As I intend to live
With God, and his elected saints in heaven,
I never meant more to solicit her,
And that she knows; and all the world shall see:
I lov'd her once, sweet Arden; pardon me:
I could not choose; her beauty fir'd my heart;
But time hath quenched these once-raging coals;
And, Arden, though I frequent thine house,
'Tis for my sister's sake, her waiting-maid,
And not for hers. May'st thou enjoy her long!
Hell fire and wrathful vengeance light on me
If I dishonour her, or injure thee!
Arden. With these thy protestations,
The deadly hatred of my heart's appeas'd,
And thou and I'll be friends if this prove true.
As for the base terms that I gave thee late,
Forget them, Mosbie; I had cause to speak,
When all the knights and gentlemen of Kent
Make common table-talk of her and thee.
Mosbie. Who lives that is not touched with slanderous tongues?
Franklin. Then, Mosbie, to eschew the speech of men,
Upon whose general bruit all honour hangs,
Forbear his house.
Arden. Forbear it! nay, rather frequent it more:
The world shall see that I distrust her not.
To warn him on the sudden from my house
Were to confirm the rumour that is grown."

The first direct attempt of Alice upon her husband's life is thus told by the chronicler :—

"Now, Master Arden purposing that day to ride to Canterbury, his wife brought him his breakfast, which was wont to be milk and butter. He, having received a spoonful or two of the milk, misliked the taste and colour thereof, and said to his wife, Mistress Alice, what milk have you given me here? Wherewithal she tilted it over with her hand, saying, I ween nothing can please you. Then he took horse and rode towards Canterbury, and by the way fell into extreme sickness, and so escaped for that time.

* I justify that which I do.

In the tragedy the incident is exactly followed. Upon parting with her husband the dissembling of Alice is heart-sickening, but the scene is still managed naturally and consistently.

There is no division of this play into acts and scenes, but it is probable that the first act ends with the departure of Arden for London. Another agent appears upon the scene, whose motives and position are thus described in the Chronicle :—

"After this his wife fell in acquaintance with one Greene, of Feversham, servant to Sir Anthony Ager, from which Greene Master Arden had wrested a piece of ground on the back side of the Abbey of Feversham, and there had great blows and great threats passed betwixt them about that matter. Therefore she, knowing that Greene hated her husband, began to practise with him how to make him away; and concluded that, if he could get any that would kill him, he should have ten pounds for a reward."

The manner in which the guilty wife practises with this revengeful man is skilfully wrought out in the tragedy. She sympathizes with his supposed wrongs, she tells a tale of her own injuries, and then she proceeds to the open avowal of her purpose. Greene is to procure agents to murder her husband, and his reward, besides money, is to be the restoration of his lands. She communicates her proceedings to Mosbie, but he reproaches her for her imprudence in tampering with so many agents.

The course of the Chronicle continues to be followed with much exactness. The scene changes to the road for London, and the following description is then dramatized. It is so curious a picture of manners, as indeed the whole narrative is, that we need scarcely apologize for its length :—

"This Greene, having doings for his master Sir Anthony Ager, had occasion to go up to London, where his master then lay, and, having some charge up with him, desired one Bradshaw, a goldsmith of Feversham, that was his neighbour, to accompany him to Gravesend, and he would content him for his pains. This Bradshaw, being a very honest man, was content, and rode with him. And when they came to Rainhamdown they chanced to see three or four servingmen that were coming from Leeds; and therewith Bradshaw espied, coming up the hill from Rochester, one Black Will, a terrible cruel ruffian, with a sword and a buckler, and another with a great staff on his neck. Then said Bradshaw to Greene, We are happy that there cometh some company from Leeds, for here cometh up against us as murdering a knave as any is in England; if it were not for them we might chance hardly escape without loss of our money and lives. Yea, thought Greene (as he after confessed), such a one is for my purpose; and therefore asked, Which is he? Yonder is he, quoth Bradshaw, the same that hath the sword and buckler; his name is Black Will. How know you that? said Greene. Bradshaw answered, I knew him at Boulogne, where we both served; he was a soldier, and I was Sir Richard Cavendish's man; and there he committed many robberies and heinous murders on such as travelled betwixt Boulogne and France. By this time the other company of servingmen came to them, and they, going altogether, met with Black Will and his fellow. The servingmen knew Black Will, and, saluting him, demanded of him whither he went? He answered, By his blood (for his use was to swear almost at every word), I know not, nor care not; but set up my staff, and even as it falleth I go. If thou, quoth they, will go back again to Gravesend, we will give thee thy supper. By his blood, said he, I care not; I am content; have with you: and so he returned again with them. Then Black Will took acquaintance of Bradshaw, saying, Fellow Bradshaw, how dost thou? Bradshaw, unwilling to renew acquaintance, or to have aught to do with so shameless a ruffian, said, Why, do ye know me? Yea, that I do, quoth he; did not we serve in Boulogne together? But ye must pardon me, quoth Bradshaw, for I have forgotten you. Then Greene talked with Black Will, and said, When ye have supped, come to mine host's house at such a sign, and I will give you the sack and sugar. By his blood, said he, I thank you; I will come and take it, I warrant you. According to his promise he came, and there they made good cheer. Then Black Will and Greene went and talked apart from Bradshaw, and there concluded together, that if he would kill Master Arden he should have ten pounds for his labour. Then he answered, By his wounds, that I will if I may know him. Marry, to-morrow in Paul's I will show him thee, said Greene. Then they left their talk, and Greene bad him go home to his host's house. Then Greene wrote a letter to Mistress Arden, and among other things put in these words,—We have got a man for our purpose; we may thank my brother Bradshaw. Now Bradshaw, not knowing anything of this, took the letter of him, and in the morning departed home again, and delivered the letter to Mistress Arden, and Greene and Black Will went up to London at the tide."

The scene in the play seizes upon the principal points of this description, but the variations are those of a master. Bradshaw, it seems, is a goldsmith, and he is involved in a charge of buying some stolen plate. He thus describes the man who sold it him, and we can scarcely avoid thinking that here is the same power, though in an inferior degree, which produced the description of the apothecary in Romeo and Juliet :—

Will. What manner of man was he?
Brad. A lean-faced writhen knave,
Hawk-nos'd and very hollow-eyed;
With mighty furrows in stormy brows;
Long hair down to his shoulders curl'd;
His chin was bare, but on his upper lip
A mutchado, which he wound about his ear.
Will. What apparel had he?
Brad. A watchet satin doublet all to-torn,
The inner side did bear the greater show:
A pair of threadbare velvet hose seam-rent;
A worsted stocking rent above the shoe;
A livery cloak, but all the lace was off;
'Twas bad, but yet it serv'd to hide the plate."

One of the sources of the enchaining interest of this drama is to be found in the repeated escapes of Arden from the machinations of his enemies. We have seen the poison fail, and now the ruffian, whom no ordinary circumstances deterred from the commission of his purpose, is to be defeated by an unforeseen casualty. The Chronicle says :—

"At the time appointed Greene showed Black Will Master Arden walking in Paul's. Then said Black Will, What is he that goeth after him? Marry, said Greene, one of his men. By his blood, said Black Will, I will kill them both. Nay, said Greene, do not so, for he is of counsel with us in this matter. By his blood, said he, I care not for that; I will kill them both. Nay, said Greene, in any wise do not so. Then Black Will thought to have killed Master Arden in Paul's churchyard, but there were so many gentlemen that accompanied him to dinner, that he missed of his purpose."

The dramatist presents the scene much more strikingly to the senses, in a manner which tells us something of the inconveniences of old London. The ruffians are standing before a shop; an apprentice enters saying—

"'Tis very late, I were best shut up my stall, for here will be old filching when the press comes forth of Paul's."

The stage direction which follows is—"Then lets he down his window, and it breaks Black Will's head." The accident disturbs the immediate purpose of the ruffians. The character of Black Will is drawn with great force, but there is probably something of a youthful judgment in making the murderer speak in high poetry :—

"I tell thee, Greene, the forlorn traveller,
Whose lips are glued with summer-scorching heat,
Ne'er long'd so much to see a running brook
As I to finish Arden's tragedy."

The other ruffian is Shakebag, and in the same way he speaks in the language which a youthful poet scarcely knows how to avoid summoning from the depths of his own imagination :—

"I cannot paint my valour out with words:
But give me place and opportunity,
Such mercy as the starven lioness,
When she is dry suck'd of her eager young,
Shows to the prey that next encounters her,
On Arden so much pity would I take."

The propriety of putting poetical images in the mouths of the low agents of crime cannot exactly be judged by looking at such passages apart from that by which they are surrounded. There is no comedy in "Arden of Feversham." The character and events are lifted out of ordinary life of purpose by the poet. The ambition of a young writer may have carried this too far, but the principle upon which he worked was a right one. He aimed to produce something higher than a literal copy of everyday life, and this constitutes the essential distinction between "Arden of Feversham" and the "Yorkshire Tragedy," as between Shakspere and Heywood, and Shakspere and Lillo. In the maturity of his genius Shakspere did not vulgarise even his murderers. At the instant before the assault upon Banquo, one of the guilty instruments of Macbeth says, in the very spirit of poetry,—

"The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn."

Early in the drama, as we have seen, Alice proposes to her husband's servant to make away with his master. The circumstance has come to the knowledge of Greene, who, after the defeat of the plan through the apprentice's shutter, has to devise with his ruffians another mode of accomplishing Arden's death. The Chronicle thus tells the story :—

"Greene showed all this talk to Master Arden's man, whose name was Michael, which ever after stood in doubt of Black Will, lest he should kill him. The cause that this Michael conspired with the rest against his master was, for that it was determined that he should marry a kinswoman of Mosbie's. After this, Master Arden lay at a certain parsonage which he held in London, and therefore his man Michael and Greene agreed that Black Will should come in the night to the parsonage, where he should find the doors left open that he might come in and murder Master Arden."

The scene in which Michael consents to this proposal, with great reluctance, is founded upon the above text. We have a scene of Arden and Franklin, before they go to bed, in which Arden is torn with apprehension of the dishonour of his wife. There is great power here; but there is something of a higher order in the conflicting terrors of Michael when he is left alone, expecting the arrival of the pitiless murderer :—

"Conflicting thoughts, encamped in my breast,
Awake me with the echo of their strokes;
And I, a judge to censure either side,
Can give to neither wished victory.
My master's kindness pleads to me for life,
With just demand, and I must grant it him:
My mistress she hath forc'd me with an oath,
For Susan's sake, the which I may not break,
For that is nearer than a master's love:
That grim-fac'd fellow, pitiless Black Will,
And Shakebag stern, in bloody stratagem
(Two rougher ruffians never liv'd in Kent)
Have sworn my death if I infringe my vow—
A dreadful thing to be consider'd of.
Methinks I see them with their bolster'd hair,
Staring and grinning in thy gentle face,
And, in their ruthless hands their daggers drawn,
Insulting o'er thee with a peck of oaths,
Whilst thou, submissive, pleading for relief
Art mangled by their ireful instruments!
Methinks I hear them ask where Michael is,
And pitiless Black Will cries, 'Stab the slave;
The peasant will detect the tragedy.'

* Old—excessive.

The wrinkles of his foul death-threatening face
Gape open wide like graves to swallow men:
My death to him is but a merriment;
And he will murder me to make him sport.—
He comes! he comes! Master Franklin, help;
Call up the neighbours, or we are but dead."

This in a young poet would not only be promise of future greatness, but it would be the greatness itself. The conception of this scene is wholly original. The guilty coward, driven by the force of his imagination into an agony of terror so as to call for help, and thus defeat the plot in which he had been an accomplice, is a creation of real genius. The transition of his fears, from the picture of the murder of his master to that of himself, has a profundity in it which we seldom find except in the conceptions of one dramatist. The narrative upon which the scene is founded offers us a mere glimpse of this most effective portion of the story:—

"This Michael, having his master to bed, left open the doors according to the appointment. His master, then being in bed, asked him if he had shut fast the doors, and he said Yea; but yet afterwards, fearing lest Black Will would kill him as well as his master, after he was in bed himself he rose again, and shut the doors, bolting them fast."

In the drama the ruffians arrive, and are, of course, disappointed of their purpose by the closing of the doors. They swear revenge against Michael, but he subsequently makes his peace by informing them that his master is departing from London, and that their purpose may be accomplished on Rainhamdown.

The scene now changes, with a skilful dramatic management, to exhibit to us the guilty pair at Feversham. Mosbie is alone, and he shows us the depth of his depravity in the following soliloquy:—

"Mosbie. Disturbed thoughts drive me from company,
And dry my marrow with their watchfulness:
Continual trouble of my moody brain
Feebles my body by excess of drink,
And nips me as the bitter north-east wind
Doth check the tender blossoms in the spring.
Well fares the man, howe'er his cates do taste,
That tables not with foul suspicion;
And he but pines among his delicates
Whose troubled mind is stuff'd with discontent.
My golden time was when I had no gold;
Though then I wanted, yet I slept secure;
My daily toil begat me night's repose,
My night's repose made daylight fresh to me:
But since I climb'd the top-bough of the tree,
And sought to build my nest among the clouds,
Each gentle stary *gale doth shake my bed,
And makes me dread my downfall to the earth.
But whither doth contemplation carry me?
The way I seek to find where pleasure dwells
Is hedg'd behind me, that I cannot back,
But needs must on, although to danger's gate.
Then, Arden, perish thou by that decree;
For Greene doth heir the land, and weed thee up
To make my harvest nothing but pure corn;
And for his pains I'll heave him up a while,
And after smother him to have his wax;
Such bees as Greene must never live to sting.
Then is there Michael, and the painter too,
Chief actors to Arden's overthrow,
Who, when they see me sit in Arden's seat,
They will insult upon me for my meed,
Or fright me by detecting of his end:
I'll none of that, for I can cast a bone
To make these curs pluck out each other's throat,
And then am I sole ruler of mine own:
Yet mistress Arden lives, but she's myself,
And holy church-rites make us two but one.
But what for that? I may not trust you, Alice!
You have supplanted Arden for my sake,
And will extirpen me to plant another:
'Tis fearful sleeping in a serpent's bed;
And I will cleanly rid my hands of her.
But here she comes; and I must flatter her.
[Here enters ALICE."

* Stary—stirring. Our word star is supposed to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon stir-an, to move.

The unhappy woman has already begun to pay the penalty of her sin; she has moments of agonizing remorse, not enduring, however, but to be swept away again by that tempest of passion which first hurried her into guilt. The following scene is, we think, unmatched by any other writer than Shakspere in a play published as early as 1592, perhaps written several years earlier. It might have been written by Webster or Ford, but they belong to a considerably later period. It possesses in a most remarkable degree that quiet strength which is the best evidence of real power. Except in Shakspere, it is a strength for which we shall vainly seek in the accredited writings of any dramatic poet who, as far as we know, had written for the stage some ten years before the close of the sixteenth century:—

"Mosbie. Ungentle Alice, thy sorrow is my sore;
Thou know'st it well, and 'tis thy policy
To forge distressful looks to wound a breast
Where lies a heart that dies when thou art sad;
It is not love that loves to anger love.
Alice. It is not love that loves to murder love.
Mosbie. How mean you that?
Alice. Thou know'st how dearly Arden loved me.
Mosbie. And then——
Alice. And then conceal the rest, for 'tis too bad,
Lest that my words be carried with the wind,
And publish'd in the world to both our shames!
I pray thee, Mosbie, let our spring-time wither;
Our harvest else will yield but loathsome weeds:
Forget, I pray thee, what has pass'd betwixt us,
For now I blush and tremble at the thoughts.
Mosbie. What, are you chang'd?
Alice. Ay! to my former happy life again;
From title of an odious strumpet's name,
To honest Arden's wife, not Arden's honest wife.
Ah, Mosbie! 'tis thou hast rifled me of that,
And made me slanderous to all my kin:
Even in my forehead is thy name engraven—
A mean artificer;—that low-born name!
I was bewitch'd—woe-worth the hapless hour
And all the causes that enchanted me!
Mosbie. Nay, if thou ban, let me breathe curses forth;
And if you stand so nicely at your fame,
Let me repent the credit I have lost.
I have neglected matters of import
That would have stated me above thy state;
Forslow'd advantages, and spurn'd at time;
Ay, Fortune's right hand Mosbie hath forsook,
To take a wanton giglot by the left.
I left the marriage of an honest maid,
Whose dowry would have weigh'd down all thy wealth,
Whose beauty and demeanour far exceeded thee:
This certain good I lost for changing bad,
And wrapp'd my credit in thy company.
I was bewitch'd—that is no theme of thine,
And thou, unhallow'd, hast enchanted me.
But I will break thy spells and exorcisms,
And put another sight upon these eyes,
That show'd my heart a raven for a dove.
Thou art not fair; I view'd thee not till now:
Thou art not kind; till now I knew thee not:
And now the rain hath beaten off thy gilt,
Thy worthless copper shows thee counterfeit.
It grieves me not to see how foul thou art,
But mads me that ever I thought thee fair.
Go, get thee gone, a copesmate for thy hinds;
I am too good to be thy favourite.
Alice. Ay, now I see, and too soon find it true,

Which often hath been told me by my friends,
That Mosbie loves me not but for my wealth,
Which, too incredulous, I ne'er believ'd.
Nay, hear me speak, Mosbie, a word or two:
I'll bite my tongue if it speak bitterly.
Look on me, Mosbie, or else I'll kill myself;
Nothing shall hide me from thy stormy look.
If thou cry war, there is no peace for me,
I will do penance for offending thee,
And burn this prayer-book, where I here use
The holy word that hath converted me.
See, Mosbie, I will tear away the leaves,
And all the leaves, and in this golden cover
Shall thy sweet phrases and thy letters dwell,
And thereon will I chiefly meditate,
And hold no other sect but such devotion.
Wilt thou not look? Is all thy love o'erwhelm'd?
Wilt thou not hear? What malice stops thine ears?
Why speak'st thou not? What silence ties thy tongue?
Thou hast been sighted as the eagle is,
And heard as quickly as the fearful hare,
And spoke as smoothly as an orator,
When I have bid thee hear, or see, or speak.
And art thou sensible in none of these?
Weigh all my good turns with this little fault,
And I deserve not Mosbie's muddy looks;
A fence of trouble is not thicken'd still;
Be clear again; I'll no more trouble thee.
Mosbie. O fie, no; I am a base artificer;
My wings are feather'd for a lowly flight:
Mosbie, fie! no, not for a thousand pound—
Make love to you—why 'tis unpardonable—
We beggars must not breathe where gentles are!
Alice. Sweet Mosbie is as gentle as a king,
And I too blind to judge him otherwise:
Flowers sometimes spring in fallow lands,
Weeds in gardens; roses grow on thorns;
So, whatsoe'er my Mosbie's father was,
Himself is valued gentle by his worth.
Mosbie. Ah! how you women can insinuate
And clear a trespass with your sweetest tongue!
I will forget this quarrel, gentle Alice,
Provided I'll be tempted so no more."

The man who wrote that scene was no ordinary judge of the waywardness and wickedness of the human heart. It would be difficult to say that Shakspere at any time could have more naturally painted the fearful contest of a lingering virtue with an overwhelming passion.

We have seen the conspiracy to murder Arden on Rainhamdown. The devoted man again escapes by accident, and the Chronicle thus briefly records the circumstance:—

"When Master Arden came to Rochester, his man, still fearing that Black Will would kill him with his master, pricked his horse of purpose and made him to halt, to the end he might protract the time and tarry behind. His master asked him why his horse halted. He said, I know not. Well, quoth his master, when ye come at the smith here before (between Rochester and the hill-foot over against Chatham) remove his shoe, and search him, and then come after me. So Master Arden rode on; and ere he came at the place where Black Will lay in wait for him, there overtook him divers gentlemen of his acquaintance, who kept him company; so that Black Will missed here also of his purpose."

The dramatist shows us Greene and the two ruffians waiting for their prey, and the excuse of Michael to desert his master. Arden and Franklin are now upon the stage; and the dialogue which passes between them is a very remarkable example of the dramatic skill with which the principal characters are made to sustain an indifferent conversation, but which is still in harmony with the tone of thought that pervades the whole drama. Arden is unhappy in his domestic circumstances, and he eagerly listens to the tale of another's unhappiness. The perfect ease with which this conversation is managed appears to us a singular excellence, when we regard the early date of this tragedy:—

"Frank. Do you remember where my tale did cease?
Arden. Ay, where the gentleman did check his wife.
Frank. She being reprehended for the fact,
Witness produc'd that took her with the deed,
Her glove brought in which there she left behind,
And many other assured arguments,
Her husband ask'd her whether it were not so.
Arden. Her answer then? I wonder how she look'd,
Having forsworn it with such vehement oaths,
And at the instance so approv'd upon her.
Frank. First did she cast her eyes down to the earth,
Watching the drops that fell amain from thence;
Then softly draws she forth her handkercher,
And modestly she wipes her tear-stain'd face;
Then hemm'd she out, to clear her voice should seem,
And with a majesty address'd herself
To encounter all their accusations:—
Pardon me, master Arden, I can no more;
This fighting at my heart makes short my wind.
Arden. Come, we are almost now at Rainhamdown;
Your pretty tale beguiles the weary way;
I would you were in case to tell it out."

This "fighting at the heart," of which Franklin complains, is an augury of ill. Black Will and Shakebag are lurking around them; but the "divers gentlemen" of Arden's acquaintance arrive. Lord Cheinie and his men interrupt the murderers' purpose. Arden and his friend agree to dine with the nobleman the next day. They reach Feversham in safety. The occurrences of the next day are thus told in the Chronicle:—

"After that Master Arden was come home, he sent (as he usually did) his man to Sheppy, to Sir Thomas Cheinie's, then lord warden of the Cinque Ports, about certain business, and at his coming away he had a letter delivered, sent by Sir Thomas Cheinie to his master. When he came home, his mistress took the letter and kept it, willing her man to tell his master that he had a letter delivered him by Sir Thomas Cheinie, and that he had lost it; adding that he thought it best that his master should go the next morning to Sir Thomas, because he knew not the matter: he said he would, and therefore he willed his man to be stirring betimes. In this mean while, Black Will, and one George Shakebag, his companion, were kept in a storehouse of Sir Anthony Ager's, at Preston, by Greene's appointment; and thither came Mistress Arden to see him, bringing and sending him meat and drink many times. He, therefore, lurking there, and watching some opportunity for his purpose, was willed in any wise to be up early in the morning, to lie in wait for Master Arden in a certain broom-close betwixt Feversham and the ferry (which close he must needs pass), there to do his feat. Now Black Will stirred in the morning betimes, but missed the way, and tarried in a wrong place.

"Master Arden and his man coming on their way early in the morning towards Shornelan, where Sir Thomas Cheinie lay, as they were almost come to the broom-close, his man, always fearing that Black Will would kill him with his master, feigned that he had lost his purse. Why, said his master, thou foolish knave, couldst thou not look to thy purse but lose it? What was in it? Three pounds, said he. Why, then, go thy ways back again, like a knave (said his master), and seek it, for being so early as it is there is no man stirring, and therefore thou mayst be sure to find it; and then come and overtake me at the ferry. But nevertheless, by reason that Black Will lost his way, Master Arden escaped yet once again. At that time Black Will yet thought he should have been sure to have met him homewards; but whether that some of the lord warden's men accompanied him back to Feversham, or that being in doubt, for that it was late, to go through the broom-close, and therefore took another way, Black Will was disappointed then also."

The incident of the visit to Lord Cheinie is, as we have seen, differently managed by the dramatist. The escape of Arden on this occasion is very ingeniously contrived. A sudden mist renders it impossible for the ruffians to find their way. Black Will thus describes his misadventure:—

"Mosbie. Black Will and Shakebag, what make you here?
What! is the deed done? is Arden dead?
Will. What could a blinded man perform in arms?
Saw you not how till now the sky was dark,
That neither horse nor man could be discern'd?
Yet did we hear their horses as they pass'd."

As Arden and Franklin return, they are intercepted by Read, a sailor, who accuses Arden of a gross injustice, in depriving him of a piece of land. This incident is founded upon a statement of the chronicler, in accordance with the superstition of the times, that where the murdered body of Arden was first laid the grass did not grow for two years, and that of this very field he had wrongfully possessed himself:—

"Many strangers came in that mean time, beside the townsmen, to see the print of his body there on the ground in that field; which field he had, as some have reported, most cruelly taken from a woman that had been a widow to one Cooke, and after married to one Richard Read, a mariner, to the great hindrance of her and her husband, the said Read; for they had long enjoyed it by a lease, which they had of it for many years, not then expired; nevertheless he got it from them. For the which the said Read's wife not only exclaimed against him in shedding many a salt tear, but also cursed him most bitterly even to his face, wishing many a vengeance to light upon him, and that all the world might wonder on him."

There is surely great power in the following passage; and the denunciation of the sailor comes with a terrible solemnity after the manifold escapes to which we have been witness:—

"Read. What! wilt thou do me wrong and threaten me too?
Nay, then, I'll tempt thee, Arden; do thy worst.
God! I beseech thee show some miracle
On thee or thine, in plaguing thee for this:
That plot of ground which thou detainest from me,—
I speak it in an agony of spirit,—
Be ruinous and fatal unto thee!
Either there be butcher'd by thy dearest friends,
Or else be brought for men to wonder at,
Or thou or thine miscarry in that place,
Or there run mad and end thy cursed days.
Frank. Fie, bitter knave! bridle thine envious tongue;
For curses are like arrows shot upright,
Which falling down light on the shooter's head.
Read. Light where they will, were I upon the sea,
As oft I have in many a bitter storm,
And saw a dreadful southern flaw at hand,
The pilot quaking at the doubtful storm,
And all the sailors praying on their knees,
Even in that fearful time would I fall down,
And ask of God, whate'er betide of me,
Vengeance on Arden, or some misevent,
To show the world what wrong the carle hath done.
This charge I'll leave with my distressful wife;
My children shall be taught such prayers as these;
And thus I go, but leave my curse with thee."

We have next a scene in which, by the device of Alice, Mosbie and Black Will fasten a pretended quarrel upon Arden and his friend; but Mosbie is wounded, and Black Will runs away. A reconcilement takes place through the subtilty of the wife. Arden invites Mosbie with other friends to supper, and the conspirators agree that their deed of wickedness shall be done that night. The chronicler briefly tells the story:—

"They conveyed Black Will into Master Arden's house, putting him into a closet at the end of his parlour. Before this they had sent out of the house all the servants, those excepted which were privy to the devised murder. Then went Mosbie to the door, and there stood in a nightgown of silk girded about him, and this was betwixt six and seven of the clock at night. Master Arden, having been at a neighbour's house of his, named Dumpkin, and having cleared certain reckonings betwixt them, came home, and, finding Mosbie standing at the door, asked him if it were supper-time? I think not (quoth Mosbie), it is not yet ready. Then let us go and play a game at the tables in the mean season, said Master Arden. And so they went straight into the parlour: and as they came by through the hall, his wife was walking there, and Master Arden said, How now, Mistress Alice? But she made small answer to him. In the mean time one chained the wicket-door of the entry. When they came into the parlour, Mosbie sat down on the bench, having his face toward the place where Black Will stood. Then Michael, Master Arden's man, stood at his master's back, holding a candle in his hand, to shadow Black Will, that Arden might by no means perceive him coming forth. In their play, Mosbie said thus (which seemed to be the watchword for Black Will's coming forth), Now may I take you, sir, if I will. Take me? quoth Master Arden; which way? With that Black Will stepped forth, and cast a towel about his neck, so to stop his breath and strangle him. Then Mosbie, having at his girdle a pressing iron of fourteen pounds weight, struck him on the head with the same, so that he fell down, and gave a great groan, insomuch that they thought he had been killed."

The tragedy follows, with very slight variation, the circumstances here detailed. The guests arrive; but Alice betrays the greatest inquietude: she gets rid of them one by one, imploring them to seek her husband, and in the meanwhile the body is removed. The dramatist appears here to have depended upon the terrible interest of the circumstances more than upon any force of expression in the characters. The discovery of the murder follows pretty closely the narrative of the chronicler:—

"Here enter the Mayor and the Watch.
Alice. How now, master Mayor? have you brought my husband home?
Mayor. I saw him come into your house an hour ago.
Alice. You are deceiv'd; it was a Londoner.
Mayor. Mistress Arden, know you not one that is called Black Will?
Alice. I know none such; what mean these questions?
Mayor. I have the council's warrant to apprehend him.
Alice. I am glad it is no worse. [Aside.
Why, master Mayor, think you I harbour any such?
Mayor. We are informed that here he is;
And therefore pardon us, for we must search.
Alice. Ay, search and spare you not, through every room:
Were my husband at home you would not offer this.

Here enter FRANKLIN.

Master Franklin, what mean you come so sad?
Frank. Arden, thy husband, and my friend, is slain.
Alice. Ah! by whom? master Franklin, can you tell?
Frank. I know not, but behind the abbey
There he lies murder'd, in most piteous case.
Mayor. But, master Franklin, are you sure 'tis he?
Frank. I am too sure; would God I were deceiv'd!
Alice. Find out the murderers; let them be known.
Frank. Ay, so they shall; come you along with us.
Alice. Wherefore?
Frank. Know you this hand-towel and this knife?
Susan. Ah, Michael! through this thy negligence,
Thou hast betrayed and undone us all. [Aside.
Mich. I was so afraid, I knew not what I did;
I thought I had thrown them both into the well. [Aside.
Alice. It is the pig's blood we had to supper.
But wherefore stay you? find out the murderers.
Mayor. I fear me you'll prove one of them yourself.
Alice. I one of them? what mean such questions?
Frank. I fear me he was murder'd in this house,
And carried to the fields; for from that place,
Backwards and forwards, may you see
The print of many feet within the snow;
And look about this chamber where we are,
And you shall find part of his guiltless blood,
For in his slip-shoe did I find some rushes,
Which argue he was murder'd in this room.
Mayor. Look in the place where he was wont to sit:
See, see his blood; it is too manifest.
Alice. It is a cup of wine that Michael shed.

Mich. Ay, truly.
Frank. It is his blood which, strumpet, thou hast shed;
But, if I live, thou and thy complices,
Which have conspired and wrought his death,
Shall rue it."

In a subsequent scene the unhappy woman makes confession :—

"Mayor. See, Mistress Arden, where your husband lies.
Confess this foul fault, and be penitent.
Alice. Arden, sweet husband, what shall I say?
The more I sound his name the more he bleeds.
This blood condemns me, and in gushing forth
Speaks as it falls, and asks me why I did it.
Forgive me, Arden! I repent me now;
And would my death save thine thou shouldst not die.
Rise up, sweet Arden, and enjoy thy love,
And frown not on me when we meet in heaven:
In heaven I love thee, though on earth I did not."

The concluding scene shows us the principal culprits condemned to die :—

"Mayor. Leave to accuse each other now,
And listen to the sentence I shall give:
Bear Mosbie and his sister to London straight,
Where they in Smithfield must be executed:
Bear Mistress Arden unto Canterbury,
Where her sentence is she must be burnt:
Michael and Bradshaw in Feversham
Must suffer death.
Alice. Let my death make amends for all my sin.
Mosbie. Fie upon women, this shall be my song."

After the play Franklin, in a sort of epilogue, somewhat inartificially tells us that Shakebag was murdered in Southwark, and Black Will burnt at Flushing; that Greene was hanged at Osbridge, and the painter fled. Bradshaw, according to the Chronicle and the dramatic representation, was an innocent person. The drama concludes with the following apologetical lines :—

"Gentlemen, we hope you'll pardon this naked tragedy,
Wherein no filed points are foisted in
To make it gracious to the ear or eye;
For simple truth is gracious enough,
And needs no other points of glozing stuff."

These lines appear to us as an indication that the author of "Arden of Feversham," whoever he might be, was aware that such a story did not call for the highest efforts of dramatic art. It was a "naked tragedy"—"simple truth"—requiring "no filed points" or "glozing stuff." It appears to us, however, to stand upon very different grounds from the "Yorkshire Tragedy." It is a higher attempt in art than that little play. It involves more conflicting passion. It is not such a mere endeavour to present a series of exciting facts to the senses of an audience. It was in all probability written twenty years before the "Yorkshire Tragedy;" and this is a most important circumstance in considering whether Shakspere was at all concerned in it. To a very young man, whose principles of art were not formed, and who had scarcely any models before him, this tragic story might have appeared not only easy to be dramatized, but a worthy subject for his first efforts. We have to consider, too, how familiar the fearful narrative must have been to the young Shakspere. The name of his own mother was Arden; perhaps the Kentish Arden had some slight relationship with her family; but it is evident that the play originally bore the name of Arden of Feversham, as if it were to mark the distinction between that family and the Ardens of Wilmecote. The tale, too, was narrated at uncommon length in the Chronicle with which Shakspere was very early familiar. There is considerable inequality in the style of this play, but that inequality is not sufficient to lead us to believe that more than one hand was engaged in it. The dramatic management is always skilful; the interest never flags; the action steadily goes forward; there are no secondary plots; and the little comedy that we find is not thrust in to produce a laugh from a few barren spectators. The writer, we think, was familiar with London, which is not at all inconsistent with the belief that it belongs to the youth of Shakspere. Still, the utter absence of external evidence must have left the matter exceedingly doubtful even if the tragedy had possessed higher excellences than belong to it. It was never attributed to Shakspere by any of his contemporaries; and yet it must have been a popular play, for it was reprinted forty years after its publication. Without doubt there may have been some writer, of whose name and works we know nothing, to whom this play may have been assigned; but if it be improbable that Shakspere had written it, it is equally improbable that any of the known dramatists who had attained a celebrity in 1592 should have written it. It has none of the characteristics of any one of them—their extravagance of language; their forced passion; their overloading of classical allusions; their monotonous versification. Its power mainly lies in its simplicity. The unhappy woman is the chief character in the drama; and it appears to us that the author especially exhibits in "Mistress Arden" that knowledge of the hidden springs of human guilt and weakness which is not to be found in the generalities of any of the early contemporaries of Shakspere. Still we must be understood as not attempting to pronounce any decided opinion upon the question of authorship. We neither hold with the German critics, whose belief approaches to credulity in this and other cases, nor with the English, who appear to consider, in most things, that scepticism and sound judgment are identical.

KING EDWARD III.

"THE Raigne of King Edward the third: As it hath bin sundrie times plaied about the Citie of London," was first published in 1596. It was entered on the registers of the Stationers' Company December 1st, 1595. The play was reprinted in 1599, and, judging from other entries in the Stationers' registers, also in 1609, 1617, and 1625. From that time the work was known only to the collectors of single plays, till, in 1760, Capell reprinted it in a volume entitled "Prolusions, or Select Pieces of Ancient Poetry," as "a play thought to be writ by Shakespeare." The editor of that volume thus speaks of the play in his preface:—"But what shall be said of the poem that constitutes the second part? or how shall the curiosity be satisfied which it is probable may have been raised by the great name inserted in the title-page? That it was indeed written by Shakespeare, it cannot be said with candour that there is any external evidence at all something of proof arises from resemblance between the style of his earlier performances and the work in question; and a more conclusive one yet from consideration of the time it appeared in, in which there was no known writer equal to such a play: the fable of it too is taken from the same books which that author is known to have followed in some other plays, to wit, Holinshed's 'Chronicle,' and a book of novels called 'The Palace of Pleasure.' But, after all, it must be confessed that its being his work is conjecture only, and matter of opinion; and the reader must form one of his own, guided by what is now before him, and by what he shall meet with in perusal of the piece itself." Capell was not a person to offer any critical reasons for his own belief; but the opinions of several able critics in our own time would show that he was not to be laughed at, as Steevens was inclined to laugh at him, for rescuing this play from the hands of the mere antiquarians. The anonymous critic whom we have often quoted says —"Capell was the first who directed attention to this play, as perhaps Shakspeare's; and it is in every respect one of the best dramas of its time. It is very unequal, and its plot is unskilfully divided into two parts; but through most scenes there reign a pointed strength of thought and expression, a clear richness of imagery, and an apt though rough delineation of character, which entitle it to rank higher than any historical play of the sixteenth century, excepting Shakspeare's admitted works of this class, and Marlowe's 'Edward II.'"† The opinion of Ulrici is very full and decided upon the authorship of "Edward III.," and we may as well present it at once to the reader in its general bearings.

"The play of 'Edward III. and the Black Prince,' &c., is entered not less than four times in the register of the Stationers' Company; first, on Dec. 1, 1595; and lastly, on Feb. 23, 1625. It was first printed in 1596, and reprinted in 1599, both editions being without the name of the author. Of any later edition I have no knowledge. Both these early editions, being anonymous, can, however, prove nothing. But even if the later editions were equally without the announcement of the author, this certainly rather striking fact may be satisfactorily explained by the nature of the piece itself. In the first two acts we find many bitter attacks upon the Scots, inspired by English patriotism: these were thoroughly in place during Elizabeth's lifetime, who, it is well known, loved her successor not much better than she did his mother, and ever stood in a guarded attitude against Scotland. To James I., on the contrary, these passages must have given offence. But Shakspere was indebted to James for many kindnesses; and he has praised and celebrated him in several of his plays. Thus, in order to avoid wounding his sense of gratitude, he may either have expressly denied the paternity of Edward III., or have refused to recognise it, and abandoned to its fate a piece that perhaps did not satisfy him upon other grounds. And in this way it may be also explained how a poem, which bears Shakspere's stamp so evidently, should have been overlooked or intentionally omitted by his friends Heminge and Condell, the editors of the first folio. That the piece probably belongs to Shakspere's earlier labours (without doubt two years at least before the date of its first being printed), is evident from the language and versification, from the many rhymed passages, but more particularly from the composition, which, if we consider the piece as one whole, is incontestably faulty. For the first two acts clearly stand alone much too independently; internally only partially united, and not at all externally, with the following three acts. In the first part the point of the action turns upon the love of the king for the beautiful Countess of Salisbury, whom he has released from the besieging Scottish army. The whole of this connection is no farther mentioned in the following part; it comes to a total conclusion at the end of the second act where the king, conquered, and at the same time strengthened, by the virtuous greatness of the countess, renounces his passion, and becomes again the master of himself. The countess then disappears wholly from the scene, which is changed to the victorious campaign of Edward III. and his heroic son the Black Prince. The play thus falls into two different Parts. But the fault which this involves wholly vanishes immediately that we take the two halves for two different pieces, united into a whole, in the same manner as the Two Parts of Henry IV. Everything then rounds itself into a complete and beautiful historical composition, which is throughout worthy of the great poet."

Of the value of this opinion of the very able German critic before us we shall endeavour to lead our readers to form their own judgment. If they come to the conclusion that the play is not Shakspere's, they will at least acquire a familiarity with some striking scenes and passages which are little known to English readers. The early editions are very rare; and Capell's volume is by no means a common book.

The view which Ulrici has taken that "The Reign of Edward III." must be considered as a play in Two Parts is perfectly just. But it must also be borne in mind that Shakspere has himself furnished us no example of such a complete division of the action in any one historical play which he has left us. The Two Parts of Henry IV. comprised two distinct plays, each complete in itself, each performed on a separate day, but each connected with the other by a chorus which fills up the gap of time. So the Three Parts of Henry VI. and Richard III. are perfectly separate, although essentially connected. The plan pursued in the "Edward III." is, to say the least, exceedingly inartificial. If the writer of this play had possessed more dramatic skill, he might have made the severance of the action less abrupt. As it is, the link is snapped short. In the first two acts we have the Edward of romance—a puling lover, a heartless seducer, a despot, and then a penitent. In the last three acts we have the

* Steevens, in a note upon the entry in the Stationers' register, says—"This is ascribed to Shakspeare by the compilers of ancient catalogues." This was one of the modes in which Steevens thought it clever to insult Capell by a contemptuous neglect.

† Edinburgh Review, vol. lxxi. p. 471.

Edward of history—the ambitious hero, the stern conqueror, the affectionate husband, the confiding father. The one portion of the drama pretty closely follows the apocryphal and inconsistent story in "The Palace of Pleasure," how "A King of England loved a daughter of one of his noblemen, which was Countess of Salisbury." And here the author has certainly produced some powerful scenes, and considerably improved upon the fable which he in great part followed. In the latter portion of the play he has Froissart before him; and, dealing with those incidents which were calculated to call forth the highest poetical efforts, such as the battle of Poitiers and the siege of Calais, the dramatist is strikingly inferior to the fine old chronicler. When Shakspere dealt with heroic subjects, as in his Henry V., he kept pretty closely to the original narratives; but he breathed a life into the commonest occurrences, which leaves us to wonder how the exact could be so intimately blended with the poetical, and how that which is the most natural should, through the force of a few magical touches, become the most sublime. We do not trace this wonderful power in the play before us: talent there certainly is, but the great creative spirit is not visible.

The play opens with Robert of Artois explaining to Edward III. the claims which he has to the crown of France through his mother Isabelle. This finished, the Duke of Lorraine arrives to summon Edward to do homage to the King of France for the dukedom of Guienne. The scene altogether reminds us of the second scene of the first act of Henry V., where the Archbishop of Canterbury expounds the Salic law, and the ambassadors of France arrive with an insolent message to Henry from the Dauphin. The parallel scenes in both plays have some resemblance to the first scene of King John, where Chatillon arrives with a message from France. It is probable that the Henry V. of Shakspere was not written till after this play of "Edward III.;" and the King John, as we now have it, might probably be even a later play: but the original King John, in Two Parts, belongs, without doubt, to an earlier period than the "Edward III.," and the same resemblance in this scene holds good with that play. Upon the departure of Lorraine, the rupture of the league with the Scots is announced to Edward, with the further news that the Countess of Salisbury is besieged in the castle of Roxburgh. The second scene shows us the countess upon the walls of the castle, and then King David of Scotland enters, and thus addresses himself to Lorraine:—

> "Dav. My lord of Lorraine, to our brother of France
> Commend us, as the man in Christendom
> Whom we most reverence and entirely love.
> Touching your embassage, return, and say,
> That we with England will not enter parley,
> Nor never make fair weather, or take truce;
> But burn their neighbour towns, and so persist
> With eager roads beyond their city York.
> And never shall our bonny riders rest;
> Nor rusting canker have the time to eat
> Their light-borne snaffles, nor their nimble spurs;
> Nor lay aside their jacks of gymold mail;
> Nor hang their staves of grained Scottish ash
> In peaceful wise upon their city walls;
> Nor from their button'd tawny leathern belts
> Dismiss their biting whinyards,—till your king
> Cry out 'Enough; spare England now for pity.'
> Farewell: and tell him, that you leave us here
> Before this castle; say, you came from us
> Even when we had that yielded to our hands."

If this speech be not Shakspere's, it is certainly a closer imitation of the freedom of his versification, and the truth and force of his imagery, than can be found in any of the historical plays of that period. We do not except even the "Edward II." of Marlowe, in which it would be difficult to find a passage in which the poetry is so little conventional as the lines which we have just quoted. And this brings us to the important consideration of the date of "Edward III." Ulrici holds that it was written at least two years before it was published. We cannot see the reason for this opinion. It was entered on the Stationers' registers on the 1st of December, 1595, and we have pretty good evidence in many cases that such entry was concurrent with the time of the original performance. If the "Edward III," then, was first produced in 1595, there can be no doubt that several of Shakspere's historical plays were already before the public—the Henry VI. and Richard III.—in all probability the Richard II. Bearing this circumstance in mind, we can easily understand how a new school of writers should, in 1595, have been formed, possessing, perhaps, less original genius than some of the earlier founders of the drama, but having an immense advantage over them in the models which the greatest of those founders had produced. Still this consideration does not wholly warrant us in hastily pronouncing the play before us not to be Shakspere's. As in the case of "Arden of Feversham," we have to look, and we look in vain, for some known writer of the period whose works exhibit a similar combination of excellences.

The Countess of Salisbury is speedily relieved from her besiegers by the arrival of Edward with his army. The king and the countess meet, and Edward becomes her guest. His position is a dangerous one, and he rushes into the danger. There is a very long and somewhat ambitious scene, in which the king instructs his secretary to describe his passion in verse. It is certainly not conceived in a real dramatic spirit. The action altogether flags, and the passion is very imperfectly developed in such an outpouring of words. The next scene, in which Edward avows his passion for the countess, is conceived and executed with far more success:—

> "Cou. Sorry I am to see my liege so sad:
> What may thy subject do, to drive from thee
> This gloomy consort, sullen melancholy?
> Edw. Ah, lady, I am blunt, and cannot straw
> The flowers of solace in a ground of shame:—
> Since I came hither, countess, I am wrong'd.
> Cou. Now, God forbid, that any in my house
> Should think my sovereign wrong! Thrice gentle king,
> Acquaint me with your cause of discontent.
> Edw. How near then shall I be to remedy?
> Cou. As near, my liege, as all my woman's power
> Can pawn itself to buy thy remedy.
> Edw. If thou speak'st true, then have I my redress:
> Engage thy power to redeem my joys,
> And I am joyful, countess; else, I die.
> Cou. I will, my liege.
> Edw. Swear, countess, that thou wilt.
> Cou. By heaven, I will.
> Edw. Then take thyself a little way aside;
> And tell thyself a king doth dote on thee:
> Say, that within thy power it doth lie
> To make him happy; and that thou hast sworn
> To give me all the joy within thy power:
> Do this, and tell me when I shall be happy.
> Cou. All this is done, my thrice dread sovereign:
> That power of love, that I have power to give,
> Thou hast with all devout obedience;
> Employ me how thou wilt in proof thereof.
> Edw. Thou hear'st me say that I do dote on thee.
> Cou. If on my beauty, take it if thou canst;
> Though little, I do prize it ten times less:
> If on my virtue, take it if thou canst;
> For virtue's store by giving doth augment:
> Be it on what it will, that I can give,
> And thou canst take away, inherit it.
> Edw. It is thy beauty that I would enjoy.
> Cou. O, were it painted, I would wipe it off,
> And dispossess myself, to give it thee:
> But, sovereign, it is solder'd to my life:
> Take one, and both; for, like an humble shadow,
> It haunts the sunshine of my summer's life.
> Edw. But thou mayst lend it me to sport withal.
> Cou. As easy may my intellectual soul
> Be lent away, and yet my body live,
> As lend my body, palace to my soul,

Away from her, and yet retain my soul.
My body is her bower, her court, her abbey,
And she an angel, pure, divine, unspotted;
If I should lend her house, my lord, to thee,
I kill my poor soul, and my poor soul me."

The Earl of Warwick, father to the Countess of Salisbury, is required by Edward, upon his oath of duty, to go to his daughter, and command her to agree with his dishonourable proposals. This very unnatural and improbable incident is found in the story of "The Palace of Pleasure;" but it gives occasion to a scene of very high merit—a little wordy, perhaps, but still upon the whole natural and effective. The skill with which the father is made to deliver the message of the king, and to appear to recommend a compliance with his demands, but so at the same time as to make the guilty purpose doubly abhorrent, indicates no common power:—

"War. How shall I enter in this graceless errand?
I must not call her child; for where's the father
That will, in such a suit, seduce his child?
Then, Wife of Salisbury,—shall I so begin?
No, he's my friend; and where is found the friend
That will do friendship such endamagement?
Neither my daughter, nor my dear friend's wife.
I am not Warwick, as thou think'st I am,
But an attorney from the court of hell;
That thus have hous'd my spirit in his form,
To do a message to thee from the king.
The mighty king of England dotes on thee:
He, that hath power to take away thy life,
Hath power to take thine honour; then consent
To pawn thine honour, rather than thy life;
Honour is often lost, and got again;
But life, once gone, hath no recovery.
The sun, that withers hay, doth nourish grass;
The king, that would distain thee, will advance thee.
The poets write that great Achilles' spear
Could heal the wound it made: the moral is
What mighty men misdo, they can amend.
The lion doth become his bloody jaws,
And grace his foragement, by being mild
When vassal fear lies trembling at his feet.
The king will in his glory hide thy shame;
And those, that gaze on him to find out thee,
Will lose their eyesight, looking in the sun.
What can one drop of poison harm the sea,
Whose hugy vastures can digest the ill,
And make it lose his operation?
The king's great name will temper thy misdeeds,
And give the bitter potion of reproach
A sugar'd sweet and most delicious taste
Besides, it is no harm to do the thing
Which without shame could not be left undone.
Thus have I, in his majesty's behalf,
Apparel'd sin in virtuous sentences,
And dwell upon thy answer in his suit.
Cou. Unnatural besiege! Woe me, unhappy,
To have escap'd the danger of my foes,
And to be ten times worse invir'd by friends!
Hath he no means to stain my honest blood,
But to corrupt the author of my blood,
To be his scandalous and vile solicitor?
No marvel, though the branches be infected,
When poison hath encompassed the root:
No marvel, though the leprous infant die,
When the stern dam envenometh the dug.
Why, then, give sin a passport to offend,
And youth the dangerous rein of liberty:
Blot out the strict forbidding of the law;
And cancel every canon that prescribes
A shame for shame, or penance for offence.
No, let me die, if his too boist'rous will
Will have it so, before I will consent
To be an actor in his graceless lust.
War. Why, now thou speak'st as I would have thee speak:
And mark how I unsay my words again.
An honourable grave is more esteem'd
Than the polluted closet of a king:
The greater man, the greater is the thing,
Be it good, or bad, that he shall undertake:
An unreputed mote, flying in the sun,
Presents a greater substance than it is:
The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint
The loathed carrion that it seems to kiss:
Deep are the blows made with a mighty axe:
That sin doth ten times aggravate itself
That is committed in a holy place:
An evil deed, done by authority,
Is sin and subornation Deck an ape
In tissue, and the beauty of the robe
Adds but the greater scorn unto the beast.
A spacious field of reasons could I urge,
Between his glory, daughter, and thy shame:
That poison shows worst in a golden cup;
Dark night seems darker by the lightning flash;
Lilies, that fester, smell far worse than weeds;
And every glory that inclines to sin,
The shame is treble by the opposite.
So leave I, with my blessing in thy bosom;
Which then convert to a most heavy curse,
When thou convert'st from honour's golden name
To the black faction of bed-blotting shame! [Exit.
Cou. I'll follow thee: And, when my mind turns so,
My body sink my soul in endless woe! [Exit."

There is a line in the latter part of this scene which is to be found also in one of Shakspere's Sonnets—the Ninety-fourth:—

"Lilies, that fester, smell far worse than weeds."

We are decidedly of opinion that the line was original in the Sonnet, and transplanted thence into this play. The point was material in considering the date of the Sonnet, but it throws no light either upon the date of this play or upon its authorship.

During the tempest of Edward's passion the Prince of Wales arrives at the Castle of Roxburgh, and the conflict in the mind of the king is well imagined:—

"Edw. I see the boy. O, how his mother's face,
Moulded in his, corrects my stray'd desire,
And rates my heart, and chides my thievish eye;
Who, being rich enough in seeing her,
Yet seeks elsewhere: and basest theft is that
Which cannot check itself on poverty.—
Now, boy, what news?
Pri. I have assembled, my dear lord and father,
The choicest buds of all our English blood,
For our affairs in France; and here we come,
To take direction from your majesty.
Edw. Still do I see in him delineate
His mother's visage; those his eyes are hers,
Who, looking wistly on me, made me blush;
For faults against themselves give evidence:
Lust is a fire; and men, like lanthorns, show
Light lust within themselves, even through themselves.
Away, loose silks of wavering vanity!
Shall the large limit of fair Brittany
By me be overthrown? and shall I not
Master this little mansion of myself?
Give me an armour of eternal steel;
I go to conquer kings and shall I then
Subdue myself, and be my enemy's friend?
It must not be.—Come, boy, forward, advance!
Let's with our colours sweep the air of France.
Lod. My liege, the countess, with a smiling cheer,
Desires access unto your majesty.
[Advancing from the door and whispering him.
Edw. Why, there it goes! that very smile of hers
Hath ransom'd captive France; and set the king,
The dauphin, and the peers, at liberty.—
Go, leave me, Ned, and revel with thy friends. [Exit PRINCE."

The countess enters, and with the following scene suddenly terminates the ill-starred passion of the king :—

"Edw. Now, my soul's playfellow! art thou come,
To speak the more than heavenly word of yea,
To my objection in thy beauteous love?
Cou. My father on his blessing hath commanded—
Edw. That thou shalt yield to me.
Cou. Ay, dear my liege, your due.
Edw. And that, my dearest love, can be no less
Than right for right, and tender love for love.
Cou. Than wrong for wrong, and endless hate for hate.—
But,—sith I see your majesty so bent,
That my unwillingness, my husband's love,
Your high estate, nor no respect respected
Can be my help, but that your mightiness
Will overbear and awe these dear regards,—
I bind my discontent to my content,
And, what I would not, I'll compel I will;
Provided that yourself remove those lets
That stand between your highness' love and mine.
Edw. Name them, fair countess, and, by heaven, I will.
Cou. It is their lives, that stand between our love,
That I would have chok'd up, my sovereign.
Edw. Whose lives, my lady?
Cou. My thrice loving liege,
Your queen, and Salisbury my wedded husband;
Who living have that title in our love,
That we cannot bestow but by their death.
Edw. Thy opposition is beyond our law.
Cou. So is your desire: If the law
Can hinder you to execute the one,
Let it forbid you to attempt the other:
I cannot think you love me as you say,
Unless you do make good what you have sworn.
Edw. No more; thy husband and the queen shall die.
Fairer thou art by far than Hero was;
Beardless Leander not so strong as I:
He swom an easy current for his love:
But I will, through a helly spout of blood,
Arrive that Sestos where my Hero lies.
Cou. Nay, you'll do more; you'll make the river too,
With their heart-bloods that keep our love asunder,
Of which, my husband, and your wife, are twain.
Edw. Thy beauty makes them guilty of their death,
And gives in evidence, that they shall die;
Upon which verdict, I, their judge, condemn them.
Cou. O perjur'd beauty! more corrupted judge!
When, to the great star-chamber o'er our heads,
The universal sessions calls to count
This packing evil, we both shall tremble for it.
Edw. What says my fair love? is she resolute?
Cou. Resolute to be dissolv'd; and, therefore, this,—
Keep but thy word, great king, and I am thine.
Stand where thou dost, I'll part a little from thee,
And see how I will yield me to thy hands.
[Turning suddenly upon him, and showing two daggers.
Here by my side do hang my wedding knives:
Take thou the one, and with it kill thy queen,
And learn by me to find her where she lies;
And with the other I'll despatch my love,
Which now lies fast asleep within my heart:
When they are gone, then I'll consent to love.
Stir not, lascivious king, to hinder me;
My resolution is more nimbler far,
Than thy prevention can be in my rescue,
And, if thou stir, I strike; therefore stand still,
And hear the choice that I will put thee to:
Either swear to leave thy most unholy suit,
And never henceforth to solicit me;
Or else, by heaven [kneeling], this sharp-pointed knife
Shall stain thy earth with that which thou wouldst stain,
My poor chaste blood. Swear, Edward, swear,
Or I will strike, and die, before thee here.
Edw. Even by that Power I swear, that gives me now
The power to be ashamed of myself,
I never mean to part my lips again
In any word that tends to such a suit.
Arise, true English lady; whom our isle
May better boast of, than e'er Roman might
Of her, whose ransack'd treasury hath task'd
The vain endeavour of so many pens
Arise; and be my fault thy honour's fame,
Which after ages shall enrich thee with.
I am awaked from this idle dream."

The remarks of Ulrici upon this portion of the play are conceived upon his usual principle of connecting the action and characterization of Shakspere's dramas with the development of a high moral, or rather Christian, principle. He is sometimes carried too far by his theory, but there is something far more satisfying in the criticism of his school than in the husks of antiquarianism with which we have been too long familiar :—"We see, in the first two acts, how the powerful king (who in his rude greatness, in his reckless iron energy, reminds us of the delineations of character in the elder King John, Henry VI., and Richard III.) sinks down into the slough of common life before the virtue and faithfulness of a powerless woman; how he, suddenly enchained by an unworthy passion, abandons his great plans in order to write verses and spin intrigues. All human greatness, power, and splendour, fall of themselves, if not planted upon the soil of genuine morality; the highest energies of mankind are not proof against the attacks of sin, when they are directed against the weak unguarded side—this is the substance of the view of life here taken, and it forms the basis of the First Part. But true energy is enabled again to elevate itself; it strengthens itself from the virtues of others, which by God's appointment are placed in opposition to it. With this faith, and with the highest, most masterly, deeply-penetrating, and even sublime picture of the far greater energy of a woman, who, in order to save her own honour and that of her royal master, is ready to commit self-murder, the second act closes. This forms the transition to the following second Part, which shows us the true heroic greatness, acquired through self-conquest, not only in the king, but also in his justly celebrated son. For even the prince has also gone through the same school: he proves this, towards the end of the second act, by his quick silent obedience to the order of his father, although directly opposed to his wishes."

In the third act we are at once in the heart of war; we have the French camp, where John with his court hears of the arrival of Edward's fleet, and the discomfiture of his own. The descriptions of these events are, as we think, tedious and overstrained; at any rate they are undramatic. The writer is endeavouring to put out his power, where the highest power would be wasted. There is less ambition, but much more force, in the following speech of a poor Frenchman who is flying from the invaders :—

"Fly, countrymen, and citizens of France!
Sweet-flow'ring peace, the root of happy life,
Is quite abandon'd and expuls'd the land:
Instead of whom, ransack-constraining war
Sits like to ravens on your houses' tops;
Slaughter and mischief walk within your streets,
And, unrestrain'd, make havoc as they pass
The form whereof even now myself beheld,
Now, upon this fair mountain, whence I came.
For so far as I did direct mine eyes,
I might perceive five cities all on fire,
Corn-fields, and vineyards, burning like an oven;
And, as the leaking vapour in the wind
Turned aside, I likewise might discern
The poor inhabitants, escap'd the flame,
Fall numberless upon the soldiers' pikes
Three ways these dreadful ministers of wrath
Do tread the measures of their tragic march;
Upon the right hand comes the conquering king,
Upon the left his hot unbridled son,
And in the midst our nation's glittering host;
All which, though distant, yet conspire in one
To leave a desolation where they come."

Before the battle of Cressy we have an interview between the rival kings. The debate is not managed with any very great dignity on either side. Upon the retiring of John and his followers, the Prince of Wales is solemnly armed upon the field :—

"And, Ned, because this battle is the first
That ever yet thou fought'st in pitched field,
As ancient custom is of martialists,
To dub thee with the type of chivalry,
In solemn manner we will give thee arms."

The famous incident of the battle of Cressy, that of the king refusing to send succour to his gallant son, is thus told by Froissart :—

"They with the prince sent a messenger to the king, who was on a little windmill hill; then the knight said to the king, 'Sir, the Earl of Warwick, and the Earl of Oxford, Sir Reynold Cobham, and other, such as be about the prince your son, are fiercely fought withal, and are sore handled, wherefore they desire you, that you and your battle will come and aid them, for if the Frenchmen increase, as they doubt they will, your son and they shall have much ado.' Then the king said, 'Is my son dead or hurt, or on the earth felled?' 'No, sir,' quoth the knight, 'but he is hardly matched, wherefore he hath need of your aid.' 'Well,' said the king, 'return to him and to them that sent you hither, and say to them, that they send no more to me for any adventure that falleth, as long as my son is alive; and also say to them, that they suffer him this day to win his spurs, for, if God be pleased, I will this journey be his, and the honour thereof, and to them that be about him.' Then the knight returned again to them, and showed the king's words, the which greatly encouraged them, and repined in that they had sent to the king as they did."

The dramatist has worked out this circumstance with remarkable spirit; it is, we think, the best business scene in the play—not overwrought, but simple, and therefore most effective :—

"Drums. Enter KING EDWARD and AUDLEY.

Edw. Lord Audley, whiles our son is in the chase,
Withdraw your powers unto this little hill,
And here a season let us breathe ourselves.
Aud. I will, my lord. [Exit AUDLEY. Retreat.
Edw. Just-dooming heaven, whose secret providence
To our gross judgment is unscrutable,
How are we bound to praise thy wondrous works,
That hast this day giv'n way unto the right,
And made the wicked stumble at themselves!

Enter ARTOIS hastily.

Art. Rescue, king Edward! rescue for thy son!
Edw. Rescue, Artois? what, is he prisoner?
Or, by violence, fell beside his horse?
Art. Neither, my lord; but narrowly beset
With turning Frenchmen, whom he did pursue,
As 'tis impossible that he should 'scape,
Except your highness presently descend.
Edw. Tut! let him fight; we gave him arms to-day
And he is labouring for a knighthood, man.

Enter DERBY hastily.

Der. The prince, my lord! the prince! O, succour him;
He's close encompass'd with a world of odds!
Edw. Then will he win a world of honour too,
If he by valour can redeem him thence:
If not, what remedy? We have more sons
Than one, to comfort our declining age.

Re-enter AUDLEY hastily.

Aud. Renowned Edward, give me leave, I pray,
To lead my soldiers where I may relieve
Your grace's son, in danger to be slain.
The snares of French, like emmets on a bank,
Muster about him; whilst he, lion-like,
Entangled in the net of their assaults,
Franticly rends, and bites the woven toil:
But all in vain, he cannot free himself.
Edw. Audley, content; I will not have a man,
On pain of death, sent forth to succour him:
This is the day ordain'd by destiny
To season his green courage with those thoughts,
That, if he break'th out Nestor's years on earth,
Will make him savour still of this exploit.
Der. Ah! but he shall not live to see those days.
Edw. Why, then his epitaph is lasting praise.
Aud. Yet, good my lord, 'tis too much wilfulness
To let his blood be spilt, that may be sav'd.
Edw. Exclaim no more; for none of you can tell
Whether a borrow'd aid will serve, or no;
Perhaps he is already slain, or ta'en:
And dare a falcon when she's in her flight,
And ever after she'll be haggard-like:
Let Edward be deliver'd by our hands,
And still, in danger, he'll expect the like;
But if himself himself redeem from thence,
He will have vanquish'd, cheerful, death and fear,
And ever after dread their force no more
Than if they were but babes, or captive slaves.
Aud. O, cruel father!—Farewell, Edward, then!
Der. Farewell, sweet prince, the hope of chivalry!
Art. O, would my life might ransom him from death!
Edw. But, soft; methinks I hear [Retreat sounded.
The dismal charge of trumpets' loud retreat:
All are not slain, I hope, that went with him;
Some will return with tidings, good or bad.

Flourish. Enter PRINCE EDWARD in triumph, bearing in his hand his shivered lance: his sword and battered armour borne before him, and the body of the KING OF BOHEMIA, wrapped in the colours: Lords run and embrace him.

Aud. O joyful sight! victorious Edward lives!
Der. Welcome, brave prince!
Edw. Welcome, Plantagenet!"

There is a fine scene where the Prince of Wales is surrounded by the French army before the battle of Poitiers: but it is something too prolonged and rhetorical; it has not the Shaksperian rush which belongs to such a situation. One specimen will suffice, where the prince exhorts his companion in arms, old Audley, to fly from the danger :—

"Now, Audley, sound those silver wings of thine,
And let those milk-white messengers of time
Show thy time's learning in this dangerous time
Thyself art bruis'd and bent with many broils,
And stratagems forepast with iron pens
Are texed in thine honourable face;
Thou art a married man in this distress,
But danger wooes me as a blushing maid;
Teach me an answer to this perilous time.
Aud. To die is all as common as to live,
The one in choice, the other holds in chase;
For, from the instant we begin to live,
We do pursue and hunt the time to die:
First bud we, then we blow, and after seed;
Then presently we fall; and, as a shade
Follows the body, so we follow death.
If then we hunt for death, why do we fear it?
Or, if we fear it, why do we follow it?
If we do fear, with fear we do but aid
The thing we fear to seize on us the sooner:
If we fear not, then no resolved proffer
Can overthrow the limit of our fate:
For, whether ripe, or rotten, drop we shall,
As we do draw the lottery of our doom.
Pri. Ah, good old man, a thousand thousand armours
These words of thine have buckled on my back:

Ah, what an idiot hast thou made of life,
To seek the thing it fears! and how disgrac'd
The imperial victory of murdering death!
Since all the lives his conquering arrows strike
Seek him, and he not them, to shame his glory.
I will not give a penny for a life,
Nor half a halfpenny to shun grim death;
Since for to live is but to seek to die,
And dying but beginning of new life:
Let come the hour when He that rules it will!
To live, or die, I hold indifferent."

The victory of Poitiers ensues; but, previous to the knowledge of this triumph, the celebrated scene of the surrender of Calais is thus dramatized:—

"Enter from the town, Six Citizens in their shirts, and bare-footed, with halters about their necks.

Cit. Mercy, king Edward! mercy, gracious lord!
Edw. Contemptuous villains! call ye now for truce?
Mine ears are stopp'd against your bootless cries:—
Sound drums; [alarum] draw, threat'ning swords!
1 C. Ah, noble prince,
Take pity on this town, and hear us, mighty king!
We claim the promise that your highness made;
The two days' respite is not yet expir'd,
And we are come, with willingness, to bear
What torturing death, or punishment, you please,
So that the trembling multitude be sav'd.
Edw. My promise? well, I do confess as much:
But I require the chiefest citizens,
And men of most account, that should submit;
You, peradventure, are but servile grooms,
Or some felonious robbers on the sea,
Whom, apprehended, law would execute,
Albeit severity lay dead in us:
No, no, ye cannot overreach us thus.
2 C. The sun, dread lord, that in the western fall
Beholds us now low brought through misery,
Did in the orient purple of the morn
Salute our coming forth, when we were known;
Or may our portion be with damned fiends.
Edw. If it be so, then let our covenant stand;
We take possession of the town in peace:
But, for yourselves, look you for no remorse;
But, as imperial justice hath decreed,
Your bodies shall be dragg'd about these walls,
And after feel the stroke of quartering steel:
This is your doom:—Go, soldiers, see it done.
Que. Ah, be more mild unto these yielding men!
It is a glorious thing to 'stablish peace;
And kings approach the nearest unto God,
By giving life and safety unto men:
As thou intendest to be king of France,
So let her people live to call thee king:
For what the sword cuts down, or fire hath spoil'd,
Is held in reputation none of ours.
Edw. Although experience teach us this is true,
That peaceful quietness brings most delight
When most of all abuses are controll'd,
Yet, insomuch it shall be known, that we
As well can master our affections,
As conquer other by the dint of sword.
Philippe, prevail; we yield to thy request;
These men shall live to boast of clemency,—
And, tyranny, strike terror to thyself."

This assuredly we think is not what Shakspere would have made of such a situation. How altogether inferior is it in the higher requisites of poetry to the exquisite narrative of Froissart!—

"Then the barriers were opened, the burgesses went towards the king, and the captain entered again into the town. When Sir Walter presented these burgesses to the king, they kneeled down, and held up their hands and said, 'Gentle king, behold here we six, who were burgesses of Calais and great merchants; we have brought the keys of the town and of the castle, and we submit ourselves clearly into your will and pleasure, to save the residue of the people of Calais, who have suffered great pain. Sir, we beseech your grace to have mercy and pity on us through your high noblesse.' Then all the earls and barons and other that were there wept for pity. The king looked felly on them, for greatly he hated the people of Calais for the great damage and displeasures they had done him on the sea before. Then he commanded their heads to be stricken off. Then every man required the king for mercy, but he would hear no man in that behalf. Then Sir Walter of Manny said, 'Ah, noble king, for God's sake refrain your courage; ye have the name of sovereign noblesse; therefore, now do not a thing that should blemish your renown, nor to give cause to some to speak of you villainously; every man will say it is a great cruelty to put to death such honest persons, who by their own wills put themselves into your grace to save their company.' Then the king wryed away from him and commanded to send for the hangman, and said, 'They of Calais had caused many of my men to be slain, wherefore these shall die in like wise.' Then the queen, being great with child, kneeled down, and, sore weeping, said, 'Ah, gentle sir, sith I passed the sea in great peril I have desired nothing of you; therefore, now I humbly require you, in the honour of the son of the Virgin Mary, and for the love of me, that ye will take mercy of these six burgesses.' The king beheld the queen, and stood still in a study a space, and then said, 'Ah, dame, I would ye had been as now in some other place; ye make such request to me that I cannot deny you, wherefore I give them to you to do your pleasure with them.' Then the queen caused them to be brought into her chamber, and made the halters to be taken from their necks, and caused them to be new clothed, and gave them their dinner at their leisure, and then she gave each of them six nobles, and made them to be brought out of the host in safeguard, and set at their liberty."

The concluding scene, in which the Prince of Wales offers up to the Most High a prayer and thanksgiving, is imbued with a patriotic spirit, but it has not the depth and discrimination of Shakspere's patriotism:—

"Now, father, this petition Edward makes:
To Thee, [kneels] whose grace hath been his strongest shield,
That, as thy pleasure chose me for the man
To be the instrument to show thy power,
So thou wilt grant, that many princes more,
Bred and brought up within that little isle,
May still be famous for like victories!—
And, for my part, the bloody scars I bear,
The weary nights that I have watch'd in field,
The dangerous conflicts I have often had,
The fearful menaces were proffer'd me,
The heat, and cold, and what else might displease,
I wish were now redoubled twenty fold;
So that hereafter ages, when they read
The painful traffic of my tender youth,
Might thereby be inflam'd with such resolve,
As not the territories of France alone,
But likewise Spain, Turkey, and what countries else
That justly would provoke fair England's ire,
Might, at their presence, tremble, and retire!"

We have thus presented to our readers some of the most striking passages of this play. It does not, in our opinion, bear the marks of being a very youthful performance of any man. Its great fault is tameness; the author does not rise with the elevation of his subject. To judge of its inferiority to the matured power of Shakspere, dealing with a somewhat similar theme, it should be compared with the Henry V. The question then should be asked, Will the possible difference of age account for this difference of power? We say possible, for we have no evidence that the "Edward III." was produced earlier than 1595, nor have we evidence that the Henry V., in some shape, was produced later. Ulrici considers that this play forms an essential introduction to that series of plays commencing with Richard II.

If Shakspere wrote that wonderful series upon a plan which necessarily included Henry V., we think he would advisedly have omitted Edward III.; for the main subject of the conquest of France would be included in each play. The concluding observation of Ulrici is—"Truly, if this piece, as the English critics assert, is not Shakspere's own, it is a shame for them that they have done nothing to recover from forgetfulness the name of this second Shakspere, this twin-brother of their great poet." Resting this opinion upon one play only, the expression "twin-brother" has somewhat an unnecessary strength. Admitting, which we do not, that the best scenes of this play display the same poetical power, though somewhat immature, which is found in Shakspere's historical plays, there is one thing wanting to make the writer a "twin-brother," which is found in all those productions. Where is the comedy of "Edward III.?" The heroic of Shakspere's histories might be capable of imitation; but the genius which created Falconbridge, and Cade, and Pistol, and Fluellen (Falstaff is out of the question), could not be approached.

GEORGE-A-GREENE.

"A PLEASANT conceyted Comedie of George-a-Greene, the Pinner of Wakefield," bears upon the title-page that it was acted by the servants of the Earl of Sussex. The earliest edition known is that of 1599. In Henslowe's "Diary" we have an entry of "George-a-Greene" being played by the Earl of Sussex his men on the 28th of December, 1593. This play was formerly ascribed, by Winstanley and others, to John Heywood, the friend of Sir Thomas More. Such an opinion argues the most complete ignorance of the state of our language, and of dramatic poetry especially, at the time when John Heywood wrote. No English critic, we believe, ever thought of assigning the play to Shakspere; but the Germans, finding it reprinted in Dodsley's collection as the work of an unknown author, seize upon it as another production of the great English dramatist, rescued by them from the wallet of Time. Tieck translates it. He remarks—"It is traditionally said that the 'Pinner of Wakefield' is a play of Shakspere's. I must acknowledge for myself that any tradition would have more weight than the narrow-minded criticisms of the English editors, which, proceeding wholly on false premises, naturally take little notice of such productions. If it is by Shakspere it must be an early work." We know not where the tradition is to be found, and, indeed, the play is now pretty confidently assigned to Robert Greene. It is included in Mr. Dyce's edition of his works, for a reason thus given:—

"It has been thought right to include in the present collection 'George-a-Greene, the Pinner of Wakefield,' 1599, in consequence of the following MS. notes having been found on the title-page of a copy of that piece, which was formerly in the library of Mr. Rhodes:

'Written by . a minister who acted the piners pt in it himself. Teste, W. Shakespeare.

'Ed. Juby * saith it was made by Ro. Greene.'

These two memoranda are by different persons, and in handwriting of about the time when the play was printed. The probability of Greene's having been 'a minister' we have noticed before."

This evidence is not absolutely decisive as to the authorship of the play, but, conjoined with the internal evidence, we have no doubt that Mr. Dyce exercised a sound discretion in printing it in his collection of Greene's dramatic works.

Tieck, having translated the play in his "Alt Englisches Theater, oder Supplemente zum Shakspere," as one of "those dramas which Shakspere produced in his youth, and which Englishmen, through a misjudging criticism and a tenderness for his fame (as they thought), have refused to recognise," is of course decided in his opinion as to the merits of this performance. He says—"It seems to me a model of a popular comedy (Volks-comödie—people's comedy); the cheerful joyousness, that never overflows, but keeps within the bounds of moderation, and does us good; the merry clown; the agreeable character of the principal person, whose official zeal and heroic courage are so nicely softened down with a few milder features; and the genius which plays through the whole;—everything is such that Shakspere himself would have no cause to be ashamed of this, though we cannot show any other piece of his worked out in a similar style." The criticism of Horn is more temperate. George-a-Greene, the hero of the play, "equals, in his invincibility, waggery, and love of jesting, our Siegfried in the 'Niebelungen.'" He acknowledges, however, that there is not a trace of humour in the performance, and that there is a great want of dramatic art in the construction. To say nothing of the feebleness of the blank verse, we believe that the entire absence of wit or humour in the comic parts, and the inartificial management of the incidents, decide at once that the play could not belong to Shakspere at any period of his life. There is a rude activity in the working out of the plot, but no real creative power. That any high poetical power was not in the writer does not require, we think, a very laboured proof. One example of this deficiency of the higher quality may suffice. There is an incident in the play founded on the fine old ballad of "The Jolly Pinder of Wakefield," which undoubtedly was in existence before 1593, and, compared with that ballad, the tameness of the dramatic version of it appears to us very striking. We will give a passage from each:—

BALLAD OF THE JOLLY PINDER.

"In Wakefield there lives a jolly pinder,
In Wakefield all on a green,
In Wakefield all on a green:
There is neither knight nor squire, said the pinder,
Nor baron that is so bold,
Nor baron that is so bold,
Dare make a trespass to the town of Wakefield,
But his pledge goes to the pinfold, &c.

All this beheard three witty young men,
'Twas Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John;
With that they espied the jolly pinder,
As he sat under a thorn.

Now turn again, turn again, said the pinder,
For a wrong way you have gone;
For you have forsaken the king's highway,
And made a path over the corn.

O that were a shame, said jolly Robin,
We being three, and thou but one;
The pinder leapt back then thirty good foot,
'Twas thirty good foot and one.

He leaned his back fast unto a thorn,
And his foot against a stone,
And there he fought a long summer's day,
A summer's day so long,
Till that their swords on their broad bucklers
Were broke fast into their hands.

Hold thy hand, hold thy hand, said bold Robin Hood,
And my merry men, every one;
For this is one of the best pinders
That ever I tried with sword.

And wilt thou forsake thy pinder's craft,
And live in the green-wood with me?
'At Michaelmas next my cov'nant comes out,
When every man gathers his fee.'"

GEORGE-A-GREENE.

"Geo. Back again, you foolish travellers,
For you are wrong, and may not wend this way.
Rob. That were great shame. Now, by my soul, proud sir,

* An actor who wrote a play in conjunction with Rowley.

We be three tall yeomen, and thou art but one.
Come, we will forward despite of him.
Geo. Leap the ditch, or I will make you skip.
What, cannot the highway serve your turn,
But must you make a path over the corn?
Rob. Why, art thou mad? dar'st thou encounter three?
We are no babes, man, look upon our limbs.
Geo. Sirrah,
The biggest limbs have not the stoutest hearts.
Were ye as good as Robin Hood, and his three merry men,
I'll drive you back the same way that ye came.
Be ye men, ye scorn to encounter me all at once;
But be ye cowards, set upon me all three,
And try the pinner what he dares perform.
Scar. Were thou as high in deeds
As thou art haughty in words,
Thou well might'st be a champion for a king:
But empty vessels have the loudest sounds,
And cowards prattle more than men of worth.
Geo. Sirrah, darest thou try me?
Scar. Ay, sirrah, that I dare.
[They fight, and GEORGE-A-GREENE beats him.
Much. How now? what, art thou down?
Come, sir, I am next.
[They fight, and GEORGE-A-GREENE beats him.
Rob. Come, sirrah, now to me: spare me not,
For I'll not spare thee.
Geo. Make no doubt, I will be as liberal to thee.
[They fight; ROBIN HOOD stays.
Rob. Stay, George, for here I do protest,
Thou art the stoutest champion that ever I
Laid hands upon.
Geo. Soft you, sir; by your leave, you lie,
You never yet laid hands on me.
Rob. George, wilt thou forsake Wakefield,
And go with me?
Two liveries will I give thee every year,
And forty crowns shall be thy fee."

The principal action of "George-a-Greene" is founded upon an old romance which describes an insurrection of nobles in the time of Richard I., which was resisted and finally put down by the Pinder of Wakefield; that is, the keeper of the pinfolds. The best scene in the play is where Sir Nicholas Mannering comes before the justices of Wakefield to demand provisions for the rebels. George-a-Greene undertakes to speak for his townsmen; and, on being asked "Who art thou?" thus replies:—

"Why, I am George-a-Greene,
True liegeman to my king,
Who scorns that men of such esteem as these
Should brook the braves of any traitorous squire.
You of the bench, and you, my fellow-friends,
Neighbours, we subjects all unto the king;
We are English born, and therefore Edward's friends,
Vow'd unto him even in our mother's womb,
Our minds to God, our hearts unto our king;
Our wealth, our homage, and our carcases
Be all king Edward's. Then, sirrah, we have Nothing left for traitors but our swords,
Whetted to bathe them in your bloods, and die
Against you, before we send you any victuals."

The Richard of the romance has become, it is thus seen, the Edward of the play. The writer has puzzled Mr. Grose, the antiquarian, with this change, the good man wisely arguing that Robin Hood and Edward IV., whom he supposes to be king of the piece, did not live at the same time. He concludes, therefore, that the drama has slight foundation in history. We quite agree with him. In the scene before the justices George-a-Greene makes Mannering eat his commission, seals and all. This is an incident of the old romance, which was transferred, as our readers will recollect, to the play of "Sir John Oldcastle;" and was a practical joke which Robert Greene himself played off upon an apparitor. After this feat the Pinder of Wakefield goes forward with his club chivalry. As the crowning work of some stratagems he kills one of the rebel lords, and takes the other two prisoners; he fights, as we have seen, with Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John; and he soundly beats the shoemakers of Bradford, in the presence of King Edward and the King of Scots, who are come in disguise to see the rustic hero. George-a-Greene of course arrives at riches and honour; and as, during the play, we have occasional glimpses of his being in love, the king rewards him also with his mistress:—

"Edw. George-a-Greene, give me thy hand;
There is none in England that shall do thee wrong.
Even from my court I came to see thyself;
And now I see that fame speaks nought but truth.
Geo. I humbly thank your royal majesty.
That which I did against the earl of Kendal,
It was but a subject's duty to his sovereign,
And therefore little merits such good words.
Edw. But ere I go, I'll grace thee with good deeds.
Say what king Edward may perform,
And thou shalt have it, being in England's bounds.
Geo. I have a lovely leman,
As bright of blee as is the silver moon,
And old Grime, her father, will not let her match
With me, because I am a pinner,
Although I love her, and she me, dearly.
Edw. Where is she?
Geo. At home at my poor house,
And vows never to marry unless her father
Give consent, which is my great grief, my lord.
Edw. If this be all, I will despatch it straight;
I'll send for Grime, and force him give his grant!
He will not deny king Edward such a suit."

We have no doubt that this little play was amusing enough to an uncritical audience; but to seek for the hand of Shakspere amongst these coarse and feeble scenes is as fruitless as to look for Claudes and Correggios amongst the alehouse signs.

FAIR EM.

In the "Theatrum Poetarum" of Edward Phillips we have the following notice of the authorship of this play:—"Robert Green, one of the Pastoral Sonnet-makers of Qu. Elizabeth's time, contemporary with Dr. Lodge, with whom he was associated in the writing of several comedies, namely, 'The Laws of Nature,' 'Lady Alimony,' 'Liberality and Prodigality,' and a masque called 'Luminalia;' besides which he wrote alone the comedies of 'Friar Bacon' and 'Fair Emme.'" Langbaine contradicts this statement, as far as regards Greene's association with Lodge; but he admits the assertion regarding "Friar Bacon," and says nothing of "Fair Em." Mr. Dyce thinks that it is possible that Greene might have written "Fair Em." "A Pleasante Comedie of Faire Em, the Miller's Daughter of Manchester, with the Love of William the Conqueror. As it was sundry times publiquely acted in the Honourable Citie of London, by the right Honourable the Lord Strange his seruants," was published in 1631. Possibly this may not have been the first edition, and the play may be as early as the time of Greene; but of this we are greatly inclined to doubt. The versification does not often exhibit that antiquated structure which we occasionally meet with in Greene and his contemporaries. The dramatic movement is more lively and skilful than we find in the conduct of Greene's pieces. The plot, which is a double one, has much of the complexity of Beaumont and Fletcher. We have little doubt that the play belongs to a period subsequent to the death of Shakspere. Upon what principle the German critics have assigned it to Shakspere we are at a loss to say. Tieck, who has translated the "Fair Em," calls it a youthful production of our poet, and Horn agrees with him. Ulrici dissents from this opinion. The play is lively enough, with a good deal of talent. Although a legend of love stories, it has the remarkable merit, for that period, of being conducted without offence to propriety. What comedy there is in it is altogether vapid and ridiculous. Let us hastily run through the plot, giving a few extracts.

The story carries us back to the days of William the Conqueror. There is a tilting-match, in which the king is victor; but he has on a sudden "cast away his staff," and left the field. Lubeck, a Danish knight, has borne upon his shield the picture of a beautiful woman; and the king has fallen in love with the picture, which is a portrait of Blanche, a daughter of the King of Denmark. The amorous monarch immediately delegates his authority to certain lords, and sets out for the Danish court, to behold and obtain the object of his passion. The miller and his daughter, Fair Em, now present themselves. He is no real miller, but Sir Thomas Goddard. Weighty circumstances compelled him to this course of life; and his daughter submits to her change of fortune with a becoming resignation. The father thus counsels the maiden:—

> Miller. Thanks, my dear daughter; these, thy pleasant words,
> Transfer my soul into a second heaven
> And in thy settled mind, my joys consist,
> My state reviv'd, and I in former plight.
> Although our outward pomp be thus abas'd,
> And thrall'd to drudging, stayless of the world,
> Let us retain those honourable minds
> That lately govern'd our superior state,
> Wherein true gentry is the only mean
> That makes us differ from true millers born:
> Though we expect no knightly delicates,
> Nor thirst in soul for former sovereignty,
> Yet may our minds as highly scorn to stoop
> To base desire of vulgar's worldliness,
> As if we were in our precedent way.
> And, lovely daughter, since thy youthful years
> Must needs admit as young affections,
> And that sweet love unpartial perceives
> Her dainty subjects through every part,
> In chief receive these lessons from my lips,
> The true discoverers of a virgin's due;
> Now requisite, now that I know thy mind
> Something inclin'd to favour Manvile's suit,
> A gentleman, thy lover in protest:
> And that thou may'st not be by love deceiv'd,
> But try his meaning, fit for thy desert,
> In pursuit of all amorous desires,
> Regard thine honour. Let not vehement sighs,
> Nor earnest vows importing fervent love,
> Render thee subject to the wrath of lust;
> For that, transform'd to former sweet delight,
> Will bring thy body and thy soul to shame.
> Chaste thoughts and modest conversations,
> Of proof to keep out all enchanting vows,
> Vain sighs, forced tears, and pitiful aspects,
> Are they that make deformed ladies fair;
> Poor wretch! and such enticing men
> That seek of all but only present grace,
> Shall, in perseverance of a virgin's due,
> Prefer the most refusers to the choice
> Of such a soul as yielded what they thought."

Our readers will scarcely think that the commonplaces of this very long speech savour of Shakspere. The miller's man now presents himself as a suitor to fair Em; and having learnt the necessity for concealment, she rather evades than repulses his advances. But she is not long destined to equivocate with the clown. Manvile, Valingford, and Mountney, all lords of William's court, come separately, disguised, to woo the maiden. Manvile's suit, as we have learnt by her father's speech, was somewhat favoured. He overhears the two other lords communicating their love for the same object, and agreeing to unite their efforts to obtain her, leaving the rest to chance. Manvile, of course, becomes jealous; and he thus reproaches his mistress:—

> "Two gentlemen attending on duke William,
> Mountney and Valingford as I heard them nam'd,
> Ofttimes resort to see and to be seen,
> Walking the street fast by thy father's door,
> Whose glancing eyes up to windows cast
> Give testes of their masters' amorous heart.
> This, Em, is noted, and too much talk'd on;
> Some see it without mistrust of ill,
> Others there are that, scorning, grin thereat,
> And saith, there goes the milier's daughter's wooers.
> Ah me! whom chiefly and most of all it doth concern,
> To spend my time in grief, and vex my soul,
> To think my love should be rewarded thus,
> And for thy sake abhor all womankind."

The lover departs in a rage, and Mountney comes to prefer his suit. The fair Em resolves to vindicate her constancy; and to this admirer, therefore, she feigns deafness. In a subsequent scene Valingford approaches her; and to him, upon the same principle of stratagem, she affects to be blind, "by mishap on a sudden." Mountney and

Valingford meet and quarrel; but their mutual accusations bring about the conviction that the lady has deceived them both. The action advances by Manvile complaining to the miller of his daughter's conduct; and Mountney and Valingford appear on the scene to demand of the miller how it is that Em has become blind and deaf. The miller replies—

"Marry, God forbid! I have sent for her. Indeed, she hath kept her chamber this three days. It were no little grief to me if it should be so.

Man. This is God's judgment for her treachery."

Em is led on by the miller's man, whom she has persuaded to assist her in maintaining the pretences she has assumed. Her stratagem is successfully supported, to the grief of her father, and the conviction of the rest. Manvile exclaims—

"Both blind and deaf! then she is no wife for me;
And glad I am so good occasion is happen'd."

Mountney also gives her up with considerable indifference; but Valingford resolves to stay and prosecute his love, still suspecting there may be a "feigned invention." Manvile seeks another love—Elner, the daughter of a wealthy merchant; but Valingford declares that no misfortune can alter the constancy of his affection; and Em, learning the faithlessness of her former lover, discloses the conduct she has pursued.

During the progress of this, the main portion of the plot, we have a succession of scenes alternating with those in which the miller's daughter is concerned, exhibiting the history of the love adventures of the disguised king at the Danish court. William is disappointed in the reality of the lady, with whose picture he became enamoured. But he as readily falls in love with Mariana, a Swedish captive, the chosen fair of the Marquis of Lubeck. Blanche, however, the Danish king's daughter, falls in love with William; and we have then a pretty succession of jealousies and quarrels, which terminate in William carrying off the princess to England, masked, and disguised as Mariana. Upon their arrival in England, the king and his fair companion fall into the hands of some barons who are in arms. The mistakes are of course cleared up; and the King of Denmark offers his daughter to the King of England, who has resumed his state. He has to decide upon the claims of the fair Em, and of Elner, to the hand of Manvile. The scene on this occasion is perhaps the best passage in the play:—

"Em. I lov'd this Manvile so much, that still methought,
When he was absent, did present to me
The form and feature of that countenance
Which I did shrine an idol in my heart:
And never could I see a man, methought,
That equall'd Manvile in my partial eye.
Nor was there any love between us lost,
But that I held the same in high regard,
Until repair of some unto our house,
Of whom my Manvile grew thus jealous,
As if he took exception I vouchsaf'd
To hear them speak, or saw them when they came;
On which I straight took order with myself,
To avoid the scruple of his conscience,
By counterfeiting that I neither saw nor heard:
Any ways to rid my hands of them.
All this I did to keep my Manvile's love,
Which he unkindly seeks for to reward.
Man. And did my Em, to keep her faith with me,
Dissemble that she neither heard nor saw?
Pardon me, sweet Em, for I am only thine.
Em. Lay off thy hands, disloyal as thou art!
Nor shalt thou have possession of my love,
That canst so finely shift thy matters off.
Put case I had been blind, and could not see,
As oftentimes such visitation falls,
That pleaseth God, which all things doth dispose;
Shouldst thou forsake me in regard of that?
I tell thee, Manvile, hadst thou been blind,
Or deaf, or dumb, or else what impediments
Might befall to man, Em would have lov'd, and kept,
And honour'd thee; yea, begg'd, if wealth had fail'd,
For thy relief.
Man. Forgive me, sweet Em.
Em. I do forgive thee with my heart,
And will forget thee too, if case I can;
But never speak to me, nor seem to know me.
Man. Then farewell frost:
Well fare a wench that will:
Now, Elner, I am thy own, my girl.
Elner. Mine, Manvile? thou never shalt be mine;
I so detest thy villainy,
That whilst I live I will abhor thy company."

This issue of the contest produces a singular effect upon the King of England. He determines that "women are not general evils;" and so he accepts the hand of Blanche. Valingford is united to the fair Em, and Sir Thomas Goddard is restored to his rank and fortune.

It is exceedingly difficult for us to understand how a man of great ability, like Tieck, perfectly conversant with the dramatic art and style of Shakspere—sometimes going far beyond Shakspere's own countrymen in sound as well as elevated criticism—should fancy that a play like this could have been written by our great poet. Whatever merit it possesses, and it is certainly in some respects a lively and spirited performance, arises out of the circumstance that the author had good models before him. But we look in vain for all that sets Shakspere so high above his contemporaries; his wit, his humour his poetry, his philosophy, his intimate knowledge of man, his exquisite method. Scenes such as these pass before our eyes like the tricks of the fantoccini. There is nothing of vitality in them; they "Come like shadows, so depart."

MUCEDORUS.

THE first known edition of this "comedy" is that of 1598:—"A most pleasant Comedy of Mucedorus, the Kings Sonne of Valentia, and Amadine the Kings Daughter of Arragon. With the merry Conceits of Mouse." There are repeated reprints of this play up to 1639, denoting an extraordinary popularity; and, what is more remarkable, the piece is revived after the Restoration, and the edition before us of 1668 is "Amplifyed with new Additions, as it was Acted before the King's Majestie at White-hall on Shrove-sunday night." A more rude, inartificial, unpoetical, and altogether effete performance the English drama cannot, we think, exhibit. Popularity, however, is not obtained by mere accident. Mediocrity and positive stupidity will often command it; but in the case of "Mucedorus" it appears to us that the piece was expressly adapted for a very common audience. Whilst the highest and the best educated of the land were captivated by Shakspere and Jonson, there must necessarily have been rude farces and melodramas for theatres lower than the Globe and Blackfriars. There were strolling companies, too, who in many cases were unable to procure copies of the best plays, and who would justly think that other wares than poetry and philosophy would be demanded in the barn of the alehouse or in the hall of the squire. We have a curious example of the long-during popularity of "Mucedorus." After the suppression of the theatres in 1647, clandestine performances in London were put down by provost-marshals and troopers. But in the country the wandering players sometimes dared to lift their heads; and as late as 1653 a company went about playing "Mucedorus." They had acted in several villages in the neighbourhood of Oxford, but, upon the occasion of its performance at Witney, an accident occurred, by which several persons lost their lives, and others were wounded. A pamphlet immediately appeared from the pen of an Oxford divine, showing that this calamity was an example of the Divine vengeance against stage performances. But "Mucedorus," as we have seen, had a higher popularity in reserve. It was revived for the entertainment of the King's Majesty, the tastes of whose court were pretty much upon a level with those of the Witney peasants and blanket-makers; and, what is not the least wonderful part in the history of this comedy, "very delectable and full of conceited mirth," some one rises up and says it is written by Shakspere. The tradition is handed down in old catalogues; and the Germans apply themselves seriously to discuss the point, whether a play which is too silly to be ascribed to any known writer of the time, might not be a youthful performance of the great poet himself.

To attempt any detailed analysis of the story of "Mucedorus" would be a waste of time. Mucedorus, the Prince of Valentia, has heard of the beauty of Amadine, the Princess of Aragon, and he resolves to go in disguise to her father's court. The shepherd-prince, upon his arrival in Aragon, immediately saves the princess from the attack of a bear, who has rushed upon her, when in company with Segasto, a sort of lover, who takes to his heels in a very ungallant style. The lady, of course, falls in love with the shepherd, and the shepherd is very soon turned out of the court for his own presumptuous love. But the princess resolves to run away with him, and they appoint to meet and live in the forest, unscared by hunger or by bears. A wild man of the woods, however, seizes upon the lady; but Mucedorus, disguised as a hermit, very opportunely kills the wild man. The King of Valentia comes to look after his son. The lovers return to court. The gentleman who ran away from the bear withdraws his claims to the princess, and the whole terminates with great felicity. We can easily understand how such a story would be popular, and how any surplusage of wit or poetry would have lessened its popularity. The serious adventures are relieved by the constant presence of a clown, who, to do him justice, is never guilty of the slightest cleverness, but produces a laugh by his exquisite stupidity. One specimen of the poetry will suffice. Mucedorus, clothed as a hermit, meets Bremo, the wild man of the woods, who has got Amadine safe in his grasp; and, justly considering that a wild man of the woods must be an excellent judge of rhetoric, and liable to be moved to pity by the force of fine words, thus addresses him:—

> "In time of yore, when men like brutish beasts
> Did lead their lives in loathsome cells and woods,
> And wholly gave themselves to witless will,
> A rude unruly root, then man to man became
> A present prey; then might prevail'd,
> The weakest men went to walls:
> Right was unknown, for wrong was all in all.
> As men thus liv'd in their great courage,
> Behold, one Orpheus came (as poets tell),
> And them from rudeness unto reason brought,
> Who, led by reason, soon forsook the woods;
> Instead of caves, they built them castles strong,
> Cities and towns were founded by them then
> Glad were they they found such ease;
> And in the end they grew to perfect amity.
> Weighing their former wickedness,
> They term'd the time wherein they lived then
> A golden age, a good golden age.
> Now, Bremo (for so I heard thee call'd),
> If men which liv'd tofore, as thou dost now,
> Wild in woods, addicted all to spoil,
> Returned were by worthy Orpheus' means,
> Let me (like Orpheus) cause thee to return
> From murther, bloodshed, and such-like cruelties
> What, should we fight before we have a cause?
> No, let's live, and love together faithfully:
> I'll fight for thee."

There are one or two passages in "Mucedorus" which indicate some poetical power, but they are inappropriate to the situation and character. Whenever we compare Shakspere with other writers, the difference which perhaps, upon the whole, makes the most abiding impression is the marvellous superiority of his judgment.

THE BIRTH OF MERLIN.

THE first known edition of this play was published in 1662, under the following title:—"The Birth of Merlin: or, The Childe hath found his Father: as it hath been several times Acted with great Applause. Written by William Shakespear and William Rowley." Of this very doubtful external evidence two of the modern German critics have applied themselves to prove the correctness. Horn has written a criticism of fourteen pages upon "The Birth of Merlin," which he decides to be chiefly Shakspere's, possessing a high degree of poetical merit, with much deep-thoughted characterization. Tieck has no doubt of the extent of the assistance that Shakspere gave in producing this play:—"This piece is a new proof of the extraordinary riches of the period, in which such a work was unnoticed among the mass of intellectual and characteristic dramas. The modern English, whose weak side is poetical criticism, have left it almost to accident what shall be again revived; and we seldom see, since Dodsley, who proceeded somewhat more carefully, any reason why one piece is selected and others rejected." He adds, "None of Rowley's other works are equal to this. What part has Shakspere in it?—has he taken a part?—what induced him to do so?—can only be imperfectly answered, and by supposition. Why should not Shakspere for once have written for another theatre than his own? Why should he not, when the custom was so common, have written in companionship with another though less powerful poet?" Ulrici takes a different, and, as we think, a much juster view. The play, he holds, must have been produced late in Shakspere's life. If he had written in it at all, he would have put out his matured strength. All the essentials—plan, composition, and character—belong to Rowley. Peculiarities of style and remarkable turns of thought are not sufficient to furnish evidence of authorship, for they are common to other contemporary poets. It is not very easy to trace the exact progress of William Rowley. He was an actor in the company of which Shakspere was a proprietor. We find his name in a document of 1616, and again in 1625. The same bookseller that published "The Birth of Merlin" associated his name with other writers of eminence besides Shakspere. He is spoken of by Langbaine as "an author that flourished in the reign of King Charles I.;" but there is no doubt that he may be considered as a successful writer in the middle period of James I. It is impossible to think that he could have been associated with Shakspere in writing a play until after Shakspere had quitted the stage; and we must, therefore, bear in mind that Rowley's supposed associate was at that period the author of Othello and Lear, of Twelfth Night and As You Like It.

A few years after the accession of James I. the fondness of the court for theatrical entertainments, and the sumptuousness of the masques that were got up for its especial delight, appear to have produced a natural influence upon the public stage, in rendering some of the pieces performed more dependent upon scenery and dresses and processions than in the later years of Elizabeth. "The Birth of Merlin" belongs to the class of show-plays; and the elaboration of that portion which is addressed merely to the eye has imparted a character to those scenes in which the imagination is addressed through the dialogue. There is an essential want of refinement as well as of intellectual force, partly arising from this false principle of art, which addresses itself mainly to the senses. We have a succession of incidents without any unity of action. The human interest and the supernatural are jumbled together, so as to render each equally unreal. Extravagance is taken for force, and what is merely hideous is offered to us as sublime. The story, of course, belongs to the fabulous history of Britain. Its movements are so complicated that we should despair of tracing it through its scenes of war and love, and devilry and witchcraft. The Britons are invaded by the Saxons, but the British army is miraculously preserved by the power of Anselm, a hermit. The Saxons sue for peace to Aurelius, the King of Britain, but the monarch suddenly falls in love with Artesia, the daughter of the Saxon general, and marries her, against the wishes of all his court. Uter Pendragon, the brother of Aurelius, has been unaccountably missing, and he, it seems, had fallen in love with the same lady during his rambles. Upon the return of Prince Uter to his brother's court, the queen endeavours to obtain from him a declaration of unlawful attachment. Her object is to sow disunion amongst the Britons, to promote the ascendancy of the Saxons. She is successful, and the weak Aurelius joins his invaders. During the progress of these events we have love episodes with the daughters of Donobert, a British nobleman. The character of Modestia, one of the daughters, who is resolved to dedicate herself to a religious life, is drawn with considerable skill, and she expresses herself with a quiet strength which contrasts advantageously with the turmoil around her:—

"Noble and virtuous! could I dream of marriage,
I should affect thee, Edwin. Oh, my soul,
Here's something tells me that these best of creatures,
These models of the world, weak man and woman,
Should have their souls, their making, life, and being,
To some more excellent use if what the sense
Calls pleasure were our ends, we might justly blame
Great Nature's wisdom, who rear'd a building
Of so much art and beauty, to entertain
A guest so far incertain, so imperfect:
If only speech distinguish us from beasts,
Who know no inequality of birth and place,
But still to fly from goodness; oh! how base
Were life at such a rate. No, no! that Power
That gave to man his being, speech, and wisdom,
Gave it for thankfulness. To Him alone
That made me thus, may I thence truly know,
I'll pay to Him, not man, the love I owe."

The supernatural part of this play is altogether overdone, exhibiting no higher skill in the management than a modern fairy spectacle for the Easter holidays. Before Merlin appears we have a Saxon magician produced who can raise the dead, and he makes Hector and Achilles come into the Saxon court very much after the fashion of the apparition of Marshal Saxe in the great gallery at Dresden. The stage direction for this extraordinary exhibition is as follows:—

> Enter PROXIMUS, bringing in HECTOR, attired and armed after the Trojan manner, with target, sword, and battle-axe; a trumpet before him, and a Spirit in flame-colours with a torch at the other door, ACHILLES, with his spear and falchion, a trumpet, and a Spirit in black before him; trumpets sound alarm, and they manage their weapons to begin the fight, and after some charges the Hermit steps between them, at which, seeming amazed, the Spirits tremble."

That the poet who produced the caldron of the weird sisters should be supposed to have a hand in this child's play is little less than miraculous itself. But we soon cease to take an interest in mere Britons and Saxons, for a clown and his sister arrive at court, seeking a father for a child which the lady is about to present to the world. After some mummery which is meant for comedy, we have the following stage direction:—"Enter the Devil in man's habit richly attired, his feet and his head horrid;" and the young lady from the country immediately recognises the treacherous father. After another episode with Modestia and Edwin, thunder and lightning announce something terrible; the birth of Merlin has taken place, and his father the Devil properly introduces him reading a book and foretelling his own future celebrity. We have now prophecy upon prophecy, and fight upon fight, blazing stars, dragons, and Merlin expounding all amidst the din. We learn that Artesia has poisoned her husband, and that Uter has become King Pendragon. The Saxons are defeated by the new king, by whom Artesia, as a murderess, is buried alive. In the meantime the Devil has again been making some proposals to Merlin's mother, which end greatly to his discomfiture, for his powerful son shuts him up in a rock. Merlin then, addressing his mother, proposes to her to retire to a solitude he has prepared for her, "to weep away the flesh you have offended with;" "and when you die," he proceeds—

* See Wraxall's Memoirs.

> "I will erect a monument
> Upon the verdant plains of Salisbury,—
> No king shall have so high a sepulchre,—
> With pendulous stones, that I will hang by art,
> Where neither lime nor mortar shall be used,—
> A dark enigma to the memory,
> For none shall have the power to number them;
> A place that I will hallow for your rest;
> Where no night-hag shall walk, nor were-wolf tread,
> Where Merlin's mother shall be sepulchred."

As this is a satisfactory account of the origin of Stonehenge, we might here conclude; but there is a little more to tell of this marvellous play. Uter, the triumphant king, desires Merlin to > "show the full event,

> That shall both end our reign and chronicle."

Merlin thus consents:—

> "What Heaven decrees, fate hath no power to alter:
> The Saxons, sir, will keep the ground they have,
> And by supplying numbers still increase,
> Till Britain be no more: So please your grace,
> I will, in visible apparitions,
> Present you prophecies, which shall concern
> Succeeding princes, which my art shall raise,
> Till men shall call these times the latter days. [MERLIN strikes. Hautboys. Enter a King in armour, his shield quartered with thirteen crowns. At the other end enter divers Princes, who present their crowns to him at his feet, and do him homage; then enters Death, and strikes him; he, growing sick, crowns CONSTANTINE."

This Merlin explains to represent Uter's son, Arthur, and his successor; at which the prince, much gratified, asserts—

> "All future times shall still record this story,
> Of Merlin's learned worth, and Arthur's glory."

THE MERRY DEVIL OF EDMONTON.

We close our imperfect record of the plays ascribed to Shakspere with the performance of a true poet, whoever he may be.

"The Merry Deuill of Edmonton: As it hath been sundry times acted by his Maiesties Servants, at the Globe on the Banke-side," was originally published in 1608. On the 22nd of October, 1607, there is an entry of the title of the play on the Stationers' registers; but on the 5th of April, 1608, we have a more precise entry of "A book called the Lyfe and Deathe of the Merry Devill of Edmonton, with the pleasant pranks of Smugge the Smyth, Sir John, and mine Hoste of the George, about their stealing of venison. By T. B." This was, in all probability, a Second Part. Steevens says—"The initial letters at the end of this entry sufficiently free Shakspeare from the charge of having been its author." It has been supposed that these initials represent Tony, or Antony, Brewer, a dramatic writer of the time of James I., highly lauded by some of his contemporaries. Kirkman, a bookseller, first affixed Shakspere's name to it in his catalogue. In "The Companion to the Playhouse," published in 1764, it is stated, upon the authority of a laborious antiquary, Thomas Coxeter, who died in 1747, to have been written by Michael Drayton; and in some posthumous papers of another diligent inquirer into literary history, Oldys, the same assertion is advanced. Charles Lamb, who speaks of this play with a warmth of admiration which is probably carried a little too far—and which, indeed, may in some degree be attributed to his familiarity with the quiet rural scenery of Enfield, Waltham, Cheshunt, and Edmonton, in which places the story is laid—says, 'I wish it could be ascertained that Michael Drayton was the author of this piece: it would add a worthy appendage to the renown of that panegyrist of my native earth; who has gone over her soil (in his Polyolbion) with the fidelity of a herald, and the painful love of a son; who has not left a rivulet (so narrow that it may be stepped over) without honourable mention; and has animated hills and streams with life and passion above the dreams of old mythology."* "The Merry Devil" was undoubtedly a play of great popularity. We find, from the account books of the Revels at Court, that it was acted before the king in the same year, 1618, with Twelfth Night and A Winter's Tale. In 1616, Ben Jonson, in his Prologue to "The Devil is an Ass," thus addresses his audience:—

> "If you'll come
> To see new plays, pray you afford us room,
> And show this but the same face you have done
> Your dear delight, The Devil of Edmonton."

Its popularity seems to have lasted much longer: for it is mentioned by Edmund Gayton, in 1654, in his "Notes on Don Quixote."† The belief that the play was Shakspere's has never taken any root in England. Some of the German critics, however, adopt it as his without any hesitation. Tieck has translated it; and he says that it undoubtedly is by Shakspere, and must have been written about 1600. It has much of the tone, he thinks, of The Merry Wives of Windsor, and 'mine host of the George' and 'mine host of the Garter' are alike. It is surprising that Tieck does not see that the one character is, in a great degree, an imitation of the other. Shakspere, in the abundance of his riches, is not a poet who repeats himself. Horn declares that Shakspere's authorship of "The Merry Devil" is incontestable. Ulrici admits the bare possibility of its being a very youthful work of Shakspere's. The great merit, on the contrary, of the best scenes of this play consists in their perfect finish. There is nothing careless about them; nothing that betrays the very young adventurer; the writer is a master of his art to the extent of his power. But that is not Shakspere's power.

Fuller, in his "Worthies," thus records the merits of Peter Fabel, the hero of this play:—"I shall probably offend the gravity of some to insert, and certainly curiosity of others to omit, him. Some make him a friar, others a lay gentleman, all a conceited person, who, with his merry devices, deceived the Devil, who by grace may be resisted, not deceived by wit. If a grave bishop in his sermon, speaking of Brute's coming into this land, said it was but a bruit, I hope I may say without offence that this Fabel was but a fable, supposed to live in the reign of King Henry the Sixth." His fame is more confidingly recorded in the Prologue to "The Merry Devil:"—

> "'Tis Peter Fabel, a renowned scholar,
> Whose fame hath still been hitherto forgot
> By all the writers of this latter age.
> In Middlesex his birth and his abode,
> Not full seven miles from this great famous city;
> That, for his fame in sleights and magic won,
> Was call'd the Merry Fiend of Edmonton.
> If any here make doubt of such a name,
> In Edmonton, yet fresh unto this day,
> Fix'd in the wall of that old ancient church,
> His monument remaineth to be seen:
> His memory yet in the mouths of men,
> That whilst he liv'd he could deceive the devil."

The Prologue goes on to suppose him at Cambridge at the hour when the term of his compact with the fiend is run out. We are not here to look for the terrible solemnity of the similar scene in Marlowe's "Faustus;" but, nevertheless, that before us is written with great poetical power. Coreb, the spirit, thus addresses the magician:—

> "Coreb. Why, scholar, this is the hour my date expires;
> I must depart, and come to claim my due.
> Fabel. Hah! what is thy due?
> Coreb. Fabel, thyself.
> Fabel. O let not darkness hear thee speak that word,
> Lest that with force it hurry hence amain,
> And leave the world to look upon my woe:
> Yet overwhelm me with this globe of earth,
> And let a little sparrow with her bill
> Take but so much as she can bear away,
> That, every day thus losing of my load,
> I may again, in time, yet hope to rise."

While the fiend sits down in the necromantic chair Fabel thus soliloquises:—

> "Fabel. O that this soul, that cost so dear a price
> As the dear precious blood of her Redeemer,
> Inspir'd with knowledge, should by that alone,
> Which makes a man so mean unto the powers,
> Ev'n lead him down into the depth of hell;
> When men in their own praise strive to know more
> Than man should know!

* Specimens of English Dramatic Poets.

† Collier's Annals of the Stage, vol. iii. p. 417.

For this alone God cast the angels down.
The infinity of arts is like a sea,
Into which when man will take in hand to sail
Farther than reason (which should be his pilot)
Hath skill to guide him, losing once his compass,
He falleth to such deep and dangerous whirlpools,
As he doth lose the very sight of heaven:
The more he strives to come to quiet harbour,
The farther still he finds himself from land.
Man, striving still to find the depth of evil,
Seeking to be a God, becomes a devil."

But the magician has tricked the fiend; the chair holds him fast, and the condition of release is a respite for seven years. The supernatural part of the play may be said here to end; for although throughout the latter scenes there are some odd mistakes produced by the devices of Fabel, they are such as might have been accomplished by human agency, and, in fact, appear to have been so accomplished. Tieck observes, "It is quite in Shakspere's manner that the magical part becomes nearly superfluous." This, as it appears to us, is not in Shakspere's manner. In Hamlet, in Macbeth, in the Midsummer Night's Dream, in The Tempest, the magical or supernatural part is so intimately allied with the whole action that it impels the entire movement of the piece. Shakspere knew too well the soundness of the Horatian maxim—

"Nec Deus intersit nisi dignus vindice nodus"—

to produce a ghost, a witch, or a fairy without necessity. However, the magical part here finishes; and we are introduced to the society of no equivocal mortal, the host of the George, at Waltham. Sir Arthur Clare, his wife Dorcas, his daughter Millisent, and his son Harry, arrive at the inn, where the host says, "Knights and lords have been drunk in my house, I thank the destinies." This company have arrived at the George to meet Sir Richard Mounchensey and his son Raymond, to whom Millisent is betrothed; but old Clare informs his wife that he is resolved to break off the match, to send his daughter for a year to a nunnery, and then to bestow her upon the son of Sir Ralph Jerningham. Old Mounchensey, it seems, has fallen upon evil days:—

"Clare. For look you, wife, the riotous old knight
Hath overrun his annual revenue,
In keeping jolly Christmas all the year:
The nostrils of his chimneys are still stuff'd
With smoke more chargeable than cane-tobacco;
His hawks devour his fattest hogs, whilst simple,
His leanest curs eat his hounds' carrion.
Besides, I heard of late his younger brother,
A Turkey-merchant, hath sure suck'd the knight,
By means of some great losses on the sea;
That (you conceive me) before God, all's nought,
His seat is weak; thus, each thing rightly scann'd,
You'll see a flight, wife, shortly of his land."

Fabel, the kind magician, who has been the tutor to Raymond, arrives at the same time with the Mounchensey party. He knows the plots against his young friend, and he is determined to circumvent them:—

"Raymond Mounchensey, boy, have thou and I
Thus long at Cambridge read the liberal arts,
The metaphysics, magic, and those parts
Of the most secret deep philosophy?
Have I so many melancholy nights
Watch'd on the top of Peter-house highest tower,
And come we back unto our native home,
For want of skill to lose the wench thou lov'st?
We'll first hang Envil* in such rings of mist
As never rose from any dampish fen;
I'll make the brined sea to rise at Ware,
And drown the marshes unto Stratford-bridge
I'll drive the deer from Waltham in their walks,
And scatter them like sheep, in every field.
We may perhaps be cross'd; but if we be,
He shall cross the devil that but crosses me."

Harry Clare, Ralph Jerningham, and Raymond Mounchensey are strict friends; and there is something exceedingly delightful in the manner in which Raymond throws away all suspicion, and the others resolve to stand by their friend, whatever be the intrigues of their parents:—

"Fern. Raymond Mounchensey, now I touch thy grief
With the true feeling of a zealous friend.
And as for fair and beauteous Millisent,
With my vain breath I will not seek to slubber
Her angel-like perfections: but thou know'st
That Essex hath the saint that I adore:
Where'er didst meet me, that we two were jovial,
But like a wag thou hast not laugh'd at me,
And with regardless jesting mock'd my love?
How many a sad and weary summer's night
My sighs have drunk the dew from off the earth,
And I have taught the nightingale to wake,
And from the meadows sprung the early lark
An hour before she should have list to sing:
I have loaded the poor minutes with my moans,
That I have made the heavy slow-pac'd hours
To hang like heavy clogs upon the day.
But, dear Mounchensey, had not my affection
Seiz'd on the beauty of another dame,
Before I'd wrong the chase, and leave the love
Of one so worthy, and so true a friend,
I will abjure both beauty and her sight,
And will in love become a counterfeit.
Moun. Dear Jerningham, thou hast begot my life,
And from the mouth of hell, where now I sate,
I feel my spirit rebound against the stars;
Thou hast conquer'd me, dear friend, in my free soul,
There time, nor death, can by their power control.
Fabel. Frank Jerningham, thou art a gallant boy;
And were he not my pupil, I would say,
He were as fine a metall'd gentleman,
Of as free spirit, and of as fine a temper,
As is in England; and he is a man
That very richly may deserve thy love.
But, noble Clare, this while of our discourse,
What may Mounchensey's honour to thyself
Exact upon the measure of thy grace?
Young Clare. Raymond Mounchensey, I would have thee know,
He does not breathe this air, whose love I cherish,
And whose soul I love, more than Mounchensey's:
Nor ever in my life did see the man
Whom, for his wit and many virtuous parts,
I think more worthy of my sister's love.
But since the matter grows unto this pass,
I must not seem to cross my father's will;
But when thou list to visit her by night,
My horse is saddled, and the stable door
Stands ready for thee; use them at thy pleasure.
In honest marriage wed her frankly, boy,
And if thou gett'st her, lad, God give thee joy.
Moun. Then, care away! let fate my fall pretend,
Back'd with the favours of so true a friend."

Charles Lamb, who gives the whole of this scene in his "Specimens," speaks of it rapturously:—"This scene has much of Shakspeare's manner in the sweetness and good-naturedness of it. It seems written to make the reader happy. Few of our dramatists or novelists have attended enough to this. They torture and wound us abundantly. They are economists only in delight. Nothing can be finer, more gentlemanlike, and noble, than the conversation and compliments of these young men. How delicious is Raymond Mounchensey's forgetting, in his fears, that Jerningham has a 'saint in Essex;' and how sweetly his friend reminds him!"

* Envil—Enfield.

The ancient plotters, Clare and Jerningham, are drawn as very politic but not overwise fathers. There is, however, very little that is harsh or revolting in their natures. They put out their feelers of worldly cunning timidly, and they draw them in with considerable apprehension when they see danger and difficulty before them. All this is in harmony with the thorough good-humour of the whole drama. The only person who is angry is old Mounchensey :—

"Clare. I do not hold thy offer competent;
Nor do I like the assurance of thy land,
The title is so brangled with thy debts.
Old Moun. Too good for thee: and, knight, thou know'st it well,
I fawn'd not on thee for thy goods, not I,
'Twas thine own motion: that thy wife doth know.
Lady Clare. Husband, it was so; he lies not in that.
Clare. Hold thy chat, quean.
Old Moun. To which I harken'd willingly, and the rather,
Because I was persuaded it proceeded
From love thou bor'st to me and to my boy;
And gav'st him free access unto thy house,
Where he hath not behav'd him to thy child
But as befits a gentleman to do;
Nor is my poor distressed state so low
That I'll shut up my doors, I warrant thee.
Clare. Let it suffice, Mounchensey, I mislike it;
Nor think thy son a match fit for my child.
Old Moun. I tell thee, Clare, his blood is good and clear
As the best drop that panteth in thy veins:
But for this maid, thy fair and virtuous child,
She is no more disparag'd by thy baseness,
Than the most orient and the precious jewel,
Which still retains his lustre and his beauty,
Although a slave were owner of the same."

For his "frantic and untamed passion" Fabel reproves him. The comic scenes which now occur are exceedingly lively. If the wit is not of the highest order, there is real fun and very little coarseness. We are thrown into the midst of a jolly set, stealers of venison in Enfield Chase, of whom the leader is Sir John, the priest of Enfield. His humour consists of applying a somewhat pious sentence upon every occasion—"Hem, grass and hay—we are all mortal—let 's live till we die, and be merry, and there's an end." Mine host of the George is an associate of this goodly fraternity. The comedy is not overloaded, and is very judiciously brought in to the relief of the main action. We have next the introduction of Millisent to the Prioress of Cheston (Cheshunt) :—

"Lady Clare. Madam,
The love unto this holy sisterhood,
And our confirm'd opinion of your zeal,
Hath truly won us to bestow our child
Rather on this than any neighbouring cell.
Prioress. Jesus' daughter! Mary's child!
Holy matron! woman mild!
For thee a mass shall still be said,
Every sister drop a bead;
And those again succeeding them
For you shall sing a requiem.
Sir Arthur. Madam, for a twelvemonth's approbation,
We mean to make this trial of our child.
Your care, and our dear blessing, in mean time,
We pray may prosper this intended work.
Prioress. May your happy soul be blithe,
That so truly pay your tithe:
He that many children gave,
'Tis fit that he one child should have.
Then, fair virgin, hear my spell,
For I must your duty tell.
Millisent. Good men and true, stand together,
And hear your charge.
Prioress. First, a mornings take your book,
The glass wherein yourself must look;
Your young thoughts, so proud and jolly,
Must be turn'd to motions holy;
For your busk attires, and toys,
Have your thoughts on heavenly joys:
And for all your follies past,
You must do penance, pray, and fast.
You must read the morning mass,
You must creep unto the cross,
Put cold ashes on your head,
Have a hair-cloth for your bed.
Bind your beads, and tell your needs,
Your holy aves, and your creeds:
Holy maid, this must be done,
If you mean to live a nun."

The sweetness of some of these lines argues the practised poet. Indeed, the whole play is remarkable for its elegance rather than its force; and it appears to us exactly such a performance as was within the range of Drayton's powers. The device of Fabel proceeds, in the appearance of Raymond Mounchensey disguised as a friar. Sir Arthur Clare has disclosed to him all his projects. The "holy young novice" proceeds to the priory as a visitor sent from Waltham House to ascertain whether Millisent is about to take the veil "from conscience and devotion." The device succeeds, and the lovers are left together :—

"Moun. Life of my soul! bright angel!
Millisent. What means the friar?
Moun. O Millisent! 'tis I.
Millisent. My heart misgives me; I should know that voice.
You? who are you? the holy Virgin bless me!
Tell me your name; you shall ere you confess me.
Moun. Mounchensey, thy true friend.
Millisent. My Raymond! my dear heart!
Sweet life, give leave to my distracted soul
To wake a little from this swoon of joy.
By what means cam'st thou to assume this shape?
Moun. By means of Peter Fabel, my kind tutor,
Who, in the habit of friar Hildersham,
Frank Jerningham's old friend and confessor,
Plotted by Frank, by Fabel, and myself,
And so deliver'd to Sir Arthur Clare,
Who brought me here unto the abbey-gate,
To be his nun-made daughter's visitor.
Millisent. You are all sweet traitors to my poor old father.
O my dear life, I was a dream'd to-night,
That, as I was praying in my psalter,
There came a spirit unto me, as I kneel'd,
And by his strong persuasions tempted me
To leave this nunnery: and methought
He came in the most glorious angel shape
That mortal eye did ever look upon.
Ha! thou art sure that spirit, for there's no form
Is in mine eyes so glorious as thine own.
Moun. O thou idolatress, that dost this worship
To him whose likeness is but praise of thee!
Thou bright unsetting star, which, through this veil,
For very envy mak'st the sun look pale.
Millisent. Well, visitor, lest that perhaps my mother
Should think the friar too strict in his decrees,
I this confess to my sweet ghostly father;
If chaste pure love be sin, I must confess,
I have offended three years now with thee.
Moun. But do you yet repent you of the same.
Millisent. I' faith I cannot.
Moun. Nor will I absolve thee
Of that sweet sin, though it be venial:
Yet have the penance of a thousand kisses;
And I enjoin you to this pilgrimage :—
That in the evening you bestow yourself
Here in the walk near to the willow-ground,
Where I'll be ready both with men and horse
To wait your coming, and convey you hence
Unto a lodge I have in Enfield Chase:
No more reply if that you yield consent:
I see more eyes upon our stay are bent.
Millisent. Sweet life, farewell! 'tis done, let that suffice;
What my tongue fails, I send thee by mine eyes."

The votaress is carried off by her brother and Jerningham; but in the darkness of the night they lose their way, and encounter the deer-stealers and the keepers. A friendly forester, however, assists them, and they reach Enfield in safety. Not so fortunate are Sir Arthur and Sir Ralph, who are in pursuit of the unwilling nun. They are roughly treated by the keepers, and, after a night of toil, find a resting-place at Waltham. The priest and his companions are terrified by their encounters in the Chase: the lady in white, who has been hiding from them, is taken for a spirit; and the sexton has seen a vision in the church porch. The morning, however, arrives, and we see "Sir Arthur Clare and Sir Ralph Jerningham trussing their points, as newly up." They had made good their retreat, as they fancied, to the inn of mine host of the George, but the merry devil of Edmonton had set the host and the smith to change the sign of the house with that of another inn; and at the real George the lovers were being happily married by the venison-stealing priest, in the company of their faithful friends. Sir Arthur and Sir Ralph are, of course, very angry when the truth is made known; but reconcilement and peace are soon accomplished:—

"Fabel. To end this difference, know, at first I knew
What you intended, ere your love took flight
From old Mounchensey: you, sir Arthur Clare,
Were minded to have married this sweet beauty
To young Frank Jerningham. To cross this match
I used some pretty sleights, but, I protest,
Such as but sat upon the skirts of art;
No conjurations nor such weighty spells
As tie the soul to their performancy;
These, for his love who once was my dear pupil,
Have I effected. Now, methinks, 'tis strange
That you, being old in wisdom, should thus knit
Your forehead on this match; since reason fails,
No law can curb the lover's rash attempt;
Years, in resisting this, are sadly spent:
Smile then upon your daughter and kind son,
And let our toil to future ages prove,
The Devil of Edmonton did good in love.
Sir Arthur. Well, 'tis in vain to cross the providence:
Dear son, I take thee up into my heart;
Rise, daughter, this is a kind father's part.
Host. Why, sir George, send for Spindle's noise presently:
Ha! ere 't be night I'll serve the good duke of Norfolk.
Sir John. Grass and hay, mine host; let 's live till we die, and be merry, and there's an end."

We lament with Tieck that the continuation of the career of "the merry devil" is possibly lost. We imagine that we should have seen him expiating his fault by doing as much good to his fellow-mortals as he could accomplish without the aid of necromancy. Old Weever, in his "Funeral Monuments," has no great faith in his art magic:—"Here (at Edmonton) lieth interred under a seemelie Tome, without Inscription, the Body of Peter Fabell (as the report goes) upon whom this Fable was fathered, that he by his wittie devises beguiled the devill: belike he was some ingenious conceited gentleman, who did use some sleighty trickes for his owne disports. He lived and died in the raigne of Henry the Seventh, saith the booke of his merry pranks."

A BRIEF NOTICE OF OPINION

ON THE

WRITINGS OF SHAKSPERE.

§ I.

THE rank as a writer which Shakspere took amongst his contemporaries is determined by a few decided notices of him. These notices are as ample and as frequent as can be looked for in an age which had no critical records, and when writers, therefore, almost went out of their way to refer to their literary contemporaries, except for purposes of set compliment. We believe that, as early as 1591, Spenser called attention to Shakspere, as

> "the man whom Nature self had made
> To mock herself, and Truth to imitate;"

describing him also as

> "that same gentle spirit, from whose pen
> Large streams of honey and sweet nectar flow."

We know that the envy of Greene, in 1592, pointed at him as "an absolute Johannes factotum, in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country;" and we receive this bitterness of the unfortunate dramatist against his more successful rival as a tribute to his power and his popularity. We consider that the apology of Chettle, who had edited the posthumous work of Greene containing this effusion of spite, was an acknowledgment of the established opinion of Shakspere's excellence as an author:—"Divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art." This was printed in 1592; and yet the man who had won this reluctant testimony to his art, by "his facetious grace in writing," is held by modern authorities to have then been only a botcher of other men's works, as if "facetious grace" were an expression that did not most happily mark the quality by which Shakspere was then most eminently distinguished above all his contemporaries—his comic power—his ability above all others to produce

> "Fine Counterfesance, and unhurtful Sport, > Delight, and Laughter, deck'd in seemly sort."

Passages such as these, however, which it is morally impossible to apply to any other man than Shakspere, are still only indirect evidence of the opinion which was formed of him when he was yet a very young writer. But a few years later we encounter the most direct testimony to his pre-eminence. He it was that in 1598 was assigned his rank, not by any vague and doubtful compliment, not with any ignorance of what had been achieved by other men ancient and modern, but by the learned discrimination of a scholar; and that rank was with Homer, Hesiod, Euripides, Æschylus, Sophocles, Pindar, Phocylides, and Aristophanes amongst the Greeks; Virgil, Ovid, Horace, Silius-Italicus, Lucan, Lucretius, Ausonius, and Claudian amongst the Latins; and Sidney, Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Warner, Marlowe, and Chapman amongst the English. According to the same authority, it was "in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakspeare" that "the sweet witty soul of Ovid lives." This praise was applied to his Venus and Adonis, and other poems. But for his dramas he is raised above every native contemporary and predecessor:—"As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latins; so Shakspeare among the English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage." These are extracts from "The Wits' Commonwealth" of Francis Meres, "Master of Arts of both Universities"—a book largely circulated, and mentioned with applause by contemporary writers. The author delivers not these sentences as his own peculiar opinion; he speaks unhesitatingly, as of a fact admitting no doubt, that Shakspere, among the English, is the most excellent for Comedy and Tragedy. Does any one of the other "excellent" dramatic writers of that day rise up to dispute the assertion, galling, perhaps, to the self-love of some amongst them? Not a voice is heard to tell Francis Meres that he has overstated the public opinion of the supremacy of Shakspere. Thomas Heywood, one of this illustrious band, speaks of Meres as an approved good scholar, and says that his account of authors is learnedly done.* Heywood himself, indeed, in lines written long after Shakspere's death, mentions him in stronger terms of praise than he applies to any of his contemporaries.† Lastly, Meres, after other comparisons of Shakspere with the great writers of antiquity and of his own time, has these words, which nothing but a complete reliance upon the received opinion of his day could have warranted him in applying to any living man:—"As Epius Stolo said that the Muses would speak with Plautus' tongue, if they would speak Latin; so I say that the Muses would speak with Shakspeare's fine filed phrase, if they would speak English."

Of the popularity of Shakspere in his own day the external evidence is more decisive than the testimony of any contemporary writer. He was at one and the same time the favourite of the people and of the Court. There is no record whatever known to exist of the public performances of Shakspere's plays at his own theatres. Had such an account existed of the receipts at the Blackfriars and the Globe as Henslowe kept for his company, we should have known something precise as to the extent of his popularity. But the facts connected with the original publication of Shakspere's plays sufficiently prove how eagerly they were for the most part received by the readers of the drama. From 1597 to 1600 ten of these plays were published from authentic copies, undoubtedly with the consent of the author. The system of publication did not commence before 1597; and, with four exceptions, it was not continued beyond 1600. Of these plays there were published, before the appearance of the collected edition of 1623, four editions of Richard II., six of the First Part of Henry IV., six of Richard III., four of Romeo and Juliet, six of Hamlet, besides repeated editions of the plays which were surreptitiously published—the maimed and imperfect copies described by the editors of the first folio. Of the thirty-six plays contained in the folio of 1623, only one-half was published, whether genuine or piratical, in the author's lifetime; and it is by no means improbable that many of those which were originally published with his concurrence were not permitted to be reprinted, because such publication might be considered injurious to the great theatrical property with which he was connected. But the constant demand for some of the plays is an evidence of their popularity which cannot be mistaken, and is decisive as to the people's admiration of Shakspere. As for that of the Court, the testimony, imperfect as it is, is entirely conclusive:—

> "Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
> To see thee in our waters yet appear,
> And make those flights upon the banks of Thames
> That so did take Eliza and our James,"

* Apology for Actors (1612).

† Hierarchy of Blessed Angels (1635).

is no vague homage from Jonson to the memory of his "beloved friend," but the record of a fact. The Accounts of the Revels at Court, between the years 1588 and 1604, the most interesting period in the career of Shakspere, have not been discovered in the depositories for such papers. We have, indeed, memoranda of payments to her Majesty's players during this period, but nothing definite as to the plays represented. We know not what "so did take Eliza;" but we are left in no doubt as to the attractions for "our James." It appears from the Revels Book that, from Hallowmas-day, 1604, to the following Shrove-Tuesday, there were thirteen plays performed before the King, eight of which were Shakspere's, namely, Othello, The Merry Wives of Windsor, Measure for Measure, The Comedy of Errors, Love's Labour's Lost, Henry V., and The Merchant of Venice twice, that being "again commanded by the King's Majesty." Not one of these, with the possible exception of Measure for Measure, was recommended by its novelty. The series of the same accounts is broken from 1605 to 1611; and then from Hallowmas-night to Shrove-Tuesday, which appears to have been the theatrical season of the Court, six different companies of players contribute to the amusements of Whitehall and Greenwich by the performance of twelve plays. Of five which are performed by the King's players two are by Shakspere—The Tempest and the Winter's Tale. If the records were more perfect, this proof of the admiration of Shakspere in the highest circle would no doubt be more conclusive. As it is, it is sufficient to support this general argument.*

During the life of Shakspere his surpassing popularity appears to have provoked no expression of envy from his contemporaries, no attempt to show that his reputation was built upon an unsolid foundation. Some of the later commentators upon Shakspere, however, took infinite pains to prove that Jonson had ridiculed him during his life, and disparaged him after his death. Every one knows Fuller's delightful picture of the convivial exercises in mental strength between Jonson and Shakspere:—"Many were the wit-combats between Shakspeare and Ben Jonson. I behold them like a Spanish great galleon and an English man-of-war. Master Jonson, like the former, was built far higher in learning, solid but slow in his performances; Shakspeare, like the latter, less in bulk, but lighter in sailing, could turn with all tides, tack about, and take advantage of all winds, by the quickness of his wit and invention." Few would imagine that a passage such as this should have been produced to prove that there was a quarrel between Jonson and Shakspere; that the wit-combats of these intellectual gladiators were the consequence of their habitual enmity. By the same perverse misinterpretation have the commentators sought to prove that when Jonson, in his prologues, put forth his own theory of dramatic art, he meant to satirize the principles upon which Shakspere worked. Nothing, in truth, can be more absurd than the attempts to show, from supposed allusions in Jonson, that he was an habitual detractor of Shakspere. The reader will find these "proofs of Jonson's malignity" brought forward, and dismissed with the contempt that they deserve, in a paper appended to Gifford's "Memoir of Jonson."

The private opinion of Jonson with regard to Shakspere would not be so much a reflection of the popular judgment as that of the critical few who would apply the tests of ancient art, not only to the art of Shakspere, but to the art of that great body of writers who had founded the English drama upon a broader foundation than the precepts of Aristotle. The art of Jonson was opposed to the art of Shakspere. He satisfied the few, but the many rejected him. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that Jonson, in his free conversations with Drummond of Hawthornden, in January, 1619, should say that "Shakspere wanted art." When Jonson said this he was in no laudatory mood. Drummond heads his record of the conversation thus:—"His censure of the English poets was this." Censure is here, of course, put for opinion, although Jonson's opinions are by no means favourable to any one of whom he speaks. And so, during more than two centuries, a mob of critics have caught up the word, and echoed—"Shakspere wanted art." But a cunning interpolator, who knew the temper of the critics, the anonymous editor of Cibber's "Lives of the Poets," took the "heads of a conversation" between Jonson and Drummond, prefixed to Drummond's works in 1711, and bestowed a few finishing touches upon them after his own fashion. And thus, to the great joy of the denouncers of anachronisms and other Shaksperean absurdities, as they are pleased to call them, we have read as follows for upwards of a hundred years:—"He said, Shakespear wanted Art, and sometimes Sense; for, in one of his plays, he brought in a number of men, saying they had suffered shipwrack in Bohemia, where is no sea near by 100 miles." Jonson, indeed, makes the observation upon the shipwreck in Bohemia, but without any comment upon it; and it is impossible to receive his words as any support of the absurd opinion that Shakspere worked without labour and without method. Jonson's own testimony, delivered five years after the conversation with Drummond, offers the most direct evidence against such a construction of his expression:—

> "Yet must I not give Nature all: thy art,
> My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
> For though the poet's matter Nature be,
> His art doth give the fashion: and that he
> Who casts to write a living line must sweat
> (Such as thine are), and strike the second heat
> Upon the Muses' anvil: turn the same
> (And himself with it) that he thinks to frame;
> Or, for the laurel, he may gain a scorn,—
> For a good poet's made as well as born:
> And such wert thou."

There can be no difficulty in understanding Jonson's dispraise of Shakspere, small as it was, when we look at the different characters of the two men. In his "Discoveries," written in his last years, there is the following passage:—

> "I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honour to Shakespeare, that in his writing, whatsoever he penned, he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, Would he had blotted a thousand. Which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance, who chose that circumstance to commend their friend by wherein he most faulted; and to justify mine own candour; for I loved the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was, indeed, honest, and of an open and free nature; had an excellent phantasy, brave notions, and gentle expressions; wherein he flowed with that facility, that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped. Sufflaminandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too."

The players had said, in their preface to the first folio—"His mind and hand went together; and what he thought he uttered with that easiness that we have scarce received from him a blot in his papers." Jonson, no doubt, alludes to this assertion. But we are not, therefore, to understand that Shakspere took no pains in perfecting what, according to the notion of his editors, he delivered with such easiness. The differences between the earlier and the later copies of some of his plays show, as we have repeatedly pointed out, the unremitting care and the exquisite judgment with which he revised his productions. The expression "without a blot" might, nevertheless, be perfectly true; and the fact, no doubt, impressed upon the minds of Heminge and Condell what they were desirous to impress upon others, that Shakspere was a writer of unequalled facility—"as he was a happy imitator of nature, he was a most gentle expresser of it." Jonson received this evidence of facility as a reproof to his own laborious mode of composition. He felt proud, and wisely so, of the commendations of his admirers, that his works cost him much sweat and much oil; and when the players told him that Shakspere never blotted out a line, he had his self-satisfied retort, "Would he had blotted a thousand."

But if Jonson expressed himself a little petulantly, and perhaps inconsiderately, about the boast of the players, surely nothing can be nobler than the hearty tribute which he pays to the memory of Shakspere:—"I loved the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any." Unquestionably this is language which shows that the memory of Shakspere was cherished by others even to idolatry; so that Jonson absolutely adopts an apologetical tone in venturing an observation which can scarcely be considered disparaging—"he flowed with that facility, that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped." It was the facility that excited Jonson's critical comparison of Shakspere with himself; and it was in the same way that, when he wrote his noble verses "To the Memory of my Beloved Mr. William Shakespeare and what he hath left us," he could not avoid drawing a comparison between his own profound scholarship and Shakspere's practical learning. Yet it is perfectly clear that Jonson only meant to say that Shakspere was not an imitator. The same tone of commendation was taken in Shakspere's time by other writers. Digges says that he neither borrows from the Greeks, imitates the Latins, nor translates from vulgar languages. Drayton has these lines:—

* Extracts from the Accounts of the Revels at Court, by Peter Cunningham.

"Shakespeare, thou hadst as smooth a comic vein,
Fitting the sock, and in thy natural brain
As strong conception, and as clear a rage,
As any one that traffick'd with the stage."

To argue from such passages that the writers meant to reproach Shakspere as an ignorant or even as an unlearned man, in the common sense of the word, was an absurdity that was not fully propounded to the world till the discovery of Dr. Farmer, that, because translations existed from Latin, Italian, and French authors in the time of Shakspere, he was incapable of consulting the originals.

The verses of Jonson, prefixed to the folio of 1623, conclude with these remarkable lines:—

"Shine forth, thou star of poets, and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheer, the drooping stage,
Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And despairs day, but for thy volume's light."

From 1616, the year of Shakspere's death, to 1623, the date of the first edition of his collected works, Jonson himself had written nothing for the stage. Beaumont had died the year before Shakspere; but Fletcher alone was sustaining the high reputation which he had won with his accomplished associate. Massinger had been in London from 1606, known certainly to have written in conjunction with other dramatists before the period of Shakspere's death, and, without doubt, assisting to fill the void which he had left, for "The Bondman" appears in the list of the Master of the Revels in 1623. The indefatigable Thomas Heywood was a writer for the stage from the commencement of the seventeenth century to the suppression of the theatres. Webster was a poet of Shakspere's own theatre, immediately after his death, and a leading character in "The Duchess of Malfi" was played by Burbage. Rowley produced some of his best works at the same period. Chapman had not ceased to write. Ford was known as a rising poet. Many others were there of genius and learning who at this particular time were struggling for the honours of the drama, and some with great success. And yet Jonson does not hesitate to say that since the death of Shakspere the stage mourns like night.

We have said enough, we think, to show how inconsiderate is the assertion that Shakspere's "pre-eminence was not acknowledged by his contemporaries." Should this fact, however, be still thought to be a matter of opinion, we will place the opinion of a real critic, not the less sound for being an enthusiastic admirer, against this echo of the babble of the cold and arrogant school of criticism that still has its disciples and its imitators:—"Clothed in radiant armour, and authorized by titles sure and manifold as a poet, Shakspeare came forward to demand the throne of fame, as the dramatic poet of England. His excellences compelled even his contemporaries to seat him on that throne, although there were giants in those days contending for the same honour."

§ II.

"Shakespear was not so much esteemed, even during his life, as we commonly suppose; and after his retirement from the stage he was all but forgotten."† So we read in an authority too mighty to enter upon evidence. The oblivion after his retirement and death is the true pendant to the neglect during his life. When did the oblivion begin? It could scarcely have existed when, in 1623, an expensive folio volume of many hundred pages was published, without regard to the risk of such an undertaking; and it was a risk indeed, if the author had been neglected and was forgotten. But the editors of the volume do not ask timidly for support of these neglected and forgotten works. They say to the reader, "Though you be a magistrate of wit, and sit on the stage at Blackfriars or the Cockpit, to arraign plays daily, know these plays have had their trial already, and stood out all appeals." Did the oblivion continue when, in 1632, a second edition of this large work was brought out? There was one man, certainly—a young and ardent scholar—who was not amongst the oblivious. John Milton was twenty-four years of age when these verses were published:—

"An Epitaph on the admirable Dramatic Poet, W. Shakespeare.

What need my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones
The labour of an age in piled stones,
Or that his hallow'd relics should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'st thou such dull witness of thy name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyself a lasting monument.
For whilst to th' shame of slow-endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving,
And so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die."

The author of these lines could not have known the works of the "admirable dramatic poet" while that poet was in life; but sixteen years after his death he was the dear son of memory, the great heir of fame; his bones were honoured, his relics were hallowed, his works were a lasting monument, his book was priceless, his lines were oracular, Delphic. Is this oblivion? But it may be said that Milton was a young enthusiast, one who saw farther than the million; that the public opinion of a writer (and we are not talking of his positive excellence, apart from opinion) must be sought for in the voice of the people, or at any rate in that of the leaders of the people. How are we to arrive at the knowledge of this expression? We can only know incidentally that an author was a favourite either of a king or of a cobbler. We know that Shakspere was the favourite of a king in these times of his oblivion. A distinguished writer says—"The Prince of Wales had learned to appreciate Shakspeare, not originally from reading him, but from witnessing the court representations of his plays at Whitehall. Afterwards we know that he made Shakspeare his closet companion, for he was reproached with doing so by Milton."‡ The concluding words are founded upon a mistake of a passage in Milton. Charles is not reproached with reading Shakspere. The great republican does not condemn the king for having made the dramatic poet the closet companion of his solitudes; but, speaking of the dramatic poet as a well-known author with whom the king was familiar, he cites out of him a passage to show that pious words might be found in the mouth of a tyrant. The passage alluded to not only proves the familiarity of Charles with Shakspere, but it evidences also Milton's familiarity; and, what is of more importance, the familiarity even of those stern and ascetic men to whom Milton was peculiarly addressing his opinions.

A few years before—that is, in 1645—Milton had offered another testimony to Shakspere in his "L'Allegro," then published:—

"Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespear, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild."

Milton was not afraid to publish these lines, even after the suppression of the theatres by his own political party. No one can doubt of his affection for Shakspere, and of his courage in avowing that affection, living as he was in the heat of party opinion which was hostile to all such excellence. We have simply "Jonson's learned sock;" but the "native wood-notes wild" of Shakspere are associated with the most endearing expressions. He is "sweetest Shakespear," he is "Fancy's child." And in his later years, after a life of contention and heavy responsibility, Milton still clung to his early delights.

In 1633 was published the celebrated "Histrio-Mastix, the Player's Scourge," of William Prynne. In his Address to the Christian Reader he has a distinct allusion to the popularity of Shakspere's collected works:—"Some play-books since I first undertook this subject are grown from quarto into folio, which yet bear so good a price and sale that, I cannot but with grief relate it, they are now new printed in far better paper than most octavo or quarto bibles, which hardly find such vent as they." The two folio editions of Shakspere are the only play-books grown from quarto to folio to which the zealous Puritan can allude, with the exception of Jonson's own edition of his plays, completed in 1631; those of Beaumont and Fletcher were not collected till 1647. The very fact of the publication of the first two folios of Shakspere is a proof of his popularity with general readers. They were not exclusively the studies of the scholar, such as Milton, or of the play-haunters whom Prynne denounces. A letter in the Bodleian Library, written by a Dr. James, about this period, testifies how generally they were read:—"A young gentle lady of your acquaintance, having read the works of Shakspere, made me this question," &c.* When the London theatres were provided with novelties in such abundance that, according to Prynne, "one study was scarce able to hold the new play-books," the plays of Shakspere were still in such demand for the purposes of the stage, that his successors in the theatrical property of the Globe and Blackfriars found it their interest to preserve the monopoly of their performance (which they had so long enjoyed) by a handsome gratuity to the Master of the Revels. The people clearly had not yet forgotten the "delight and wonder of the stage." Fletcher, Massinger, Shirley, were never favourites; but the people could not forget Shakspere. Neither was he forgotten by the great. In the very year of the publication of Prynne's book, the name of Shakspere was as familiar to the royal circle as in the days of James. From November 17th to January 6th there were eight performances at St. James's and Whitehall, three of which were plays of Shakspere; namely, Richard III., Taming of the Shrew, and Cymbeline; and Sir Henry Herbert records of the last, "well liked by the King." † These office accounts have great lacunæ; but, wherever we find them during the reign of Charles, there we find a record of the admiration of Shakspere.

* Coleridge's Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 53.
† Life of Shakespear in Lardner's Cyclopædia.
‡ Mr. De Quincey's Life of Shakspeare in the Encyclopædia Britannica.

Dryden lived near enough to the times of Charles I. to be good evidence as to the judgment which the higher circles formed of Shakspere. After the Restoration he was intimate with men who had moved in those circles. His "Essay on Dramatic Poesy," which was first printed in 1668, contains the following passage, which has been often cited. Dryden is speaking in his own person, in an imaginary conversation in which the Earl of Dorset bears a part:—

> "To begin, then, with Shakspeare. He was the man who of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. All the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them not laboriously, but luckily: when he describes anything, you more than see it, you feel it too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read Nature; he looked inwards, and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike; were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat, insipid, his comic wit degenerating into clenches, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great when some great occasion is presented to him; no man can say he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets,
>
> Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.
>
> The consideration of this made Mr. Hales of Eton say that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakspeare; and, however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him, Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem: and in the last king's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakspeare far above him."

No testimony can be more positive than this, that the two greatest contemporaries of Shakspere never equalled him in the public estimation during his own time; and that in the succeeding period of Charles I., when the reputation of Jonson was at the highest, Suckling, one of the wittiest and sprightliest of men, and the greater part of the courtiers, set Shakspere far above him. But it was not the gay alone, according to Dryden, who thus reverenced Shakspere. He tells us what was the opinion of "Mr. Hales of Eton," who is known as the "learned" Hales, and the "ever-memorable" Hales.

From the death of Shakspere to the shutting up of the theatres in 1642, a period is embraced of twenty-six years. We have seen the prodigious activity in the production of novelties which existed ten years before the suppression of the theatres. There is too much reason to know that the stage had acquired a more licentious tone after Shakspere's time; and although the Puritans were over-zealous in their indiscriminating violence against all theatrical performances, there is just cause to believe that the senses of the people were stimulated by excitements of plot and character, mingled with profane and licentious language, much more than in the days when Shakspere rested for his attractions on a large exhibition of natural passion and true wit, and when he produced play after play, history, comedy, tragedy—"works truly excellent and capable of enlarging the understanding, warming and purifying the heart, and placing in the centre of the whole being the germs of noble and manlike actions." ‡ The nation was much divided then, as it was long afterwards, between the followers of extreme opinions in morals—the over-strict on one hand, the wholly careless on the other. Prynne tells us that upon his first arrival in London he had "heard and seen in four several plays, to which the pressing importunity of some ill acquaintance drew me whiles I was yet a novice, such wickedness, such lewdness, as then made my penitent heart to loathe, my conscience to abhor, all stage-plays ever since." Prynne came to London after 1620. Fletcher was then the living idol of the theatre; and any one who is acquainted with his plays, full of genius as they are, must admit that Prynne had too much cause for his disgust. The principal demoralising power of the plays of that period consisted in their false representations of human character and actions. Take, for example, "the frightful contrasts," as they have justly been called, between the women of Beaumont and Fletcher and those of Shakspere. He kept at all times in the high-road of life. He "has no innocent adulteries, no interesting incests, no virtuous vice; he never renders that amiable which religion and reason alike teach us to detest, or clothes impurity in the garb of virtue, like Beaumont and Fletcher, the Kotzebues of the day." § But this very truth and purity of Shakspere must have greatly diminished his attractions amidst a crowd who wrote upon opposite principles. Nothing but the unequalled strength of his artistical power could have preserved the unbroken continuance of his supremacy.

And this leads us to the consideration of another cause why the popular admiration of him would have been diminished and interrupted within a very few years after his death, and certainly long before the suppression of the theatres, if his excellences had not so completely triumphed over every impediment to his enduring popular fame. His plays were to a certain extent mixed up with the reputation of the actors by whom they were originally represented. In that curious play "The Return from Parnassus," which was acted by the students in St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1606, and which was clearly written by an academical person inclined to satirize the popular poets and players of his day, we have a testimony to the widespread popularity of two of the original representatives of Shakspere's clowns and heroes—Kempe and Burbage. Kempe died before Shakspere; Burbage within three years after him. Burbage is almost identified with some of Shakspere's greatest characters, and especially with Richard III.; and yet the attraction of the great tragic plays died not with Burbage. Before the suppression of the theatres this actor had his immediate successors; and during the eighteen years in which the theatres were closed the original hits and points of the Richards, and Hamlets, and Macbeths, and Lears were diligently recorded, and immediately after the Restoration actors again arose, ambitious to realise the mighty conceptions of the great master of the dramatic art. During the period when the theatres were shut, the readers of plays would still be numerous, and they probably would be most found among the younger men who had a vivid recollection of the representations of the successors of Shakspere. We can understand what the later taste was by the mode in which Shirley, in his preface to the collected edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, in 1647, speaks of these writers. To the gay cavaliers Beaumont and Fletcher would, perhaps, be more welcome than Shakspere; but assuredly this is not oblivion of the latter.

§ III.

The theatres were thrown open at the Restoration. Malone has ransacked the series of papers connected with the office of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels, who appears to have kept an eye upon theatrical performances, with a view to demanding his fees if he should be supported by the higher powers. From these and other sources, Malone infers that "such was the lamentable taste of those times that the plays of Fletcher, Jonson, and Shirley were much oftener exhibited than those of Shakspeare." The plays acted by this company, as he collects from these documents, were Henry IV., Merry Wives of Windsor, Othello, and Julius Cæsar. At D'Avenant's theatre, which boasted of the great actor Betterton, we learn from Malone that the plays performed were Pericles, Macbeth, The Tempest, Lear, Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, Henry VIII., Twelfth Night, Taming of the Shrew, Henry V. Malone does not do justice to the value of his own documents; for, when he gives us one list, he points out that there are only three plays of Shakspere—"a melancholy proof" of his decline; and at another list he shakes his head, reciting "the following plays of Shakspeare, and these only." Now, it appears to us that if any proof were wanting of the wonderful hold which Shakspere had taken of the English mind, under circumstances the

* See Mr. Halliwell's Character of Falstaff, p. 19.
† See Malone's Historical Account of the English Stage.
‡ Coleridge.
§ Coleridge's Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 79.

most adverse to his continued popularity, it would be found in these imperfect lists, which do not extend over more than eight or nine years. Here are absolutely fourteen plays of Shakspere revived—for that is the phrase—in an age which was prolific of its own authors, adapting themselves to a new school of courtly taste. All the indirect testimony, however meagre, exhibits the enduring popularity of Shakspere. Killigrew's new theatre in Drury Lane is opened with Henry IV. Within a few months after the Restoration, when heading and hanging are going forward, Pepys relates that he went to see Othello. In 1661 he is attracted by Romeo and Juliet, and in 1662 by A Midsummer Night's Dream. Here, upon unquestionable authority, we have a fifteenth play added to the fourteen previously cited. But why need we search amongst such chance entries for evidence of the reputation of Shakspere immediately after the Restoration? Those who talk of Shakspere as emerging some century ago into celebrity after having fallen into neglect for a lengthened period; those who flippantly affirm that "the preface of Pope was the first thing that procured general admiration for his works," are singularly ignorant of the commonest passages of literary history. To the vague and random assertions and assumptions, whether old or new, about the neglect into which Shakspere had fallen as a popular dramatist, may be opposed the most distinct testimony of one especially who was a most accurate and minute chronicler of the public taste. Colley Cibber, who himself became an actor, in 1690, in the one privileged company of London, of which Betterton was the head—a company formed out of the united strength of the two companies which had been established at the Restoration—after describing the state of the stage at the period of the first revival of dramatic performances, says—"What eager appetites from so long a fast must the guests of those times have had to that high and fresh variety of entertainments which Shakespeare had left prepared for them! Never was a stage so provided. A hundred years are wasted, and another silent century well advanced,* and yet what unborn age shall say Shakespeare has his equal? How many shining actors have the warm scenes of his genius given to posterity!" Betterton is idolized as an actor, as much as the old man venerates Shakspere; but whenever Cibber speaks of Betterton's wondrous excellence, it is always in connection with Shakspere. The two companies had an agreement as to their performances:—"All the capital plays of Shakspeare, Fletcher, and Ben Jonson were divided between them by the approbation of the court, and their own alternate choice. So that, when Hart was famous for Othello, Betterton had no less a reputation for Hamlet." Still the test of histrionic excellence was Shakspere. So far from Shakspere being neglected at this period, it is almost evident that the performance of him was overdone; for every one knows that a theatrical audience, even in the largest city, is, in a considerable degree, composed of regular frequenters of the theatre, and that novelty is therefore an indispensable requisite to continued success.

There can be no doubt that most of the original performances of Shakspere, immediately after the Restoration, were given from his unsophisticated text; but D'Avenant, to make head against the success of the King's company, "was forced to add spectacle and music to action." In the alterations of The Tempest, which were made by D'Avenant and Dryden in 1669, and which continued to possess the English stage for nearly a century and a half, it is impossible now not to feel how false was the taste upon which they were built. Dryden says of this play that D'Avenant, to put the last hand to it, "designed the counterpart to Shakespear's plot, namely, that of a man who had never seen a woman; that by this means those two characters of innocence and love might the more illustrate and commend each other." Nothing can be weaker and falser in art than this mere duplication of an idea. But still it was not done irreverently; while the prologue to this altered Tempest is of itself an answer to the asinine assertion that Dryden, in common with the public of his day, was indifferent to the memory of Shakspere.† Of Dryden's personal admiration of Shakspere, of his profound veneration for Shakspere, there is abundant proof. He belonged to the transition period of English poetry. His better judgment was sometimes held in subjection to the false taste that prevailed around him. But for genial hearty admiration of the great master of the romantic drama no one ever went beyond him.

With his repeated acknowledgments of Shakspere's supremacy, it is at first difficult to understand how, in 1665, Dryden should have written, "Others are now generally preferred before him." The age, as he himself tells us, differed in this respect from that of Shakspere's own age, and also from that of Charles I. He says, in the "Essay on Dramatic Poesy," speaking of Beaumont and Fletcher—"Their plays are now the most pleasant and frequent entertainments of the stage, two of theirs being acted through the year for one of Shakespear's or Jonson's." But this is not neglect or oblivion of Shakspere. We learn pretty clearly from Dryden, though he does not care to say so, for that would have been self-condemnation, that a licentiousness which was not found in Shakspere was an agreeable thing to a licentious audience. The highest things in Shakspere can only be fitly appreciated by a people amongst whom there is a high moral tone, capable of understanding and of originating the highest poetical things. With all their faults, the ages of Elizabeth and James possessed this tone; and it is impossible now to estimate how greatly Shakspere contributed to its preservation. But nine years after the Restoration there was no public principle in England, and little private honour. The keenest relish for Shakspere most probably existed out of the Court; and Betterton, in all likelihood, felt the applause of the pit more truly valuable than that of the king's box. One thing is perfectly clear: that when Dryden is addressing the people, he speaks of Shakspere as their especial favourite. He is then "your Shakespear."

"The Grounds of Criticism in Tragedy," which contains a more condensed view of Dryden's opinions of Shakspere than any other of his prefaces, is held by Dr. Johnson to be an answer to the "Tragedies of the last Age considered and examined," by the celebrated Thomas Rymer. Rymer's book was originally published in 1678; and Dryden's Preface to Troilus and Cressida, in which the supposed answer is contained, appeared in the following year. Of Rymer's work we can only say that it is almost painful to consider that an author to whose gigantic labours all students of English history are so deeply indebted should have put forth the most ludicrous criticisms upon Shakspere that exist in the English language. We cannot agree with the author of an able article in the Retrospective Review that "Rymer's attacks on Shakespear are very curious, as evincing how gradual has been the increase of his fame;" that "their whole tone shows that the author was not advancing what he thought the world would regard as paradoxical or strange;" that "he speaks as one with authority to decide." So far from receiving Rymer's frenzied denunciations as an expression of public opinion, we regard them as the idiosyncrasies of a very singular individual, who is furious in the exact proportion that the public opinion differs from his own. Dryden, the great critical authority of his day, before whose opinions all other men bowed, had in 1679 thus spoken of the origin of his great scene between Troilus and Hector:—"The occasion of raising it was hinted to me by Mr. Betterton; the contrivance and working of it was my own. They who think to do me an injury by saying that it is an imitation of the scene betwixt Brutus and Cassius, do me an honour by supposing I could imitate the incomparable Shakespear." Dryden then goes on to contrast the modes in which Euripides, Fletcher, and Shakspere have managed the quarrel of two virtuous men, raised to the extremity of passion, and ending in the renewal of their friendship; and he says—"The particular groundwork which Shakespear has taken is incomparably the best." This decision of Dryden would in those days dispose of the matter as a question of criticism. But out comes Rymer, who, in opposition to Dryden's judgment and Betterton's applause, tells us that Brutus and Cassius here act the part of mimics; are bullies and buffoons; are to exhibit "a trial of skill in huffering and swaggering, like two drunken Hectors for a twopenny reckoning." It may be true that "the author was not advancing what he thought the world would regard as paradoxical and strange;" for it is the commonest of self-delusions, even to the delusions of insanity, to believe that the whole world agrees with the most extravagant mistakes and the strangest paradoxes; and when Rymer, upon his critical throne, "speaks as one with authority to decide," his authority is as powerless as that of the madman in Hogarth, who sits in solitary nakedness upon his straw, with crown on head and sceptre in hand. Rymer is a remarkable example of an able man, in his own province, meddling with that of which he has not the slightest true conception. He is, perhaps, more denuded of the poetical sense than any man who ever attempted to be a critic in poetry: but he had real learning. Shakspere fell into worse hands after Rymer. The "Man Mountain" was fastened to

* Cibber is writing as late as 1740.

† Lardner's Cyclopædia, &c.

the ground by the Lilliputians, and the strings are only just now broken by which he was bound.

The age laid its leaden sceptre upon the smaller minds, and especially upon those who approached Shakspere with a cold and creeping admiration. Of such was Charles Gildon. In 1694 he appeared in the world with "Some Reflections on Mr. Rymer's Short View of Tragedy, and an Attempt at a Vindication of Shakespear." It would, however, be a waste of time to produce the antagonist of Rymer armed cap-à-pie, and set these two doughty combatants in mortal fight with their sacks of sand.

The redoubted John Dennis was another of the antagonists of Rymer. He carried heavier metal than Gildon, and had a just appreciation of Shakspere as far as he went; but he nevertheless belonged to the cuckoo school of "rules of art." It was this eternal gabble about rules of art, this blindness to the truth that the living power of Shakspere had its own organization, that set the metre-mongers of that day upon the task of improving Shakspere. Dennis was himself one of the great improvers. Poetical justice was one of the rules for which they clamoured. Duncan and Banquo ought not to perish in Macbeth, nor Desdemona in Othello, nor Cordelia and her father in Lear, nor Brutus in Julius Cæsar, nor young Hamlet in Hamlet. Dennis argues:—"The good and the bad perishing promiscuously in the best of Shakspere's tragedies, there can be either none or very weak instruction in them." And in this spirit he sets to work to remodel Coriolanus. Dennis is not only a mender of Shakspere's catastrophes, but he applies himself to make Shakspere's verses all smooth and proper, according to the rules of art. One example will be sufficient. He was no common man who attempted to reduce the following lines to classical regularity:—

> "Boy! False hound!
> If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
> That, like an eagle in a dovecote, I
> Flutter'd your Volsces in Corioli.
> Alone I did it—Boy!"

John Dennis has accomplished the feat:—

> This boy, that, like an eagle in a dovecote,
> Flutter'd a thousand Volsces in Corioli,
> And did it without second or acquittance,
> Thus sends their mighty chief to mourn in hell."

The alteration of The Tempest by D'Avenant and Dryden was, as we have mentioned, an attempt to meet the taste of the town by music and spectacle. Shadwell went further, and turned it into a regular opera; and an opera it remained even in Garrick's time, who tried his hand upon the same experiment. Dennis was a reformer both in comedy and tragedy. He metamorphosed The Merry Wives of Windsor into "The Comical Gallant," and prefixed an essay to it on the degeneracy of the taste for poetry. D'Avenant changed Measure for Measure into "The Law against Lovers," which was in principle one of the worst of these alterations; for it was a hash of two plays—of Measure for Measure, and of Much Ado about Nothing. This was indeed to destroy the organic life of the author. But it is one of the manifestations of the vitality of Shakspere that, going about their alterations in the regular way, according to the rules of art, the most stupid and prosaic of his improvers have been unable to deprive the natural man of his vigour, even by their most violent depletions. His robustness was too great even for the poetical doctors to destroy it. Lord Lansdowne actually stripped the flesh off Shylock, but the anatomy walked about vigorously for sixty years, till Macklin put the muscles on again. Colley Cibber turned King John into "Papal Tyranny," and the stage King John was made to denounce the Pope and Guy Faux for a century, till Mr. Macready gave us back again the weak and crafty king in his original truth of character. Nahum Tate deposed the Richard II. of Shakspere wholly and irredeemably, turning him into "The Sicilian Usurper." How Cibber manufactured Richard III. is known to all men. Durfey melted down Cymbeline with no slight portion of alloy. Tate remodelled Lear—and such a Lear! D'Avenant mangled Macbeth; but we can hardly quarrel with him for it, for he gave us the music of Locke in company with his own verses. It has been said, as a proof how little Shakspere was once read, that D'Avenant's alteration is quoted in the Tatler instead of the original. This is the reasoning of Steevens; but he has not the candour to tell us, that in the Tatler, No. 111, there is a quotation from Hamlet, with the following remarks:—"This admirable author, as well as the best and greatest men of all ages and of all nations, seems to have had his mind thoroughly seasoned with religion, as is evident by many passages in his plays, that would not be suffered by a modern audience." The early Essayists offer abundant testimonies of their general admiration of the poet. In No. 68 of the Tatler he is "the great master who ever commands our tears." In No. 160 of the Spectator Shakspere is put amongst the first class of great geniuses, in company with Homer; and this paper contains a remarkable instance of a juster taste than one might expect from the author of "Cato:"—"We are to consider that the rule of observing what the French call the bienséance in an allusion has been found out of later years, and in the colder regions of the world; where we could make some amends for our want of force and spirit, by a scrupulous nicety and exactness in our compositions." In the Spectator, No. 419, Shakspere's delineations of supernatural beings are thus mentioned:—

> "Among the English, Shakspeare has incomparably excelled all others. That noble extravagance of fancy, which he had in so great perfection, thoroughly qualified him to touch this weak superstitious part of his reader's imagination; and made him capable of succeeding where he had nothing to support him besides the strength of his own genius. There is something so wild, and yet so solemn, in the speeches of his ghosts, fairies, witches, and the like imaginary persons, that we cannot forbear thinking them natural, though we have no rule by which to judge of them; and must confess, if there are such beings in the world, it looks highly probable they should talk and act as he has represented them."

We have again an instance of Addison's good taste in his remarks upon the critical notions of poetical justice, which he calls "a ridiculous doctrine in modern criticism." Of the best plays which end unhappily he mentions Othello, with others, and adds, "King Lear is an admirable tragedy of the same kind, as Shakspeare wrote it; but as it is reformed according to the chimerical notion of poetical justice, in my humble opinion it has lost half its beauty." All this exhibits a better taste than we find in Gildon and Dennis; and it certainly is very remarkable that Addison, who in his own tragedy was laboriously correct, as it was called, should have taken no occasion to comment upon the irregularities of Shakspere.

§ IV.

The commencement of the eighteenth century produced the first of the critical editions of Shakspere. In 1709 appeared "Shakespeare's Plays Revised and Corrected, with an Account of his Life and Writings, by N. Rowe." We should mention that the third edition of Shakspere's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies, in folio, appeared in 1664. It has been said that the greater number of the copies of this edition were destroyed in the Fire of London; and a writer whom we must once more quote says—"During a whole century, only four editions of his complete works, and these small, were published; and there would only have been three, but for the destructive Fire of London in 1666." * The destruction by the fire is just as much proved as the smallness of the edition. One of our best bibliographers, Mr. Lowndes, whose "Bibliographer's Manual" is a model of accuracy, doubts the statement of the destruction by the fire, "though it has been frequently repeated." Upon the face of it the statement is improbable. If it were a good speculation to print the book two years before the fire, and the stock so printed had been destroyed in the fire, it would have been an equally good speculation to have reprinted it immediately after the fire; and yet the fourth edition did not appear till 1685. Some of the copies of the third edition bear the date of 1663; and we have no doubt that the book was then generally published; for Pepys, under the date of December 10th, 1663, says:—"To St. Paul's Churchyard, to my bookseller's, and could not tell whether to lay out my money for books of pleasure, as plays, which my nature was most earnest in; but at last, after seeing Chaucer, Dugdale's 'History of Paul's,' Stow's 'London,' Gesner, 'History of Trent,' besides Shakespeare, Jonson, and Beaumont's plays, I at last chose Dr. Fuller's 'Worthies,'" &c. These two folio editions supplied the readers of Shakspere for more than forty years, but we are not hence to conclude that he was neglected. Of Ben Jonson during the same period there was only one edition; of Beaumont and Fletcher only one; of Spenser only one. Rowe's edition of Shakspere, we doubt not, supplied a general want. Its critical merits were but small. The facts of the Life which he prefixes have been sufficiently noticed by us in another place.† The opinions expressed in that Life are few, and are put forth with little pretension. As might be expected, they fully admit the excellence of Shakspere, but they somewhat fall into the besetting sin of attempting to elevate his genius by depreciating his knowledge. Rowe also falls into the notion that Shakspere did not arrive at his perfection by repeated experiment and assiduous labour—a theory which still has its believers; and he then enters into a brief criticism of some of the leading plays. A second edition of his work appeared in 1714.

* Life of Shakespear in Lardner's Cyclopædia.

† See our "William Shakspere: a Biography."

In 1725 Pope produced his edition, magnificent as far as printing went, in six volumes quarto. His Preface is a masterly composition, containing many just views elegantly expressed. The criticism is neither profound nor original; but there is a tone of quiet sense about it which shows that Pope properly appreciated Shakspere's general excellence. He believes, in common with most of his time, that this excellence was attained by intuition; and that the finest results were produced by felicitous accidents. Much of the Preface is occupied with illustrations of Pope's opinion that Shakspere's works have come down to us defaced with innumerable blunders and absurdities which are not to be attributed to the author. We cannot at all yield our consent to this opinion, which goes upon the assumption, that, whenever there is an obscure passage; whenever "mean conceits and ribaldries" are found; whenever "low scenes of mobs, plebeians, and clowns" are very prominent; there the players have been at work; and he thus argues upon the assumption:—

"If we give in to this opinion, how many low and vicious parts and passages might no longer reflect upon this great genius, but appear unworthily charged upon him! And even in those which are really his, how many faults may have been unjustly laid to his account from arbitrary additions, expunctions, transpositions of scenes and lines, confusion of characters and persons, wrong application of speeches, corruptions of innumerable passages by the ignorance and wrong corrections of them again by the impertinence of his first editors! From one or other of these considerations I am verily persuaded that the greatest and the grossest part of what are thought his errors would vanish, and leave his character in a light very different from that disadvantageous one in which it now appears to us."

There is a larger question even than this that Pope propounds. Are these parts and passages low and vicious? Have we these corruptions and imperfections? We believe not. Pope accepted Shakspere in the spirit of his time, and that was not favourable to the proper understanding of him.

In 1726 Lewis Theobald published a tract entitled "Shakespear Restored, or Specimens of Blunders Committed and Unamended in Pope's Edition of this Poet." In Pope's second edition of Shakspere, which appeared in 1728, was inserted this contemptuous notice:—

"Since the publication of our first edition, there having been some attempts upon Shakspeare published by Lewis Theobald (which he would not communicate during the time wherein that edition was preparing for the press, when we, by public advertisements, did request the assistance of all lovers of this author), we have inserted, in this impression, as many of 'em as are judged of any the least advantage to the poet; the whole amounting to about twenty-five words."

In the same year came out "The Dunciad," of which Theobald was the hero:—

> "High on a gorgeous seat that far outshone
> Henley's gilt tub, or Flecknoe's Irish throne,
> Great Tibbald nods."

But Theobald took a just revenge. In 1733 he produced an edition of Shakspere, in seven volumes octavo, which annihilated Pope's quartos and duodecimos. The title-page of Theobald's Shakspere bore that it was "collated with the oldest copies, and corrected, with Notes." Pope's edition was not again reprinted in London; but of Theobald's there have been many subsequent editions, and Steevens asserts that of his first edition thirteen thousand copies were sold. Looking at the advantage which Pope possessed in the pre-eminence of his literary reputation, the preference which was so decidedly given to Theobald's editions is a proof that the public thought for themselves in the matter of Shakspere. Pope was not fitted for the more laborious duties of an editor. He collated, indeed, the early copies, but he set about the emendation of the text in a manner so entirely arbitrary, suppressing passage after passage, upon the principle that the players had been at work here, and a blundering transcriber there, that no reader of Shakspere could rely upon the integrity of Pope's version. Theobald states the contrary mode in which he proceeded:—

"Wherever the author's sense is clear and discoverable (though, perchance, low and trivial), I have not by any innovation tampered with his text, out of an ostentation of endeavouring to make him speak better than the old copies have done.

"Where, through all the former editions, a passage has laboured under flat nonsense and invincible darkness, if, by the addition or alteration of a letter or two, or a transposition in the pointing, I have restored to him both sense and sentiment, such corrections, I am persuaded, will need no indulgence.

"And whenever I have taken a greater latitude and liberty in amending, I have constantly endeavoured to support my corrections and conjectures by parallel passages and authorities from himself, the surest means of expounding any author whatsoever."

Johnson does not exhibit his usual good sense and knowledge of mankind when he attributes Theobald's success to the world's compassion. He calls him weak and ignorant, mean and faithless, petulant and ostentatious; but he affirms that this editor, "by the good luck of having Pope for his enemy, has escaped, and escaped alone, with reputation, from this undertaking. So willingly does the world support those who solicit favour against those who command reverence; and so easily is he praised whom no man can envy." This is mere fine writing. The real secret of Theobald's success is stated by Johnson himself:—"Pope was succeeded by Theobald, a man of narrow comprehension and small acquisitions, with no native and intrinsic splendour of genius, with little of the artificial light of learning, but zealous for minute accuracy, and not negligent in pursuing it. He collated the ancient copies, and rectified many errors. A man so anxiously scrupulous might have been expected to do more, but what little he did was commonly right." It was because Theobald was "anxiously scrupulous," because he did not attempt "to do more" than an editor ought to do, that he had the public support.

There is little in Theobald's Preface to mark the progress of opinion on the writings of Shakspere. Some parts of this Preface are held to have been written by Warburton; but, if so, his arrogance must have been greatly modified by Theobald's judgment. There is not much general remark upon the character of the poet's writings; but what we find is sensibly conceived and not inelegantly expressed.

Undeterred by the failure of Pope in his slashing amputations, Sir Thomas Hanmer appeared, in 1744, with a splendid edition in six volumes quarto, printed at the Oxford University Press, which was intended as a monument to the memory of Shakspere. Capell says truly of Hanmer that he "pursues a track in which it is greatly to be hoped he will never be followed in the publication of any authors whatsoever, for this were in effect to annihilate them if carried a little further." Collins's "Epistle to Sir Thomas Hanmer on his Edition of Shakspeare's Works" is an elegant, though not very vigorous, attempt to express the universal admiration that the people of England felt for the great national poet. The verse-homage to Shakspere after the days of Milton had no very original character. The cuckoo-note with which these warblers generally interspersed their varied lays was the echo of Milton's "wood-notes wild," which they did not perceive had a limited application to some particular play—As You Like It, for instance.

To Hanmer succeeded Warburton, with a new edition of Pope enriched with his own most original notes. If it were not painful to associate Shakspere, the great master of practical wisdom, with a critic who delights in the most extravagant paradoxes, we might prefer the amusement of Warburton's edition to toiling through the heaps of verbal criticism which later years saw heaped up. Warburton, of course, belonged to the school of slashing emendators. There is little in his Preface which possesses any lasting interest, perhaps with the exception of his defence against the charge that editing Shakspere was unsuitable to his clerical profession.

§ V.

In the year 1741 David Garrick at once leaped into eminence as an actor, such as had not been won by any man for half a century. He was the true successor of Betterton, Harris, and Burbage. His principal fame was, however, like theirs, founded upon Shakspere. But it is a mistake to imagine that there had not been a constant succession of actors of Shakspere's great characters from the death of Betterton to Garrick's appearance. His first character in London was Richard III. He made all the great parts of Shakspere familiar to the play-going public for five-and-thirty years. "The Alchymist" and the "Volpone" of Ben Jonson were sometimes played; "The Chances," and "Rule a Wife and Have a Wife," of Beaumont and

Fletcher; but we are told by Davies, in his "Dramatic Miscellanies," that, of their fifty-four plays, only these two preserved their rank on the stage. This is a pretty convincing proof of what the public opinion of Shakspere was in the middle of the last century. It is tolerably evident, too, from the whole tenor of Dr. Johnson's celebrated Prologue, which was spoken by Garrick at the opening of Drury-Lane Theatre in 1747, that of the early dramatists Shakspere reigned upon the stage supreme, if not almost alone. It has been the fault of actors and their flatterers to believe that a dramatic poet is only known to the world through their lips. Garrick is held to have given life to Shakspere: but Charles Lamb has truly described the inscription on Garrick's tomb in Westminster Abbey as "a farrago of false thoughts and nonsense." Up to this time there had been thirteen editions of Shakspere's collected works, nine of which had appeared during the preceding forty years. Of Ben Jonson there had been three editions in the seventeenth century, and one in the eighteenth; of Beaumont and Fletcher two in the seventeenth century, and one in the eighteenth. Yet, absurd and impertinent as it may be to talk of immortal Garrick calling the plays of Shakspere back to day, it cannot be denied that the very power of those plays to create a school of great actors was in itself a cause of their extension amongst readers. The most monstrous alterations, perpetrated with the worst taste, and with the most essential ignorance of Shakspere's art, were still in some sort tributes to his power. The actors sent many to read Shakspere with a true delight; and then it was felt how little he needed the aid of acting, and how much indeed of his highest excellence could only be received into the mind by reverent meditation.

In 1765 appeared, in eight volumes octavo, "The Plays of William Shakspeare, with the Corrections and Illustrations of various Commentators: to which are added Notes by Samuel Johnson." This was the foundation of the variorum editions, the principle of which has been to select from all the commentary, or nearly all, that has been produced, every opinion upon a passage, however conflicting. The respective value of the critics who had preceded him is fully discussed by Johnson in the latter part of his Preface; while the larger portion of it not only to a certain extent represents the tone of opinion in Johnson's age, but is written with so much pomp of diction, with such apparent candour, and with such abundant manifestations of good sense, that, perhaps, more than any other production, it has influenced the public opinion of Shakspere up to this day; but that the influence has been for the most part evil, we have no hesitation in believing.

It was observed by Warburton, in 1747, that the fit criticism for Shakspere was not such "as may be raised mechanically on the rules which Dacier, Rapin, and Bossu have collected from antiquity; and of which such kind of writers as Rymer, Gildon, Dennis, and Oldmixon, have only gathered and chewed the husks." But he goes on to infer that "crude and superficial judgments on books and things" had taken the place of the older mechanical criticism; and that there was "a deluge of the worst sort of critical jargon—that which looks most like sense." The rules of art, as they were called, having been rejected as inapplicable to Shakspere, a swarm of writers arose who considered that he was to be judged without the application of any general principles at all. They held that he wrote without a system; that the absence of this system produced his excellences and his faults; that his absurdities were as striking as his beauties; that he was the most careless and hasty of writers; and that therefore it was the business of all grave and discreet critics to warn the unenlightened multitude against his blunders, his contradictions, his violations of sense and decency. This was the critical school of individual judgment, which has lasted for more than a century amongst us; and which, to our minds, is a far more corrupting thing than the pedantries of all the Gildons and Dennises who have ate paper and drunk ink. Before the publication of Johnson's Preface the impertinences which were poured out by the feeblest minds upon Shakspere's merits and demerits surpass all ordinary belief. Mrs Charlotte Lennox, in whose "Shakespear Illustrated" Johnson himself is reputed to have had some hand, is an average specimen of the insolence of that critical jargon "which looks most like sense." This work was published in 1753. Nothing can be a greater proof of the advance of some critical knowledge amongst us than the shuddering with which all persons of decent information now regard the utter trash of this lady. She was evidently a very small-minded person attempting to form a judgment upon a very high subject. But it was not only the small minds which uttered such babble in the last century.

Samuel Johnson himself, in some of his critical opinions upon individual plays, is not very far above the good lady whom he patronised. The truth is that this learned, sensible, sometimes profound, and really great man, having trampled upon the unities and other tests of poetical merit, the fashion of Dryden's age, but not of his own, is perpetually groping about in the mists of his private judgment, now pursuing a glimmering of light, now involved in outer darkness. This system of criticism upon Shakspere was rotten to the foundation. It was based upon an extension and a misapplication of Ben Jonson's dogmatic assertion—"He wanted art." The art of Shakspere was not revealed to the critics of the last century. Let us hear one to whom the principles of this art were revealed:—

> "It is a painful truth, that not only individuals, but even whole nations, are oftimes so enslaved to the habits of their education and immediate circumstances, as not to judge disinterestedly even on those subjects the very pleasure arising from which consists in its disinterestedness, namely, on subjects of taste and polite literature. Instead of deciding concerning their own modes and customs by any rule of reason, nothing appears rational, becoming, or beautiful to them but what coincides with the peculiarities of their education. In this narrow circle individuals may attain to exquisite discrimination, as the French critics have done in their own literature; but a true critic can no more be such, without placing himself on some central point, from which he may command the whole,—that is, some general rule, which, founded in reason, or the faculties common to all men, must therefore apply to each,—than an astronomer can explain the movements of the solar system without taking his stand in the sun." *

Samuel Johnson proposes to inquire, in the Preface before us, "by what peculiarities of excellence Shakspeare has gained and kept the favour of his countrymen." He answers the question at considerable length by displaying what he holds to be the great peculiarity of his excellence:—"Shakspeare is, above all writers, at least above all modern writers, the poet of nature; the poet that holds up to his readers a faithful mirror of manners and of life. This, therefore, is the praise of Shakspeare—that his drama is the mirror of life." Such is the leading idea of the critic. He sees nothing higher in Shakspere than an exhibition of the real. "He who has mazed his imagination in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him may here be cured of his delirious ecstasies, by reading human sentiments in human language; by scenes from which a hermit may estimate the transactions of the world, and a confessor predict the progress of the passions." When Johnson is unable to trace this actual picture of life in Shakspere, when he perceives any deviations from the regular "transactions of the world," or the due "progress of the passions," then he is bewildered; and he generally ends in blaming his author. The characteristic excellence, he says, of the tragedy of Hamlet is "variety." According to his notion that in all Shakspere's dramas we find "an interchange of seriousness and merriment, by which the mind is softened at one time and exhilarated at another," he holds that "the pretended madness of Hamlet causes much mirth." But in the conduct of the plot the business of life and the course of the passions do not proceed with the regularity which he desires:—"Of the feigned madness of Hamlet there appears no adequate cause. . Hamlet is, through the whole piece, rather an instrument than an agent. After he has by the stratagem of the play convicted the king, he makes no attempt to punish him. The catastrophe is not very happily produced." Where is the mistake in all this? It is in taking a very limited view of the object and scope of Art.

The inconsistencies into which the critic is betrayed show the narrowness and weakness of his foundations. The drama of Shakspere is "a mirror of life;" and yet, according to the critic, it is the great sin of Shakspere that he is perpetually violating "poetical justice." Thus Johnson says in the Preface—"He makes no just distribution of good or evil, nor is always careful to show in the virtuous a disapprobation of the wicked; he carries his persons indifferently through right and wrong, and at the close dismisses them without further care, and leaves their examples to operate by chance." Johnson could not have avoided seeing that, if Shakspere had not carried his persons "indifferently through right and wrong," he would not have exhibited "the real state of sublunary nature." But there was something much higher that Shakspere would not then have done. Had he gone upon the principle of teaching an impracticable, and therefore an unnatural, theory of rewards and punishments in human affairs, if he had not intended that "his precepts and axioms" should "drop casually from him," he would have lost his supereminent power of gradually raising the mind into a comprehension of what belongs to the spiritual part of our nature; of exciting a deep sympathy with strong emotion and lofty passion; of producing an expansion of the heart, which embraces all the manifestations of human goodness and human sorrow; and, what is more, which penetrates into the abysses of guilt and degradation, and shows that there is no true peace, and no real resting-place, for what separates us from our fellow-men and from our God. This is not to be effected by didactic precepts not dropped casually; by false representations of the course of worldly affairs and the workings of man's secret heart. The mind comprehends the whole truth, when it is elevated by the art of the poet into a fit state for its comprehension. The whole moral purpose is then evolved, through a series of deductions in the mind of him who is thus moved. This is the highest logic, because it is based upon the broadest premises. Rymer sneers at Shakspere when he says that the moral of Othello is, that maidens of quality should not run away with blackamoors. The sarcasm only tells upon those who demand any literal moral in a high work of art.

* Coleridge's Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 63.

Because Johnson only saw in Shakspere's dramas "a mirror of life," he prefers his comedy to his tragedy. "His tragedy seems to be skill, his comedy to be instinct." When the poet is working with grander materials than belong to the familiar scenes of life, however natural and universal, the critic does not see that the region of literal things is necessarily abandoned—that skill must be more manifest in its effects. We are then in a world of higher reality than every-day reality. "In tragedy he often writes with great appearance of toil and study what is written at last with little felicity." This now strikes the most superficial student of Shakspere as monstrous. We open "Irene," and we understand it. "He omits opportunities of instructing or delighting which the train of his story seems to force upon him, and apparently rejects those exhibitions which would be more affecting for the sake of those which are more easy." It is a great privilege of the art of Shakspere that in his most tragical scenes he never takes us out of the region of pleasurable emotions. It was his higher art, as compared with the lower art of Otway. He does reject "those exhibitions which would be more affecting," but not "for the sake of those which are more easy." Let any one try which is the more easy, "to touch a soul to the quick, to lay upon fear as much as it can bear, to wean and weary a life till it is ready to drop," as Charles Lamb describes the tragic art of Webster; or to make a Desdemona, amidst the indignities which are heaped upon her, and the fears which subdue her soul, move tranquilly in an atmosphere of poetical beauty, thinking of the maid that > "had a song of—willow;

> An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,
> And she died singing it."

It is a rude conception which Johnson has of Shakspere's art when he says of the play of Hamlet—"The scenes are interchangeably diversified with merriment and solemnity. The pretended madness of Hamlet causes much mirth; the mournful distraction of Ophelia fills the heart with tenderness; and every personage produces the effect intended." True. But it was no intended effect of the madness of Hamlet to cause "much mirth." Every word that Hamlet utters has something in it which sounds the depths of our intellectual being, because every word is consistent with his own character, which, of all poetical creations, sends us most to search into the mysteries of our own individual natures. This, if we understand it aright, is poetry. But Johnson says—"Voltaire expresses his wonder that our author's extravagances are endured by a nation which has seen the tragedy of 'Cato.' Let him be answered, that Addison speaks the language of poets, and Shakspeare of men. We find in 'Cato' innumerable beauties which enamour us of its author, but we see nothing that acquaints us with human sentiments or human actions; we place it with the fairest and noblest progeny which judgment propagates by conjunction with learning; but Othello is the vigorous and vivacious offspring of observation, impregnated with genius." If Addison speaks "the language of poets," properly so called, "Cato" is poetry. If Shakspere speaks the language of men, as distinct from the language of poets, Othello is not poetry. It needs no further argument to show that the critic has a false theory of the poetical art. He has here narrowed the question to an absurdity.

From what Johnson says of "the minute and slender criticism of Voltaire," it appears that the English critics fancied that, doing Shakspere ample justice themselves, they were called upon to defend him from the mistaken criticisms of a foreign school. Every Englishman, from the period of Johnson, who has fancied himself absolved from the guilt of not admiring and understanding Shakspere has taken up a stone to cast at Voltaire. Those who speak of Voltaire as an ignorant and tasteless calumniator of Shakspere forget that his hostility was based upon a system of art which he conceived, and rightly so, was opposed to the system of Shakspere. He had been bred up in the school of Corneille and Racine, the glories of his countrymen; and it is really a remarkable proof of the vigour of his mind that he tolerated so much as he did in Shakspere, and admired so much; in this respect going further, perhaps, than many of our own countrymen of no mean reputation, such as Shaftesbury and Bolingbroke in 1730. But Voltaire's intolerance is more intelligible than the apologies of Shakspere's defenders in England. We must confess that we have more sympathy with his earnest attack upon Shakspere than with Mrs. Montagu's maudlin defence.

Apologies for Shakspere, lamentations over his defects, explanations of the causes of them, rude age, unlettered audience, the poet himself working without knowledge—all this, the invariable language of the English critics, is eagerly laid hold of, not only to justify the hostility of Voltaire, but to perpetuate the reign of a system altogether opposed to the system of Shakspere, up to the present hour. M. Villemain, in the new edition of his "Essay upon Shakspeare," published in 1839, gives us as much interjectional eulogy of our national poet as might satisfy the most eager appetite of those admirers who think such praise worth anything. The French critic, of nearly a century later than Voltaire, holds that Shakspere has no other system than his genius. It is in this chaos that we must seek his splendour. His absurdities, his buffooneries, belong to the gross theatre of his period. In judging Shakspere, we must reject the mass of barbarism and false taste with which he is surcharged. But then, apart from any system, "quelle passion! quelle poésie! quelle éloquence!" "This rude and barbarous genius discovers an unknown delicacy in the development of his female characters." And why? "The taste which is so often missing in him is here supplied by a delicate instinct, which makes him even anticipate what was wanting to the civilization of his time." The critic reposes somewhat on English authority:—"Mrs. Montagu has repelled the contempt of Voltaire by a judicious criticism of some defects of the French theatre, but she cannot palliate the enormous extravagances of the pieces of Shakspere. Let us not forget, she says, that these pieces were played in a miserable inn before an unlettered audience, scarcely emerging out of barbarism."* But Mrs. Montagu is not alone in this. Others, as angry with Voltaire, as prodigal of their admiration of Shakspere, quietly surrender what Voltaire really attacks, forgetting that his praises have been nearly as strong, and sometimes a little more judicious, than their own. Hear Martin Sherlock apostrophizing Shakspere:—

> "Always therefore study Nature.
>
> "It is she who was thy book, O Shakspeare; it is she who was thy study day and night; it is she from whom thou hast drawn those beauties which are at once the glory and delight of thy nation. Thou wert the eldest son, the darling child, of Nature; and, like thy mother, enchanting, astonishing, sublime, graceful, thy variety is inexhaustible. Always original, always new, thou art the only prodigy which Nature has produced. Homer was the first of men, but thou art more than man. The reader who thinks this eulogium extravagant is a stranger to my subject. To say that Shakspeare had the imagination of Dante, and the depth of Machiavel, would be a weak encomium: he had them, and more. To say that he possessed the terrible graces of Michael Angelo, and the amiable graces of Correggio, would be a weak encomium: he had them, and more. To the brilliancy of Voltaire he added the strength of Demosthenes; and to the simplicity of La Fontaine, the majesty of Virgil.—But, say you, we have never seen such 'a being.' You are in the right; Nature made it, and broke the mould." †

David Hume, to the charm of whose style most readers once surrendered their judgment, thus writes of Shakspere:—"Born in a rude age, and educated in the lowest manner, without any instruction either from the world or from books." The consequence of this national and individual ignorance was a necessary one:—"A reasonable propriety of thought he cannot for any time uphold." What right have we to abuse Voltaire, when we hear this from an English writer of the same period?

We regret that we can no more than briefly allude to the large and interesting subject of the history of Shaksperean opinion in Germany. The translation of Schlegel's "Lectures on Dramatic Literature," in 1815, in conjunction with the admirable Lectures of Coleridge, gave

* Essai sur Shakspeare, Paris (1839).

† A Fragment on Shakspeare (1786).

a new direction amongst the thinking few to our national opinion of Shakspere. Other critics of a higher school than our own race of commentators had preceded Schlegel in Germany; and it would not, perhaps, be too much to say that, as the reverent study of Shakspere has principally formed their æsthetic school, so that æsthetic school has sent us back to the reverent study of Shakspere. He lived in the hearts of the people, who knew nothing of the English critics. The learned, as they were called, understood him least. Let the lovers of truth rejoice that their despotism is over.

§ VI.

Our rapid sketch of critical opinion upon Shakspere in England has now brought us to what may be called the second race of commentators.

The English editors of Shakspere have certainly brought to their task a great variety of qualities, from which combination we might expect some very felicitous results. They divide themselves into two schools, which, like all schools, have their subdivisions. Rowe, Pope, Theobald, Hanmer, Johnson, belong to the school which did not seek any very exact acquaintance with our early literature, and which probably would have despised the exhibition, if not the reality, of antiquarian and bibliographical knowledge. A new school arose, whose acquaintance with what has been called black-letter literature was extensive enough to produce a decided revolution in Shaksperean commentary. Capell, Steevens, Malone, Reed, Douce, are the representatives of the latter school. The first school contained the most brilliant men; the second, the most painstaking commentators. The dullest of the first school, Theobald, was unquestionably the best of the first race of editors. Rowe was indolent, Pope flashy, Warburton paradoxical, Johnson pedantic. Theobald brought his common sense to the task; and has left us, we cannot avoid thinking, the best of all the conjectural emendations. Of the other school, the real learning, and sometimes sound judgment, of Capell, is buried in an obscurity of thought and style—to say nothing of his comment being printed separately from his text—which puts all ordinary reading for purposes of information at complete defiance. Of Steevens and Malone, they have had, more or less, the glory of having linked themselves to Shakspere for more than half a century. Reed and Chalmers were mere supervisors and abridgers of what they did.

The edition of Capell was published in ten small octavo volumes, three years after that of Johnson—that is, in 1768. His Preface is printed in what we call the variorum editions of Shakspere, but Steevens has added to it this depreciating note:—"Dr. Johnson's opinion of this performance may be known from the following passage in Mr. Boswell's 'Life of Dr. Johnson:'—'If the man would have come to me, I would have endeavoured to endow his purpose with words, for, as it is, he doth gabble monstrously.'" Certainly "the man" does write a most extraordinary style; and it is impossible to do full justice to his edition, from the great bulk of the notes and various readings "being published in a separate form," with references to previous editors so obscure and perplexed, that few would take the trouble to attempt to reach his meaning. Capell was a man of fortune; and he devoted a life to this labour, dying in the midst of it. Steevens never mentions him but to insult him; and amongst the heaps of the most trashy notes that encumber the variorum editions, raked together from the pamphlets of every dabbler in commentary, there is, perhaps, not one single-minded quotation from Capell. John Collins, the publisher of his posthumous Notes and Various Readings, brings a charge against Steevens which may account for this unrelenting hostility to a learned and amiable man labouring in a pursuit common to them both. He says that Capell's edition "is made the groundwork of what is to pass for the genuine production of these combined editors" (Johnson and Steevens). This, he says, may be proved by a comparison of their first edition of 1773 with that of Johnson's of 1765, Capell's having been published during the interval. He then proceeds further in the charge:—

"But the re-publication of their work, as it 'is revised and augmented,' makes further advances upon the same plan, abounding with fresh matter and accumulated evidence in proof of the industry with which the purloining trade has been pursued, and of the latitude to which it has been extended, in each of the above-mentioned particulars. For, differing as it does from its former self in numberless instances, in all of them it is still found to agree with that edition, which, we are gravely told in so many words by the apparent manager of the business, 'has not been examined beyond one play.'"

But there was another cause of the hostility of Steevens and his school of commentators. Farmer was their Coryphæus. Their souls were prostrate before the extent of his researches, in that species of literature which possesses this singular advantage for the cultivator, that if he studies it in an original edition, of which only one or two copies are known to exist (the merit is gone if there is a baker's dozen known), he is immediately pronounced learned, judicious, laborious, acute. And this was Farmer's praise. He wrote "An Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare," which has not one passage of solid criticism from the first page to the last, and from which, if the name and the works of Shakspere were to perish, and one copy—a unique copy is the affectionate name for these things—could be miraculously preserved, the only inference from the book would be that William Shakspere was a very obscure and ignorant man, whom some misjudging admirers had been desirous to exalt into an ephemeral reputation, and that Richard Farmer was a very distinguished and learned man, who had stripped the mask off the pretender. The first edition of Farmer's pamphlet appeared in 1767. Capell, who had studied Shakspere with far more accuracy than this mere pedant, who never produced any literary performance in his life except this arrogant pamphlet, held a contrary opinion to Farmer—that Shakspere "was very well grounded, at least in Latin, at school;" that it was "evident that he had some knowledge of the Italian;" and that "of the French language he was somewhat a greater master than of the two that have gone before."

The principle of Capell's edition was to give the plays of Shakspere as "set out by himself in quarto, or by the players, his fellows, in folio." His introduction consists of an analysis of the value of these various authorities; and he discriminates very justly between those plays in quarto which "have much resemblance to those in the folio," and those which were "first drafts or else imperfect and stolen copies." His text is formed upon this discriminating principle, not attaching an equal value to all the original copies in quarto, or superseding the text of the folio by thrusting in passages out of the first drafts and imperfect copies. To say that his text is the result invariably of a sound judgment would be to say too much; and, indeed, some of his emendations approach a little to the ridiculous. But we have no hesitation in saying that it is a better text, because approaching more nearly to the originals, than that of many of those who came after him, and went on mending and mending for half a century, till the world was tired with the din of their tinkering.

The first labour of Steevens, which preceded the edition of Capell by two years, was to reprint in fac-simile "twenty of the plays of Shakspeare, being the whole number printed in quarto during his lifetime, or before the Restoration; collated where there were different copies, and published from the originals." Most accurately did he execute this laborious duty. We have carefully collated these re-impressions by Steevens; and, with the exception, upon an average, of half-a-dozen of the minutest deviations in each play, we are as well contented with our copy for all purposes of utility as if we possessed the rarest edition of the most self-satisfied collector. The next progressive movement of Steevens was still in the same safe path. He became united with Johnson in the edition of 1773. In his advertisement he says—"The labours of preceding editors have not left room for a boast that many valuable readings have been retrieved; though it may be fairly asserted that the text of Shakspeare is restored to the condition in which the author, or rather his first publishers, appear to have left it, such emendations as were absolutely necessary alone admitted." He defines what are absolutely necessary, such as a supply of particles when indispensable to the sense. He rejects with indignation all attempts to tamper with the text by introducing a syllable in aid of the metre. He declines suggestions of correspondents "that might have proved of great advantage to a more daring commentator." Upon such safe foundations was the edition of 1773 reared. In 1778 it was "revised and augmented," and in 1785 it was reprinted with additions by Isaac Reed, Steevens having declined the further care of the work. Steevens also, in 1779, rendered an acceptable service to the students of our dramatic history by the publication of "Six old plays, on which Shakspeare founded his Measure for Measure, Comedy of Errors, Taming the Shrew, King John, King Henry IV., King Henry V., and King Lear."

In 1780 Malone appeared as an editor of Shakspere. He came forward with "A Supplement" to the edition of 1778, in which he republished the poems of Shakspere, and the seven doubtful plays which had been printed as his in the third and fourth folios. The encouragement which he had received induced him, in 1790, when Steevens had retired from his editorial labours in connection with the booksellers' edition, to publish a complete edition of his own, but which was still a variorum edition, "with the corrections and illustrations of various commentators." In this first appeared his "Dissertation on the Three Parts of Henry VI.," and his "Historical Account of the English Stage." Malone professes the same anxiety to adhere to the genuine text of Shakspere as Steevens had professed before him; but he opened a wide field for editorial license, in his principle of making up a text out of the folio edition and the previous quartos; and, to add to the apparent value of his own labours, he exaggerated, as others have since done, the real value of these quartos:—"They in general are preferable to the exhibition of the same plays in the folio; for this plain reason, because, instead of printing these plays from a manuscript, the editors of the folio, to save labour, or from some other motive, printed the greater part of them from the very copies which they represented as maimed and imperfect, and frequently from a late, instead of the earliest, edition; in some instances with additions and alterations of their own." Those of our readers who have paid attention to our observations on the "State of the Text" which precede each play will know that this is not an accurate statement of the question; for the large additions to the folio copy when compared with the quartos, the careful emendations, and even the omissions, which are seldom without some sound apparent reason, could not have been the additions and alterations of the editors of the folio, but must have been the result of the author's labours, perhaps during a series of years. It appears from Malone's Preface that a feeling was gaining ground that the constant accession of notes to Shakspere was becoming an evil; and he disagrees with the following observation of Johnson:—"It is not (he remarks) very grateful to consider how little the succession of editors has added to this author's power of pleasing. He was read, admired, studied, and imitated, while he was yet deformed with all the improprieties which ignorance and neglect could accumulate upon him." The new editor, with a pardonable complacency towards his calling, says—"He certainly was read, admired, studied, and imitated, at the period mentioned; but surely not in the same degree as at present. The succession of editors has effected this; it has made him understood; it has made him popular; it has shown every one who is capable of reading how much superior he is not only to Jonson and Fletcher, whom the bad taste of the last age from the time of the Restoration to the end of the century set above him, but to all the dramatic poets of antiquity." Jonson and Fletcher were not set above Shakspere, as we have demonstratively shown, from the time of the Restoration to the end of the century. But even if they were, it was not the succession of editors that had made Shakspere popular. A plain reprint of Shakspere without a single note, but with the spelling modernised, would have made him more popular than all the critical editions which the eighteenth century had produced. Malone says that during that century "thirty thousand copies of Shakspere have been dispersed through England." The number would have been quadrupled if Shakspere had been left to his own unaided power. Much of what the commentators did, especially in the illustration of Shakspere's phraseology and the explanation of his fugitive allusions, they did well. But they must needs be critics, without having any system of criticism more profound than the easy task of fault-finding; and thus they rendered Shakspere less popular than he would have been in an age when criticism was little understood, and men's eyes were dazzled by an array of names to support some flippant remark upon Shakspere's want of art, some exhibition of his ignorance, some detection of his anachronisms, some discovery of a quibble beyond the plain meaning of the word. It is scarcely possible to read a scene of the variorum Shaksperes without feeling the utter want of a reverent spirit towards the author. These things sank more deeply into the minds of the readers of Shakspere than the general expressions of the commentators' admiration, which, after all, seemed little more than compliments to themselves in their association with the poet. We open a play at a venture, to see how far in the spirit of a modest appreciation of themselves, and an earnest admiration of their author, the editors laboured to render Shakspere popular. It is Hamlet. Let us put down a few of their annotations:—

"Angry parle. This is one of the affected words introduced by Lyly."—STEEVENS.

"A mote it is, &c. These lines are in the enlarged quarto of 1604. Many of its (Hamlet's) absurdities as well as beauties arose from the quantity added after it was first written."—STEEVENS.

"Shall I strike at it with my partizan. I am unwilling to suppose that Shakspeare could appropriate these absurd effusions to Horatio."—STEEVENS.

"I am too much i' the sun. I question whether a quibble between sun and son be not here intended."—FARMER.

"To school in Wittenberg." The anachronism is first pointed out by MALONE; and then we are told by RITSON that Shakspere derived his knowledge of this famous university from a trumpery book called "The Life of Jack Wilton."

"Nemean. The right prosody is accidental."—MALONE.

"Rest, rest, perturbed spirit." The skill displayed in the management of the Ghost is contrasted with his management of other preternatural beings: "They are but weak and inefficacious pageants."—STEEVENS.

Conclusion of Scene I. Act II. "The poet's ill and obscure expression seems to have been caused by his affectation of concluding the scene with a couplet."—JOHNSON.

"Being a good kissing carrion." Warburton's reading being given: "This is a noble emendation, which almost sets the critic on a level with the author."—JOHNSON.

"The satirical rogue says here that old men have grey beards." Warburton says that the allusion is to Juvenal, Satire X. "If Shakspeare had read Juvenal he could not have wrongly accented Posthumus."—FARMER.

"Now might I do it, &c. This speech is too horrible to be read or to be uttered."—JOHNSON. "Yet some moral may be extracted from it, as all his subsequent calamities were owing to this savage refinement of revenge."—M. MASON.

"Heaven's face doth glow, &c. In Shakspeare's licentious diction the meaning may be," &c.—MALONE.

End of Act IV. "Shakspeare has been unfortunate in his management of the story of this play, the most striking circumstances of which arise so early in its formation as not to leave him room for a conclusion suited to the importance of its beginning. After this last interview with the Ghost, the character of Hamlet has lost all its consequence."—STEEVENS.

> "Nature is fine in love; and where 'tis fine
> It sends some precious instance of itself
> After the thing it loves.

These lines are not in the quarto, and might have been omitted in the folio without great loss, for they are obscure and affected."—JOHNSON.

"It was that very day that young Hamlet was born. The poet in the fifth act had forgotten what he wrote in the first."—BLACKSTONE.

> "There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
> Rough-hew them how we will.

Dr. Farmer informs me that these words are merely technical. A wool-man, butcher, and dealer in skewers, lately observed to him that his nephew (an idle lad) could only assist him in making them; 'He could rough-hew them, but I was obliged to shape their ends.' To shape the ends of wool-skewers, i.e. to point them, requires a degree of skill; any one can rough-hew them. Whoever recollects the profession of Shakspeare's father will admit that his son might be no stranger to such terms. I have frequently seen packages of wool pinned up with skewers."—STEEVENS.

Concluding Remarks.—"The poet is accused of having shown little regard to poetical justice, and may be charged with equal neglect of poetical probability. The apparition left the regions of the dead to little purpose; the revenge which he demands is not obtained but by the death of him that was required to take it; and the gratification which would arise from the destruction of an usurper and a murderer is abated by the untimely death of Ophelia, the young, the beautiful, the harmless, and the pious."—JOHNSON.

"Hamlet cannot be said to have pursued his ends by very warrantable means; and if the poet, when he sacrificed him at last, meant to have enforced such a moral, it is not the worst that can be deduced from the play. . . . . Hamlet seems to have been hitherto regarded as a hero not undeserving the pity of the audience; and because no writer on Shakspeare has taken the pains to point out the immoral tendency of his character."—STEEVENS.

The editors of the first collection of the works of Shakspere, in their "Address to the great Variety of Readers," say—"Read him therefore; and again, and again: and if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger not to understand him." This was advice that could not have proceeded from any common mind. The foundation of a right understanding of Shakspere is love. Steevens read again and again without love, and therefore without understanding. Boswell, the editor of Malone's posthumous edition, speaking of a note of Steevens on Hamlet, says that Steevens has expressed himself "with as much asperity as if he had had a personal quarrel with the author." Steevens had a pettifogging mind, without a particle of lofty feeling, without imagination, without even a logical apprehension of the small questions to which he applied himself. But he was wonderfully laborious. Knowing nothing of the principles of philosophical criticism, he spared no pains in hunting up illustrative facts; he dabbled in classical learning so as to be able to apply a quotation with considerable neatness; and he laboured his style into epigrammatic smartness which passed for wit. The vicious style of the "Letters of Junius" was evidently his model; and what that cowardly libeller had been in the political world, Steevens was ambitious to be in the literary. He very often attacked, under a mask, those with whom he mixed in intimate companionship, till at last his name became a byword for meanness and malignity. He became an editor of Shakspere. He was associated with Johnson in the preparation of an edition, and what he did in his own way was far superior to what his colleague had effected without him. He gave a new tone to the critical illustration of Shakspere, by bringing not only the elegant literature of Shakspere's own age to compare with him, but by hunting over all the sweepings of the book-stalls of the same age, to find the application of a familiar allusion, or the meaning of an uncommon word. But he became ambitious to show his power of writing, as well as his diligence. If we turn over the variorum editions, and light upon a note which contains something like a burst of genial admiration for the author, we find the name of Warburton affixed to it. Warburton's intellect was capacious enough for love of Shakspere. But he delighted in decorating his opinions with the tinsel of his own paradoxes. Steevens was the man to pull off the tinsel. Having retired for fifteen years from the editorship of Shakspere, in 1793 he returned with renewed vigour to his labour of love —that of defacing him. Malone, in the interval, had been working hard, though perhaps with no great talent, in the endeavour to preserve every vestige of his author. He was successful, and Steevens was thenceforward his enemy. He would no longer walk in the path that he had once trod. He rejected all his old conservative opinions. In his edition of 1793 he says in his Advertisement—

"As we are often reminded by our 'brethren of the craft' that this or that emendation, however apparently necessary, is not the genuine text of Shakspeare, it might be imagined that we had received this text from its fountain-head, and were therefore certain of its purity. Whereas few literary occurrences are better understood than that it came down to us discoloured by 'the variation of every soil' through which it had flowed, and that it stagnated at last in the muddy reservoir of the first folio: in plainer terms, that the vitiations of a careless theatre were seconded by those of as ignorant a press. The integrity of dramas thus prepared for the world is just on a level with the innocence of females nursed in a camp and educated in a bagnio. As often, therefore, as we are told that, by admitting corrections warranted by common sense and the laws of metre, we have not rigidly adhered to the text of Shakspere, we shall entreat our opponents to exchange that phrase for another 'more germane,' and say, instead of it, that we have deviated from the text of the publishers of single plays in quarto, or their successors, the editors of the first folio; that we have sometimes followed the suggestions of a Warburton, a Johnson, a Farmer, or a Tyrwhitt, in preference to the decisions of a Hemings or a Condell, notwithstanding their choice of readings might have been influenced by associates whose high-sounding names cannot fail to enforce respect, viz., William Ostler, John Shanke, William Sly, and Thomas Poope."

Again :—

"It is time, instead of a timid and servile adherence to ancient copies, when (offending against sense and metre) they furnish no real help, that a future editor, well acquainted with the phraseology of our author's age, should be at liberty to restore some apparent meaning to his corrupted lines, and a decent flow to his obstructed versification. The latter (as already has been observed) may be frequently effected by the expulsion of useless and supernumerary syllables, and an occasional supply of such as might fortuitously have been omitted, notwithstanding the declaration of Hemings and Condell, whose fraudulent preface asserts that they have published our author's plays 'as absolute in their numbers as he conceived them.' Till somewhat resembling the process above suggested be authorized, the public will ask in vain for a commodious and pleasant text of Shakspeare. Nothing will be lost to the world on account of the measure recommended, there being folios and quartos enough remaining for the use of antiquarian or critical travellers, to whom a jolt over a rugged pavement may be more delectable than an easy passage over a smooth one, though they both conduct to the same object."

And this, then, is the text of Shakspere that England has rejoiced in for half a century! These are the labours, whether of correction or of critical opinion, that have made Shakspere "popular!" The critical opinions have ceased, we believe, to have any effect except amongst a few pedantic persons, who fancy that it is cleverer to dispraise than to admire. But the text as corrupted by Steevens is that which was generally put into the hands of the readers of Shakspere. The number of editions of the text alone of Shakspere printed during the first half of this century was by no means inconsiderable; and of these editions there were many thousand copies year by year supplying the large and increasing demand for a knowledge of our greatest poet. With very few exceptions, indeed, all these editions were copies of some edition whose received text is considered as a standard —even to the copying of typographical errors. That received text, to use the words of the title-page of what is called the trade edition, is "From the text of the corrected copies left by the late George Steevens, Esq., and Edmund Malone, Esq." If we were to suppose, from this title, that Steevens and Malone had agreed together to leave a text for the benefit of posterity, we should be signally deceived. The received text is that produced by Steevens, when he fancied himself "at liberty to restore some apparent meaning to Shakspere's corrupted lines, and a decent flow to his obstructed versification." Malone was walking in his own track, that of extreme caution, and an implicit reliance on the very earliest copies. The text of his edition of 1821, though deformed with abundant marks of carelessness, is an honest text, if we admit the principle upon which it is founded. But the text of Steevens, in which the peculiar versification of Shakspere especially, its freedom, its vigour, its variety of pause, its sweetness, its majesty, are sacrificed to what he called "polished versification," was received for nearly half a century as the standard text.

Hayley, the head of the school of English poetry "in the most high and palmy state" of Steevens, wrote his epitaph, which concludes with these lines :—

> "This tomb may perish, but not so his name
> Who shed new lustre upon Shakspeare's fame."

This may run by the side of Johnson's praise of a sermonising note of Warburton :—"It almost sets the critic on a level with the author." Steevens shedding new lustre upon Shakspere! Warburton almost upon a level with Shakspere! Thus men talked in those days, when their notion of poetry was simply that it was not prose. Something in which the mechanical form was to be obviously distinguished from other forms of composition—a sermon, an essay—was poetry. They looked for no inner life in poetry, no organization of its own, that should determine its form. They looked for eight or ten syllable verse, for blank verse or couplet. They looked for syllabic regularity in Shakspere, and a moral. When they found not the moral they shook their heads. When they found what they called "superfluous syllables" in Shakspere's lines, out went the syllables, by carrying over a word to the next line, sometimes of two, sometimes of three syllables. If there was a gap left, it was filled up with rubbish. The excess of the second line was carried over to the third, till a halting-place was found or made. This was mending the metre. Mending the moral was not quite so easy to the editors; they left that task to the players, who, to do them justice, were in no degree slow to set about the work with the most laudable emulation of the labours of the critics. They cut out a scene here, and put in another there. Lear was to end with a jig, and Hamlet with a song. The manager-botchers, however, in time grew timid. They wanted new Tates to make new happy endings, but the age of George III. was not luxuriant enough to produce such daring geniuses. The managers, therefore, were obliged to be content with the glorious improvements of the seventeenth century in all essentials. But they did what they could. Shakspere's songs were poor, simple things; they had no point; not much about love in them; nothing of loyalty; and so Shakspere's comedies were always presented with new songs by the salaried poet of "the house," for "the house" kept a poet, as the maker of razor-strops did in those days. But Garrick, the twin-star of Shakspere—

> "Shakspeare and Garrick like twin-stars shall shine,
> And earth irradiate with a beam divine"—

had many a twinkle of his own. In the "Biographia Dramatica" we have a list of thirty-nine plays by Garrick :—"He is well known to have been the author of the following, some of which are originals, and the rest translations or alterations from other authors, with a design to adapt them to the present taste of the public." (A predecessor printed upon the title of a tragedy of which in a similar way he was "the author," "King Lear, a Tragedy: by Nahum Tate.") Garrick's Shaksperean authorship was confined to Romeo and Juliet, "The Fairies" (Midsummer Night's Dream), The Tempest, "Catherine and Petrucio" (Taming of the Shrew), "Florizel and Perdita" (Winter's Tale), Cymbeline, Hamlet. This was pretty well for a twin-star. Is it uncharitable to infer that the Stratford Jubilee in 1769 was something as much for the honour of David Garrick as of William Shakspere? On this memorable occasion the Corporation of Stratford opened their proceedings by thus addressing Garrick :—"Sir, you who have done the memory of Shakspere so much honour are esteemed the fittest person to be appointed the first steward of his jubilee." The ode upon dedicating the Town-hall, and erecting a statue to Shakspere, was written by Garrick, as well as spoken by him. It is quite as good as birthday odes used to be. It would be beyond our limits to describe the effect which this ode produced; how rapturous was the public dinner; how brilliant were the transparencies in the hall; and how appropriate were the characters of the masquerade, at which a thousand persons were present. Garrick spoke an oration in honour of Shakspere, which he is also said to have composed. The beginning and end of it are commonplace enough; but it contains passages which are so far in advance of the critical opinions of his day, and which appear to us so contrary to the habits of thought which Garrick must have acquired from his theatrical practice—so opposed to the recorded opinions to which he was in the habit of looking up with slavish reverence—that we cannot receive the records of the Stratford Jubilee as evidence that he wrote it. Nay, we can hardly think he knew the full force of what he was uttering.

It would be a dreary task to attempt to trace all that was published about Shakspere from the date of Johnson's first edition to the close of the eighteenth century. A few out of the heap of these forgotten emanations of the critical mind, the multitude of which proves the strong direction of the national admiration, may not be unprofitably noticed. Johnson, when he has dismissed Shakspere from the shackles of the unities, says, "I am almost frightened at my own temerity." He dreaded the advocates of a contrary opinion, "as Æneas withdrew from the defence of Troy when he saw Neptune shaking the wall." A Neptune arrived from Scotland, in the shape of "Cursory Remarks on Tragedy." This work, though it dropped into oblivion, was the performance of W. Richardson, "Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow." A small specimen will suffice:—"With an impartiality which becomes every man that dares to think for himself, let us allow him (Shakspere) great merit as a comic writer, greater still as a poet, but little, very little, as a tragedian. . And is then poor Shakespeare to be excluded from the number of great tragedians? He is; but let him be banished, like Homer from the republic of Plato, with marks of distinction and veneration; and may his forehead, like the Grecian bard's, be bound with an honourable wreath of ever-blooming flowers." There can be no doubt of the paternity of this production. The same Professor of Humanity in the University of Glasgow produced, in the same year, "A Philosophical Analysis and Illustration of some of Shakespeare's Characters;" and this book has gone, with the appendage of new characters, through many editions, and is allied, moreover, to Essays on this and that Shaksperean thing, and a "perilous shot" indeed in "An Essay on the Faults of Shakespeare." We shall give no more than a sentence:—"I am inclined to believe, and shall now endeavour to illustrate, that the greatest blemishes in Shakespeare have proceeded from his want of consummate taste. Having no perfect discernment, proceeding from rational investigation of the true cause of beauty in poetical composition, he had never established in his mind any system of regular process, or any standard of dramatic excellence." Yet this solemn person, who thinks that Shakspere had never established in his mind any system of regular process, had no perfect discernment of the true cause of beauty, has the temerity to write a book of four hundred pages on his dramatic characters. Something of a very different description was produced three years after: "An Essay on the Dramatic Character of Sir John Falstaff." The author was Maurice Morgann, once Under-Secretary of State. The book is far above the age. The author is a thinker, and one who has been taught to think by Shakspere. Take an example:—"In the groups of other poets, the parts which are not seen do not in fact exist. Those characters in Shakespeare which are seen only in part are yet capable of being unfolded and understood in the whole; every part being in fact relative, and inferring all the rest." The "Remarks on Some of the Characters of Shakespeare," by Thomas Whately, published in 1785, is something different from the performance of the Scotch professor. What could induce his eminent relation, who republished it in 1839, to write thus?—

"Mr. Whately, it should be observed, is merely pointing out that such and such speeches do indicate character; not that they were, in each case, written with that design. If, then, they really are characteristic, the criticism is fully borne out, whatever may have been the design of Shakespeare. I doubt whether Shakespeare ever had any thought at all of making his personages speak characteristically. In most instances, I conceive—probably in all—he drew characters correctly, because he could not avoid it; and would never have attained, in that department, such excellence as he has, if he had made any studied efforts for it. And the same, probably, may be said of Homer, and of those other writers who have excelled the most in delineating characters."

Was the "Paul preaching at Athens," with the apostle characterized in his majesty, the sceptic in his doubt, and the enthusiast in his veneration (characters marked as deeply as the Richard and Macbeth upon which the relation of the Archbishop of Dublin writes)—was this produced by Raffaelle because he could not avoid it? There is one more work, and one only, to which we may point as being superior to the ordinary criticism of that age—"the butterwoman's rank to market." It is Mr. Whiter's "Specimen of a Commentary on Shakspeare," published in 1794. We have often quoted it, which may be sufficient to mention for our present purpose.

Amidst the crowd of writers, from the middle to the end of the eighteenth century, who were adding to the mass of comment upon Shakspere, whether in the shape of essay, letter, poem, philosophical analysis, illustration, there was one who, not especially devoting himself to Shaksperean criticism, had a considerable influence in the gradual formation of a sound national taste. The "Reliques of Ancient English Poetry," by Thomas Percy, originally published in 1765, showed to the world that there was something in the early writers beyond the use to which they had been applied by Shakspere's commentators. In these fragments it would be seen that England, from the earliest times, had possessed an inheritance of real poetry; and that he who had breathed a new life into the forms of the past, and had known how to call up the heroes of chivalry,—to

> "Enlive their pale trunks, that the present age > Joys in their joy, and trembles at their rage,"—

was not without models of earnest passion and noble simplicity in the ancient ballads. The publication of these "Reliques" led the way, though slowly, to the study of our elder poets; and every advance in this direction was a step towards the more extended knowledge, and the better understanding, of Shakspere himself. Percy, in one part of his first volume, collected "such ballads as are quoted by Shakespeare, or contribute in any degree to illustrate his writings." He did this with his usual good taste; and every one knows with what skill he connected, in the tale of "The Friar of Orders Grey," those "innumerable little fragments of ancient ballads" which we find dispersed through the plays of Shakspere. In his introduction to this division of his work he gives some very sensible observations upon the origin of the English stage; while in his remarks on the Histories of our poet he takes a different, and we think a juster, view of their origin and purpose than Malone and the other commentators. Although Percy puts his own opinions cautiously, if not timidly, he had higher notions of Shakspere as an artist than those who were arrogating to themselves the merit of having made him "popular."

"The History of English Poetry," by Thomas Warton, published in 1774, was another of those works which advanced the study of our early literature in the spirit of elegant scholarship as opposed to bibliographical pedantry. Warton was an ardent lover of Shakspere, as we may collect from several little poems; but he was scarcely out of the trammels of the classical school. His education had taught him that Shakspere worked without art, and, indeed, he held that most of the Elizabethan poets so worked.

Scattered about the periodical essayists are many papers on Shakspere worth consulting by the student, which, if not very valuable in themselves, indicate at least the progress of opinion. Joseph Warton, in the Adventurer, where he reviews The Tempest and Lear, is a great stickler for the unities. Mackenzie, in the Mirror, has a higher reverence for Shakspere, and a more philosophical contempt for the application of the ancient rules to works having their own forms of vitality. Cumberland, in the Observer, contrasts Macbeth and Richard III.; and he compares Shakspere with Æschylus in a way which exhibits the resources of his scholarship and the elegance of his taste. All the fragmentary critical opinions upon Shakspere, from the time of Johnson's Preface to the end of the century, exhibit some progress towards the real faith; some attempt to cast off not only the authority of the ancient rules of art, but the smaller authority of that lower school of individual judgment, which the Shaksperean commentators had been propping up, as well as they could, upon their own weak shoulders. Coleridge has well described their pretensions to authority:—"Every critic, who has or has not made a collection of black-letter books,—in itself a useful and respectable amusement,—puts on the seven-league boots of self-opinion, and strides at once from an illustrator into a supreme judge, and, blind and deaf, fills his three-ounce phial at the waters of Niagara; and determines positively the greatness of the cataract to be neither more nor less than his three-ounce phial has been able to receive." Such a critic was Mr. Francis Douce, who has been at the pains of making a formal essay "On the Anachronisms and some other Incongruities of Shakspeare." The words by which Mr. Douce describes these are, of course, "absurdities," "blunders," "distortions of reality," "negligence," "absurd violations of historical accuracy." Some concessions are, however, made by the critic:—"His bestowing the epithet of gipsy on Cleopatra is whimsical; but may, perhaps, admit of defence." It is perfectly clear that a man who talks thus has not the slightest philosophical comprehension of the objects of Art, and the mode in which Art works. The domain of the literal and the ideal is held to be one and the same. It was truly said of the formative arts, by a painter who knew the philosophy of his own art as much as he excelled in its practice, that "a servile attention to the letter of description as opposed to its translatable spirit, accuracy of historic details, exactness of costume, &c., are not essential in themselves, but are valuable only in proportion as they assist the demands of the art, or produce an effect on the imagination. This may sufficiently explain why an inattention to these points, on the part of great painters (and poets, as compared with mere historians), has interfered so little with their reputation."*

We have little of importance left to notice before we reach the close of the eighteenth century, about which period we ought to rest. Opinions upon our contemporaries, except very general ones, would be as imprudent as misplaced. Perhaps we should notice in a few words the extraordinary forgeries of William Henry Ireland. We consider them as the result of the all-engrossing character of Shaksperean opinion in the days of the rivalries and controversies of Steevens and Malone, of Ritson and Chalmers. A clever boy, who had a foolish father whose admiration of Shakspere took the form of longing, with an intensity which Mrs. Pickle could not have equalled, for the smallest scraps of Shakspere's writing, thought he would try his hand at the manufacture of a few such scraps—a receipt; a mortgage deed; a Protestant Confession of Faith by William Shakspere, to be placed in opposition to another forgery of a Roman Catholic Confession of Faith. Learned men came to read the confession of faith, and one affirmed that it was finer than anything in the Church Liturgy. Witty conundrums succeeded; letters to Anne Hathaway; memorandums connected with the theatre; a new edition of King Lear, with the author's last alterations; and, to crown the whole, an original play, "Vortigern and Rowena." The documents were published in the most expensive form. All the critics in the land came to look upon the originals. Some went upon their knees and kissed them. The "black-letter dogs" began to tear each other in pieces about their authenticity. Hard names were given and returned; dunce and blockhead were the gentlest vituperations. The whole controversy turned upon the colour of the ink, the water-mark of the paper, the precise mode of superscription to a letter, the contemporary use of a common word, the date of the first use of promissory notes, the form of a mortgage. Scarcely one of the learned went boldly to the root of the imposture, and showed that Shakspere could not have written such utter trash. The people, however, settled the question. The play was brought out at Drury Lane, with a prologue by Sir James Bland Burgess. As they were invited to do, the people did pronounce their "dread decree." When Mr. Kemble uttered the line—

"And when this solemn mockery is o'er"—

"the most discordant howl echoed from the pit that ever assailed the organs of hearing." Shakspere was vindicated.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century a new school of criticism began to establish itself amongst us. Charles Lamb and William Hazlitt led the way in approaching Shakspere, if not wholly in the spirit of Æsthetics, yet with love, with deep knowledge, with surpassing acuteness, with unshackled minds. But a greater arose. A new era of critical opinion upon Shakspere, as propounded by Englishmen, may be dated from the delivery of the Lectures of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, at the Surrey Institution, in 1814. What that great man did for Shakspere during the remainder of his valuable life can scarcely be appreciated by the public. For his opinions were not given to the world in formal treatises and ponderous volumes. They were fragmentary; they were scattered, as it were, at random; many of them were the oral lessons of that wisdom and knowledge which he poured out to a few admiring disciples. But they have had their effect. For ourselves, personally, we owe a debt of gratitude to that illustrious man that can never be repaid. If, during the progress of this edition, we have been enabled to present Shakspere to the popular mind under new aspects, looking at him from a central point, which should permit us, however imperfectly, to comprehend something of his wondrous SYSTEM, we owe the desire so to understand him ourselves to the germs of thought which are scattered through the works of that philosopher; to whom the homage of future times will abundantly compensate for the partial neglect of his contemporaries. We desire to conclude this outline of the opinions of others upon the works of Shakspere, in connection with the imperfect expression of our own sense of those opinions, with the name of

COLERIDGE.

* Preface to Kugler's History of Painting, by C. L. Eastlake, Esq., R.A.

INDEXES

TO THE

PLAYS AND POEMS OF SHAKSPERE.

It has been found convenient to arrange the references under two heads.

The First Index is for the most part Glossarial, but it also refers to explanations which are more diffuse in their character. The words in Italic are those which may be explained briefly, and often by the addition of another word, approaching to a synonyme, which gives the sense. The words in Roman, principally referring to objects, customs, and ancient and proverbial expressions, require a more lengthened explanation, which will be found under the passages referred to, either in a foot-note (designated by n.) or an illustration (designated by i.).

The Second Index is of the Dramatis Personæ, showing the names of the Characters which occur in each Play, and the particular Act and Scene in which each appears.

The references are not made to Volume and Page, but to Play, Act and Scene. The Poems are referred to by their titles. All the references are abridged as follows:—

G. V. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
L. L. L. Love's Labour's Lost.
M. W. Merry Wives of Windsor.
C. E. Comedy of Errors.
T. S. Taming of the Shrew.
M. N. D. A Midsummer Night's Dream.
M. V. The Merchant of Venice.
A. W. All's Well that Ends Well.
M. A. Much Ado about Nothing.
T. N. Twelfth Night.
A. L. As You Like It.
M. M. Measure for Measure.
W. T. A Winter's Tale.
T. Tempest.
J. King John.

R. S. King Richard II.
H. 4, F. P. King Henry IV., Part I.
H. 4, S. P. King Henry IV., Part II.
H. F. King Henry V.
H. 6, F. P. King Henry VI., Part I.
H. 6, S. P. King Henry VI., Part II.
H. 6, T. P. King Henry VI., Part III.
R. T. King Richard III.
H. E. King Henry VIII.
R. J. Romeo and Juliet.
H. Hamlet.
Cy. Cymbeline.
O. Othello.
T. Ath. Timon of Athens.

L. King Lear.
M. Macbeth.
T. C. Troilus and Cressida.
Cor. Coriolanus.
J. C. Julius Cæsar.
A. C. Antony and Cleopatra.
T. And. Titus Andronicus.
P. Pericles.
T. N. K. Two Noble Kinsmen.
V. A. Venus and Adonis.
Luc. The Rape of Lucrece.
So. Sonnets.
L. C. A Lover's Complaint.
P. P. The Passionate Pilgrim.

INDEX I.

A

A or 'a—he. M. A. iii. 3, n. (and in many other passages).
How if a will not stand?

Abhor, technical use of the word. H. E. ii. 4, n.
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge.

Abhorred—disgusted. H. v. 1, n.
And now how abhorred my imagination is!

Abide (v.)—sojourn. W. T. iv. 2.
There's no virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish it, to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Abraham Cupid. R. J. ii. 1, n.
Young Abraham Cupid, he that shot so trim,
When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid.

Abridgment—pastime. M. N. D. v. 1, n.
Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?

Abroad—not at hand, far off. Cy. iii. 4. n.
Your means abroad,
You have me, rich.

Absey book—A, B, C, book. J. i. 1, n.
And then comes answer like an Absey book.

Abstract. A. C. iii. 6, n.
Being an abstract 'tween his lust and him.

Aby (v.)—suffer for. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
Thou shalt aby it.

Accept—consent to certain articles of a treaty. H. F. v. 2, n.
We will, suddenly,
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

Accommodation. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
A soldier-like word.

According to the trick—according to the fashion of banter and exaggeration. M. M. v. 1, n.
I spoke it but according to the trick.

ADD

Aches—pronounced as a dissyllable. T. i. 2, i.
Fill all thy bones with aches.

Achievement. H. F. iii. 5, n.
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.

Achieves her goodness. A. W. i. 1, n.
She derives her honesty, and achieves her goodness.

Achilles and Hector. T. C. iii. 3, i.
I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace.

"Accidence of Armourie," passage from. H. v. 1, i.
Was he a gentleman?

Acknown. O. iii. 3, n.
Be not acknown on 't.

Acquaint you with the perfect spy—inform yourselves with a most careful inquiry. M. iii. 1, n.
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time,
The moment on 't.

Acquaintance—used in the singular as a noun of multitude. O. ii. 1, n.
How does my old acquaintance of this isle?

Actæon, story of. T. N. i. 1, i.
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.

Actors, profits of. H. iii. 2, i.
A fellowship in a cry of players.

Acture—action. L. C. n.
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not; with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind.

Addition. L. ii. 2, n.
One whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition.

Address'd—prepared. A. L. v. 4, n.
Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address'd a mighty power.

AFF

Address'd—prepared. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected.

Address'd—prepared. Luc. n.
At length address'd to answer his desire.

Address'd—ready. J. C. iii. 1, n.
He is address'd: press near, and second him.

Addrest—ready. M. N. D. v. 1, n.
So please your grace, the prologue is addrest.

Adriatic. T. S. i. 2, i.
Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatic seas.

Advantage—used as a verb. H. F. iv. 1, n.
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Advertisements. M. A. i. 1, i.
He set up his bills.

Advice—government, municipal or civil. Luc. n.
Advice is sporting while infection breeds.

Advisedly—attentively. Luc. n.
This picture she advisedly perus'd.

Afar off—in a remote degree. W. T. ii. 1, n.
He who shall speak for her is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.

Affect (v.)—incline towards; metaphorically, love. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
I do affect the very ground.

Affect the letter—affect alliteration. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
I will something affect the letter; for it argues facility.

Affect a sorrow, than to have. A. W. i. 1, n.
Lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, than to have.

Affection—affectation. L. L. L. v. 1, n.
Witty without affection.

INDEX I.

Affection—imagination. W. T. i. 2, n.
Affection ! thy intention stabs the centre.

Affection, master of passion. M. V. iv. 1, n.
For affection,
Master of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what it likes, or loathes.

Affectioned—affected. T. N. ii. 3, n.
An affectioned ass, that cons state without book.

Affeer'd. M. iv. 3, n.
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dare not check thee ! wear thou thy wrongs,
The title is affeer'd.

Affront (v.)—encounter, confront. H. iii. 1, n.
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia.

Affront—encounter. Cy. v. 3, n.
There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,
That gave the affront with them.

Affy (v.)—betroth. H. 6, S. P. iv. 1, n.
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king.

Against your sacred person—aught against your sacred person. H. E. ii. 4, n.
If, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away.

Agate. M. A. iii. 1, n.
An agate very vilely cut.

Agate. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
I was never manned with an agate till now.

Age—seniority. T. And. i. 1, n.
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Age's steepy night. So. lxiii. n.
When his youthful morn
Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night.

Aglet-baby. T. S. i. 2, n.
Marry him to a puppet, or an aglet-baby.

Agnize (v.)—confess, acknowledge. O. i. 3, n.
I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardness.

Aigre—sharp, sour. H. i. 5, n.
It doth posset
And curd, like aigre droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood.

Aim—purpose. G. V. iii. 1, n.
But, fearing lest my jealous aim might err.

Aim—conjecture. O. i. 3, n.
As in these cases where the aim reports.

Aim'd at—guessed at. G. V. iii. 1, n.
But, good my lord, do it so cunningly,
That my discovery be not aim'd at.

Air—appearance. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
The quality and air of our attempt
Brooks no division.

Alcides' shoes. J. ii. 1, i.
As great Alcides' shoes upon an ass.

Alder-liefest—dearest of all. H. 6, S. P. i. 1, n.
With you mine alder-liefest sovereign.

Ale—rural festival. G. V. ii. 5, n.
As go to the ale with a Christian.

All the world's a stage, parallels with. A. L. ii. 7, i.

All amort—dispirited. T. S. iv. 3, n.
What, sweeting, all amort ?

All a-mort—dispirited. H. 6, F. P. iii. 2, n.
Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks ?
What, all a-mort ?

Alla stoccata—Italian term of art for the thrust with a rapier. R. J. iii. 1, n.
Alla stoccata carries it away.

All-hallown summer—summer in November. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Farewell, thou latter spring ! Farewell All-hallown summer !

All-to—entirely, altogether. V. A.
Adonis lives, and Death is not to blame ;
It was not she that call'd him all-to naught.

Allow (v.)—approve. W. T. iv. 1, n.
Of this allow,
If ever you have spent time worse ere now.

Allow (v.)—approve. Luc. n.
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow.

Allow (v.)—approve. So. cxii. n.
So you o'ergreen my bad, my good allow.

Alter thy course for Tyre—pursue not the course for Tyre. P. iii. 1, n.
Thither, gentle mariner ;
Alter thy course for Tyre.

Althea. H. 6, S. P. i. 1, n. (See H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.)
The fatal brand Althea burn'd,
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.

Althea's dream. H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.
Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away !

Am, have, and will be. H. E. iii. 2, n.
For your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own ; that am, have, and will be.

Amaimon. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
He of Wales, that gave Amaimon the bastinado.

Amaze (v.)—confuse. A. L. i. 2, n.
You amaze me, ladies.

Ambassadors sent from Antony to Octavius Cæsar,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 10, i.
Let him appear that's come from Antony.

America, discovery of. C. E. iii. 2, i.
Where America, the Indies ?

Amiss—fault. So. xxxv. n.
Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss.

Amiss—fault. So. cli. n.
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.

Amurath III. H. 4, S. P. v. 2, i.
Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds.

Anachronisms in King John. J. i. 1, i.
The thunder of my cannon shall be heard.

Anchor—anchoret. H. iii. 2, n.
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope !

Ancient—bearer of the ensign. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
Sir, ancient Pistol's below.

Andirons. Cy. ii. 4, i.
Her andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids.

Andren. H. E. i. 1, n.
Met in the vale of Andren.

Andrew—name of a ship. M. V. i. 1, n.
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand.

Angel on English coins. M. V. ii. 7, i.
A coin that bears the figure of an angel.

Angel—coin. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
Your ill angel is light.

Angel—bird. T. N. K. i. 1, n.
Not an angel of the air,
Bird melodious, or bird fair,
Be absent hence.

Angerly—angrily. G. V. i. 2, n.
How angerly I taught my brow to frown.

Answer—statement of objections to certain articles of a treaty. H. F. v. 2, n.
We will, suddenly,
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

Answer me declin'd. A. C. iii. 11, n.
I dare him therefore
To lay his gay comparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd.

Anthropophagi and headless men. O. i. 3, i.
The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.

Antipathies. M. V. iv. 1, i.
Some men there are, &c.

Antony,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. ii. 1, i.
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus, conference of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iv. 1, i.
These many then shall die, &c.

Antony and Cleopatra, amusements of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. i. 1, i.
To-night we'll wander through the streets, &c.

Antony and Octavia, marriage of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 2, i.
Thou hast a sister by the mother's side.

Antony's cook,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 2, i.
Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast.

Antony and Cleopatra, first meeting of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 2, i.
When she first met Mark Antony, &c.

Antony's angling,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 5, i.
'Twas merry, when
You wager'd on your angling, &c.

Antony, Cæsar, and Pompey, meetings of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 6, i.
Your hostages I have, so have you mine, &c.

Antony and Cleopatra at Alexandria,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 6, i.
In Alexandria—here's the manner of it,—
I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd.

Antony's preparations for battle,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 7, i.
O noble emperor, do not fight by sea.

Antony's reception of Cæsar's messenger,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 11, i.
A messenger from Cæsar.

Antony's challenge to Cæsar,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 1, i.
Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die, &c.

Antony's speech to his servants,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 2, i.
Call forth my household servants.

Antony, desertion of, by the god Hercules,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 3, i.
Peace, what noise ?

Antony, defeat of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 10, i.
This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me.

Antony's last speech to Cleopatra, and death,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 13, i.
O Charmian, I will never go from hence.

Ape—expression of kindly familiarity applied to a young man. R. J. ii. 1, n.
The ape is dead, and I must conjure him.

Ape-bearer. W. T. iv. 2, i.
An ape-bearer.

Apostle spoons. H. E. v. 2, i.
You'd spare your spoons.

Apothecary, Romeo's description of. R. J. v.
I do remember an apothecary.

Apparent to my heart—next to my heart. W. T. i. 2, i.
Apparent to my heart.

Appay'd—satisfied, pleased. Luc. n.
But Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes ; and thou art well appay'd
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.

Apperil. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
Let me stay at thine apperil, Timon.

Apprehension—opinion. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
To scourge you for this apprehension.

Approbation—probation. M. M. i. 3, n.
This day my sister should the cloister enter,
And there receive her approbation.

Approbation—proof. W. T. ii. 1, n.
Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation.

Approve our eyes—confirm what we have seen. H. i. 1, n.
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.

Approv'd—proved, experienced. G. V. v. 4, n.
O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,
When women cannot love, where they're belov'd.

Apricocks—apricots. R. S. iii. 4, n.
Go, bind thou up yon' dangling apricocks.

April-day—spring-time of life. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
She, whom the spital-house and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To the April-day again.

Are arms—which are arms. P. i. 2, n.
From whence an issue I might propagate ;
Are arms to princes, and bring joys to subjects.

Argosy—ship. T. S. ii. 1, n. (See M. V. i. 1, i.)
Besides an argosy
That now is lying in Marseilles' road.

Argument—conversation. M. A. iii. 1, n.
For shape, for bearing, argument, and valour.

Argument—subject-matter. A. L. iii. 1, n.
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present.

Arm him—take him in your arms. Cy. iv. 2, n.
Come ; arm him.

Arm your prize—offer your arm to the lady you have won. T. N. K. v. 3, n.
Arm your prize :
I know you will not lose her.

Arm-gaunt. A. C. i. 5, n.
And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed.

Aroint thee, explanation of. L. iii. 4, i.
Aroint thee, witch, aroint thee.

Aroint. M. i. 3, n. (See L. iii. 4, i.)
"Aroint thee, witch !" the rump-fed ronyon cries.

A-row—one after the other. C. E. v. 1, n.
Beaten the maids a-row, and bound the doctor.

Arras. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
Go, hide thee behind the arras.

Arrest before judgment. C. E. iv. 2, i.
One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell.

Arrive the—arrive at the. J. C. i. 2, n.
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd.

Arthur's show. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
I remember at Mile-end green (when I lay at Clement's-inn) — I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show.

Articulated—exhibited in articles. H. 4, F. P. v. 1, n.
These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses.

INDEX I.

Artificial strife—contest of art with nature. T. Ath. 1, n.
Artificial strife
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Arundel, escape of Thomas, son of the Earl of. R. S. ii. 1, i.
Reignold lord Cobham,
That late broke from the duke of Exeter.

As bid—as to bid. J. iv. 2, n.
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
As bid me tell my tale in express words.

As, how—with a train of circumstances. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Tears our recountments had most kindly bath'd,
As, how I came into that desert place.

As our good wills. Cor. ii. 1, n.
It shall be to him then, as our good wills;
A sure destruction.

Ask of—ask for. M. W. i. 2, n.
Ask of Doctor Caius' house.

Aspersion—sprinkling. T. iv. 1, n.
No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow.

Assay of the deer. J. ii. 2, i.
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands.

Assinego—ass. T. C. ii. 1, n.
An assinego may tutor thee.

Association of ideas, Mr. Whiter's theory of. R. J. i. 3, i.
Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face.

Assum'd this age—put on these appearances of age. Cy. v. 5, n.
He it is that hath
Assum'd this age.

Assured—affianced. C. E. iii. 2, n.
I was assured to her.

Assur'd—affianced. J. ii. 2, n.
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.

Astonished him—stunned him with the blow. H. F. v. 1, n.
Enough, captain; you have astonished him.

Astringer—falconer. A. W. v. 1, i.
Enter a gentle Astringer.

At each. L. iv. 6, n.
Ten masts at each make not the altitude
Which thou hast perpendicularly fell.

At liberty—of his own unrestrained will. H. 4, F. P. v. 2, n.
Never did I hear
Of any prince so wild at liberty.

Atone together—unite. A. L. v. 4, n.
Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even
Atone together.

Atone you—make you in concord. R. S. i. 1, n.
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Justice design the victor's chivalry.

Atone (v.)—to make at one. Cy. i. 5, n.
I was glad I did atone my countryman and you.

Atone (v.)—be reconciled, at one. Cor. iv. 6, n.
He and Aufidius can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariety.

Attended—waited for. H. 6, T. P. iv. 6, n.
And the lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side.

Aumerle, Duke of. R. S. i. 3, i.

Away with me—like me. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
She never could away with me.

Awful—in the sense of lawful. G. V. iv. 1, n.
Thrust from the company of awful men.

Awful—reverential. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, n.
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

Awkward wind—epithet used by Marlowe and Drayton. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
And twice by awkward wind from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime.

Awless—not inspiring awe. J. i. 1, n.
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The awless lion could not wage the fight.

Aye-remaining lamps—constantly-burning lamps. P. iii. 1, n.
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And aye-remaining lamps.

Ay, when? Canst tell?—slang phrase, equivalent to I wish you may get it. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
Ay, when? Canst tell?

B.

Baccare—go back. T. S. ii. 1, n.
Baccare! you are marvellous forward.

Badge of fame to slander's livery. Luc. n.
At least I give
A badge of fame to slander's livery;
A dying life to living infamy.

Bagpipe. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.
The drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

Bagpipes. M. V. iv. 1, i.
Bagpipe.

Bailiff, dress of the. C. E. iv. 2, i.
A fellow all in buff.

Bailiff, dog-like attributes of the. C. E. iv. 2, i.
A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry foot well.

Balconies on the stage. R. J. iii. 5, i.
Juliet's Chamber.

Baldrick—belt. M. A. i. 1, n.
Or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick.

Bale—ruin. Cor. i. 1, n.
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,
The one side must have bale.

Baleful—baneful. H. 6, F. P. v. 4.
By sight of these our baleful enemies.

Balk—pass over. T. S. i. 1, n.
Balk logic with acquaintance that you have.

Balk'd—heaped up. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains.

Ballad. H. 4, S. P. iv. 3, i.
I will have it in a particular ballad.

Ballow—pole. L. iv. 6, n.
Or ise try whether your costard or my ballow be the harder.

Band—bond. C. E. iv. 2, n. (See R. S. i. 1, n.)
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

Band—bond. R. S. i. 1, n.
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son?

Banishment, law of. R. S. i. 3, i.
Our part therein we banish.

Bank'd their towns—sailed along their banks. J. v. 2, n.
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roy! as I have bank'd their towns?

Bankrout—bankrupt. R. J. iii. 2, n.
O break, my heart!—poor bankrout, break at once!

Bans—curses. L. ii. 3, n.
Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with prayers.

Barbason—evil spirit in the Dæmonology. H. F. ii. 1, n.
I am not Barbason, you cannot conjure me.

Barbed—caparisoned. R. T. i. 1, n.
And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds.

Barbers' shops. A. W. ii. 2, i.
It is like a barber's chair.

Bare the raven's eye. Cy. ii. 2, n.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning
May bare the raven's eye!

Barm—yeast. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
And sometime make the drink to bear no barm.

Barne—child. W. T. iii. 3, n.
Mercy on's, a barne; a very pretty barne!

Baronets, order of. O. iii. 4, i.
The hearts of old gave hands:
But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.

Base—prison-base (the game). G. V. i. 2, n.
Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus.

Base court—lower court. R. S. iii. 3, n.
My lord, in the base court he doth attend.

Bases—coverings for the legs. P. ii. 1, n.
A pair of bases.

Bastard, whom the oracle—allusion to the "Tale of Œdipus." T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,
And mince it sans remorse.

Bat—club. L. C. n.
So slides he down upon his grained bat.

Bate—strife, debate. M. W. i. 4, n.
And, I warrant you, no tell-tale, nor no breed-bate.

Bate. H. F. iii. 7, n.
'Tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will bate.

Bate-breeding—strife-breeding. V. A. n.
This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy.

Bated. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
All furnish'd, all in arms:
All plum'd, like estridges that with the wind
Bated.

Batler—bat used in washing linen in a stream. A. L. ii. 4, n.
I remember the kissing of her batler.

Battle-knights, creation of. J. i. 1, i.
A soldier, by the honour-giving hand
Of Cœur-de-Lion, knighted in the field.

Battles upon the stage. H. F. i. Chorus, i.
But pardon, gentles all.

Bavian—character in the morris-dance. T. N. K. iii. 5, n.
Enter Gerrold, Four Countrymen (and the Bavian).

Bavin—brushwood. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
He ambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits.

Bay—a term of building measurement. M. M. ii. 1, n.
If this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after three-pence a bay.

Baynard's castle. R. T. iii. 5, i.
If you thrive well bring them to Baynard's castle.

Be borne—to be borne. R. J. iv. 1, n.
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,
Be borne to burial in thy kindred's grave:
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault:

Be circumstanc'd—yield to circumstances. O. iii. 4, n.
'Tis very good I must be circumstanc'd.

Be comfortable—become susceptible of comfort. A. L. ii. 6, n.
For my sake, be comfortable, hold death awhile at the arm's end.

Be moved—have compassion. G. V. ii. 1, n.
O, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved.

Be naught awhile. A. L. i. 1, n.
Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile.

Beacon to this under globe. L. ii. 2, n.
Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable beams I may
Peruse this letter!

Beadsman. G. V. i. 1, i.
I will be thy beadsman, Valentine.

Bear a brain—have a memory. R. J. i. 3, n.
My lord and you were then at Mantua:—
Nay, I do bear a brain.

Bear-baiting. M. W. i. 1, i.
I have seen Sackerson loose.

Bear-garden on the Bankside. H. E. v. 3, i.
Paris-garden.

Beards. H. F. iii. 6, i.
A beard of the general's cut.

Bearing-cloth—mantle with which a child is covered when carried to the church to be baptized. W. T. iii. 3, n.
Look thee, a bearing-cloth for a squire's child!

Bears (v.)—figures, is seen. M. M. iv. 4, n.
For my authority bears of a credent bulk.

Bears (the Nevils). H. 6, S. P. v. 1, n.
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears.

Beat on a crown—are intent on a crown. H. 6, S. P. i. 1, n.
Thine eyes and thoughts
Beat on a crown.

Beated—participle of the verb to beat. So. lxii. n.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity.

Beauty—pronounced booty. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Let not us that are squires of the night's body be called thieves of the day's beauty.

Beaver—helmet. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver on.

Beaver. H. i. 2, n. (See H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, i.)
He wore his beaver up.

Beavers. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, i.
Their beavers down.

Becomed—becoming. R. J. iv. 2, n.
And gave him what becomed love I might,
Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Bedded jet—jet embedded or set. L. C. n.
A thousand favours from a maund she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet.

Bedfellow. H. F. ii. 2, i.
Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow.

Bedlam beggars. L. ii. 3, i.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars.

Beetle. M. M. iii. 1, i.
The poor beetle, that we tread upon,
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Beggars. G. V. ii. 1, i.
Beggar at Hallowmas.

Beggar's nurse, and Cæsar's—death. A. C. v. 2, n.
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse, and Cæsar's.

BEG

Beguil'd—masked with fraud. Luc. n.
So beguil'd
With outward honesty, but yet defil'd
With inward vice.

Behaviour—conduct. J. i. 1, n.
Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France,
In my behaviour, to the majesty,
The borrow'd majesty of England here.

Beholding—beholden. H. E. iv. 1, n.
Had I not known those customs,
I should have been beholding to your paper.

Be-lee'd and calm'd—terms of navigation. O. i. 1, n.
Must be be-lee'd and calm'd
By debitor and creditor.

Bellona's bridegroom. M. i. 2, n.
The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict:
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapp'd in proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons.

Belly and the members, fable of. Cor. i. 1, i.
Make edicts for usury, to support usurers.

Bemoiled—bemired. T. S. iv. 1, n.
How she was bemoiled.

Benvolio's falsehood. R. J. iii. 1, i.
Affection makes him false.

Bergamo, sail-makers of. T. S. v.
A sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bergomask dance—an Italian dance. M. N. D. v. 1, n.
Hear a Bergomask dance, between two of our company.

Besmirch (v.)—sully. H. i. 3, n.
And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch
The virtue of his will.

Bestill'd—dissolved. H. i. 2, n.
Whilst they, bestill'd
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him.

Bestow'd—stowed, deposited. C. E. i. 2, n.
In what safe place you have bestow'd my money.

Bestraught—distraught, distracted. T. S. Induction, 2, n.
What! I am not bestraught.

Beteem (v.)—pour forth. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Beteem them from the tempest of mine eyes.

Beteem (v.)—allow, suffer. H. i. 2, n.
So loving to my mother,
That he might not beteem the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly.

Better skill—with better skill. Luc. n.
For burthen-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill.

Bevel—bent in an angle. So. cxxi. n.
I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel.

Bevis of Southampton. H. 6, S. P. ii. 3, i.
As Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart.

Bevy. H. E. i. 4, n.
None here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy, has brought with him
One care abroad.

Bewray (v.)—discover. H. 6, T. P. i. 1, n.
Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger.

Bewray (v.)—reveal. L. ii. 1, n.
He did bewray his practice.

Beyond beyond—further than beyond. Cy. iii. 2, n.
O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond.

Bezonians—term of contempt. H. 6, S. P. iv. 1, n.
Great men oft die by vile bezonians.

Bias of the world. J. ii. 2, n.
Commodity, the bias of the world.

Bid the wind a base—challenge the wind to speed. V. A. n.
To bid the wind a base he now prepares.

Bilboes—bar of iron with fetters attached to it. H. v. 2, n.
Methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.

Bills. M. A. iii. 3, n.
We are like to prove a goodly commodity, being taken up of these men's bills.

Bills. H. 6, S. P. iv. 7, n.
My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Bills. T. Ath. iii. 4, n.
Phi. All our bills.
Tim. Knock me down with 'em.

Bills on their necks. A. L. i. 2, n.
With bills on their necks,—"Be it known unto all men by these presents."

Bills placed on Junius Brutus' statue. J. C. i. 3, i.
Good Cinna, take this paper, &c.

Bird-bolts. M. A. i. 1, i.
Challenged Cupid at the flight: and my uncle's fool, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the bird-bolt.

BOL

Birds of Italy. M. V. v. 1, i.
The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark, &c.

Birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes. V. A. n.
Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,
Do surfeit by the eye.

Birnam wood. M. v. 4, i.
Siw. What wood is this before us?
Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Birth-hour's blot—corporal blemish. Luc. n.
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot.

Bishop, costume of. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, i.
Whose white investments figure innocence.

Bisson—blind. Cor. ii. 1, n.
What harm can your bisson conspectuities glean out of this character?

Biting the thumb. R. J. i. 1, i.
I will bite my thumb at them.

Black—dark. G. V. iv. 4, n.
That now she is become as black as I.

Black—swarthy, dark. M. A. iii. 1, n.
If fair fac'd,
She would swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antic,
Made a foul blot.

Black-Monday, origin of. M. V. ii. 5, i.
Black-Monday.

Blasts—used as a verb neuter. Luc. n.
O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old!

Blenches—deviations. So. cx. n.
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.

Blessed thistle, supposed virtues of. M. A. iii. 4, i.
Carduus Benedictus.

Blessing the marriage-bed. M. N. D. v. 2, i.
To the best bride-bed will we.

Blessing, begging of. H. iii. 4, n.
And when you are desirous to be bless'd,
I'll blessing beg of you.

Block. L. iv. 6, n.
This a good block!

Blood—natural disposition. T. Ath. iv. 2, n. (See Cy. i. 1, n.)
Strange, unusual blood,
When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!

Bloodless. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart.

Blood-letting. R. S. i. 1, i.
Our doctors say, this is no month to bleed.

Blood will I draw. H. 6, F. P. i. 5, n.
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Blossoms—young men, flower of the nobility. L. C. n.
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote.

Blows (v.)—swells. A. C. iv. 6, n.
This blows my heart.

Blue of heaven's own tinct. Cy. ii. 2, n.
The enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows, white and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct.

Board (v.)—address. T. N. i. 3, n.
Accost is, front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Boarded—accosted. A. W. v. 3, n.
Certain it is I lik'd her,
And boarded her i' the wanton way of youth.

Boarded—accosted. M. A. ii. 1, n.
I would he had boarded me.

Boar's Head Tavern. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Bob—rap. A. L. ii. 7, n.
He that a fool doth very wisely hit
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
Not to seem senseless of the bob.

Bodg'd. H. 6, T. P. i. 4, n.
But, out, alas!
We bodg'd again.

Bodkin—small sword. H. iii. 1, n.
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin.

Bolingbroke. R. S. i. 1, i.
Then, Bolingbroke.

Boll'n—swollen. Luc. n.
Here one being throng'd bears back, all boll'n and red.

Bolter'd—begrimed, besmeared. M. iv. 1, n.
For the blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me.

BRI

Bombast—from bombagia, cotton-wool used as stuffing. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
As bombast, and as lining to the time.

Bonneted. Cor. ii. 2, n. (See O. i. 2, n.)
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report.

Book of Songs and Sonnets. M. W. i. 1, i.
I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Book, sense of the term. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.

Book uncross'd. Cy. iii. 3, n.
Such gains the cap of him that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd.

Boord (v.)—accost. H. ii. 2, n.
I'll boord him presently.

Boot—advantage. M. M. ii. 4, n.
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume.

Boot—compensation. R. S. i. 1, n.
Norfolk, throw down, we bid; there is no boot.

Boot—into the bargain. R. T. iv. 4, n.
The other Edward dead to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot, because both they
Match not the high perfection of my loss.

Boots. G. V. i. 1, i.
Nay, give me not the boots.

Bores—wounds, thrusts. H. E. i. 1, n.
At this instant
He bores me with some trick.

Borne in hand—encouraged by false hopes. M. iii. 1, n.
How you were borne in hand; how cross'd.

Borrower's cap. H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.
The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap.

Bosom—wish, heart's desire. M. M. iv. 3, n.
And you shall have your bosom on this wretch.

Bosom multiplied. Cor. iii. 1, n.
How shall this bosom multiplied digest
The senate's courtesy?

Boson—boatswain. T. i. 1, n.
Where is the master, boson?

Bound—boundary, obstacle. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
Our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes.

Bourn—boundary. L. iv. 6, n.
From the dread summit of this chalky bourn.

Bowls. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
A very good bowler.

Brach—dog of a particular species. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
Brach Merriman.

Brach—female harrier. L. iii. 6, n. (See L. i. 4, n.)
Hound or spaniel, brach or lym.

Braid—crafty. A. W. iv. 2, n.
Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry that will, I'll live and die a maid.

Brakes of ice. M. M. ii. 1, n.
Some run from brakes of ice, and answer none.

Brass. H. F. iv. 4, n.
Brass, cur!
Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?

Brave—bravado. J. v. 2.
There end thy brave, and turn thy face in peace.

Braved—made fine. T. S. iv. 3, n.
Thou hast braved many men.

Bravery—finery. A. L. ii. 7, n.
His bravery is not on my cost.

Brawls. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
A French brawl.

Break up (v.)—open. M. V. ii. 4, n.
An it shall please you to break up this.

Break with him—break the matter to him. G. V. i. 3, n.
Now will we break with him.

Break the parle—begin the parle. T. And. v. 3, n.
Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the parle.

Breast—voice. T. N. ii. 3, n.
By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast.

Breath'd. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
Breath'd, as it were,
To an untirable and continuate goodness.

Breathe in your watering—take breath when you are drinking. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
When you breathe in your watering, they cry—hem!

Bribe. Cy. iii. 3, n.
O, this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bribe.

BRI

Bride-cup. T. S. iii. 2, i.
"A health," quoth he.

Brief—letter. H. 4, F. P. iv. 4, n.
Bear this sealed brief,
With winged haste, to the lord marshal.

Bring in—call to the drawers for more wine. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Got with swearing—lay by; and spent with crying—bring in.

Bring me out—put me out. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Ros. Sweet, say on.
Cel. You bring me out.

Brize—gad-fly. T. C. i. 3, n.
The herd hath more annoyance by the brize
Than by the tiger.

Brize—gad-fly. A. C. iii. 8, n.
The brize upon her, like a cow in June.

Brock—badger. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Marry, hang thee, brock!

Brogues—rude shoes. Cy. iv. 2, n.
And put
My clouted brogues from off my feet.

Broken with—communicated with. H. E. v. 1, n.
With which they mov'd,
Have broken with the king.

Brokes—transacts business for others. A. W. iii. 5, n.
And brokes with all that can in such a suit
Corrupt the tender honour of a maid.

Brooch—an ornament. R. S. v. 5, n.
And love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Brooch'd—adorned as with a brooch. A. C. iv. 13, n.
Not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall
Be brooch'd with me.

Brother Cassius. J. C. ii. 1, n.
Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door.

Brother father. M. M. iii. 2, n.
And you, good brother father.

Brother's sides. T. A. iv. 3, n.
It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,
The want that makes him lean.

Brought you Cæsar home?—did you accompany Cæsar home? J. C. i. 3. n.
Good even, Casca: Brought you Cæsar home?

Brown bills—bills for billmen, infantry. L. iv. 6, n.
Bring up the brown bills.

Brownists. T. N. iii. 2, i.
I had as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Bruit—report. H. 6, T. P. iv. 7, n.
Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

Brutus and Cassius,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 2, i.
Will you go see the order of the course?

Brutus and Portia,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i, i.
Let not our looks, &c.

Brutus and Antony, orations of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iii. 2, i.
Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

Brutus the night before the battle,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. v. 1, i.
Be thou my witness that, against my will, &c.

Brutus, death of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. v. 5, i.
Come, poor remains of friends, &c.

Buckle (v.)—bend. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life.

Bucklersbury. M. W. iii. 3, i.
Bucklersbury in simple-time.

Bugs—hobgoblins. T. S. i. 2, n.
Tush! tush! fear boys with bugs.

Bugs—terrors. Cy. v. 3, n.
Those that would die or ere resist are grown
The mortal bugs o' the field.

Bulk. O. v. 1, n.
Here, stand behind this bulk.

Bulk—the whole body. Luc. n.
May feel her heart, poor citizen, distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.

Bully-rook. M. W. i. 3, n.
What says my bully-rook?

Bumbards—ale-barrels. H. E. v. 3, n.
And here ye lie baiting of bumbards, when
Ye should do service.

Burgonet—helmet. A. C. i. 5, n.
The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burgonet of men.

Burn day-light—waste time. M. W. ii. 1, n.
We burn day-light:—here, read, read.

CAL

Burst—broken. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
Pay for the glasses you have burst.

Burton-heath. T. S. Induction, 2, i.
Old Sly's son of Burton-heath.

Busky—bosky, woody. H. 4, F. P. v. (See H. 4, F. P. v. 1, i.)
How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yon busky hill!

But—unless. T. S. iii. 1, n.
For, but I be deceiv'd,
Our fine musician groweth amorous.

But—except. J. iii. 1, n.
But on this day, let seamen fear no wrack.

But justly—but as justly. A. L. i. 2, n.
If you do keep your promises in love
But justly as you have exceeded all promise,
Your mistress shall be happy.

But now—just now. H. 6, S. P. iv. 9, n.
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd.

But one—except one. A. W. ii. 3, n.
To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress
Fall, when love please—marry to each—but one.

But poor a thousand crowns. A. L. i. 1, n.
It was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will, but poor a thousand crowns.

But thou love me—so thou do but love me. R. J. ii. 2, n.
And, but thou love me, let them find me here.

Butt. T. i. 2, n.
Where they prepar'd
A rotten carcase of a butt.

Butter-woman's rank to market. A. L. iii. 2, n.
It is the right butter-woman's rank to market.

Buxom—obedient, disciplined. H. F. iii. 6, n.
Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound of heart,
Of buxom valour, &c.

Buz—interjection of ridicule. T. S. ii. 1, n.
Should be? should? buz!

By day and night—always, constantly. L. i. 3, n.
By day and night he wrongs me.

By him—by his house. J. C. ii. 1, n.
Now, good Metellus, go along by him.

By nature—by the impulses of nature. C. E. i. 1, n.
Witness that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence.

By-peeping—clandestinely peeping. Cy. i. 7, n.
Then, by-peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light.

By'rlakin—by our ladykin, our little lady. M. N. D. iii. 1, n.
By'rlakin, a parlous fear.

Byron's "Bride of Abydos," lines from. A. L. iv. 1, i.
Good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and, being taken with the cramp, was drowned.

Byron's "Stanzas for Music." M. M. iii. 1, i.
For all thy blessed youth, &c.

C.

Caddis-garter—garter of ferret. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Puke-stocking, caddis-garter, smooth-tongue, &c.

Cade—cask. H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, n.
Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father—
Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings.

Cæsar and his fortune,—passage in Plutarch. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, i.
Now am I like that proud insulting ship,
Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Cæsar's fear of Cassius,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 2, i.
Let me have men about me that are fat, &c.

Cæsar, offer of the crown to,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 2, i.
Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day.

Cæsar, assassination of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iii. 1, i.
All the Senators rise.

Cæsar's grief for the death of Antony,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. v. 1, i.
Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st
Appear thus to us?

Cæsar's interview with Cleopatra,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. v. 2, i.
Which is the queen of Egypt?

Caitiff. R. S. i. 2, n.
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford!

Calen o Custure me. H. E. iv. 4, n.
Quality! Calen o Custure me. Art thou a gentleman?

CAP

Caliver—small musket. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Put me a caliver into Wart's hand.

Calkins—horse-shoes, turned up to prevent slipping. T. N. K. v. 4, n.
On this horse is Arcite,
Trotting the stones of Athens, which the calkins
Did rather tell than trample.

Call. J. iii. 4, n.
If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side.

Call there—call it. A. W. ii. 3, n.
What do you call there?

Callet. H. 6, T. P. ii. 2, n.
A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns,
To make this shameless callet know herself.

Calling—name. A. L. i. 2, n.
I am more proud to be sir Rowland's son,
His youngest son;—and would not change that calling,
To be adopted heir to Frederick.

Calm—used by Hostess for qualm. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
Sick of a calm.

Calphurnia's dreams,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. ii. 2, i.
Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out, &c.

Calves'-guts. Cy. ii. 3, n.
It is a voice in her ears, which horse-hairs and calves'-guts, nor the voice of unpaved eunuch to boot, can never amend.

Camelot. L. ii. 2, i.
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.

Campanella, passage from,—with parallel references to Milton and Coleridge. M. V. v. 1, i.
Sit, Jessica, &c.

Can—knows. P. P. n.
Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can.

Can for additions—began as additions. L. C. n.
All aids, themselves made fairer by their place,
Can for additions.

Canary—an old lively dance. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
Canary to it.

Candle-wasters—bookworms. M. A. v. 1, n.
Make misfortune drunk
With candle-wasters.

Cane-coloured beard. M. W. i. 4, n.
A little yellow beard; a cane-coloured beard.

Canker. G. V. i. 1, i.
In the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells.

Canker—dog-rose. M. A. i. 3, i.
I'd rather be a canker in a hedge than a rose in his grace.

Canker—dog-rose. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke.

Canker-blooms—flowers of the canker or dog-rose. So. liv. n.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye
As the perfumed tincture of the roses.

Cannibals, imaginary nation of. T. ii. 1, i.
No kind of traffic, &c.

Cannibals—used by Pistol for Hannibals. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
Compare with Cæsars and with Cannibals.

Canon. H. i. 2, n.
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter.

Cantle—corner, portion, parcel. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.

Cantle—portion. A. C. iii. 8, n. (See H. 4, F. P. i, n.)
The greater cantle of the world is lost
With very ignorance.

Cantons—cantos. T. N. i. 5, n.
Write loyal cantons of contemned love.

Capable—able to receive. A. L. iii. 5, n.
Lean upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure,
Thy palm some moment keeps.

Capitulate (v.)—settle the heads of an agreement. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,
Capitulate against us, and are up.

Capocchia—shallow skonce, loggerhead. T. C. iv.
Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchia!

Captain—used adjectively for chief. So. lii. n.
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.

INDEX I.

CAP

Captious and intenible—capable of receiving, but not of retaining. A. W. i. 3, n.
Yet, in this captious and intenible sieve,
I still pour in the waters of my love.

Capulet's feast, season of. R. J. i. 2, i.
This night I hold an old accustom'd feast.

Carack—vessel of heavy burden. O. i. 2, n.
'Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land carack.

Carbonado—rasher on the coals. H. 4, F. P. v. 3, n.
Let him make a carbonado of me.

Carcanet—chain, necklace. C. E. iii. 1, n.
To see the making of her carcanet.

Carcanet—necklace. So. lii. n.
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.

Card. H. v. 1, n.
We must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us.

Card of ten—proverbial expression. T. S. ii. 1, n.
Yet I have faced it with a card of ten.

Carded. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
Carded his state;
Mingled his royalty with carping fools.

Cards. J. v. 2, i.
Have I not here the best cards for the game?

Careers—a term of the manège. M. W. i. 1, n.
And so conclusions passed the careers.

Carl—churl. Cy. v. 2, n.
Could this carl,
A very drudge of nature's, have subdued me.

Carlot—churl, peasant. A. L. iii. 5, n.
And he hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of.

Carpet. P. iv. 1, n.
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall as a carpet hang upon thy grave.

Carpet knights. T. N. iii. 4, i.
He is knight, dubbed with unhatched rapier, and on carpet consideration.

Carpets laid. T. S. iv. 1, n.
The carpets laid, and everything in order.

Carping—jesting. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
Mingled his royalty with carping fools.

Carriages in the time of Shakspere. A. W. iv. 4, i.
Our waggon is prepar'd.

Carrying coals. R. J. i. 1, i.
Gregory, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.

Case—skin. T. N. v. 1, n.
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case.

Case—outside. M. M. ii. 4, n.
O form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools.

Case—outward show. L. C. n.
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case.

Case of lives—several lives. H. F. iii. 2, n.
For mine own part, I have not a case of lives.

Cassius and Brutus, quarrel between,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iv. 2, i.
Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

Cassius, death of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. v. 3, i.
Fly further off, my lord.

Castilian. M. W. ii. 3, n.
Thou art a Castilian.

Castiliano-vulgo. T. N. i. 3, n.
What, wench? Castiliano-vulgo; for here comes sir Andrew Ague-face.

Castle—stronghold, power. T. And. iii. 1, n.
And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle.

Cat and bottle. M. A. i. 1, i.
Hang me in a bottle like a cat, and shoot at me.

Cat i' the adage. M. i. 7, n.
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage.

Cataian. M. W. ii. 1, n.
I will not believe such a Cataian.

"Catch that Catch can," notice of the work. A. L. iv. 2, i.
What shall he have that kill'd the deer?

Catling—lute-string. R. J. iv. 5, n.
What say you, Simon Catling?

Cato's wish. Cor. i. 4, n.
Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish.

Caucasus, origin of the name of. R. S. i. 3, i.
The frosty Caucasus.

Cause you come—cause on which you come. R. S. 1, n.
As well appeareth by the cause you come.

Causeless. A. W. ii. 3, n.
To make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless.

CHA

Cautel—crafty way to deceive. H. i. 3, n.
And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch
The virtue of his will.

Cautelous—wary, circumspect. J. C. ii. 1, n.
Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous.

Cautels—deceitful purposes. L. C. n.
In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives.

Caviare. H. ii. 2, i.
'Twas caviare to the general.

Cawdor Castle. M. i. 3, i.
Thane of Cawdor.

Cease (v. used actively)—stop. H. 6, S. P. v. 2, n.
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease!

Ceilings ornamented. Cy. ii. 4, i.
The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubins is fretted.

Censure (v.)—give an opinion. G. V. i. 2, n.
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.

Censure—opinion. H. 6, F. P. ii. 3, n.
To give their censure of these rare reports.

Censure—opinion. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
Madam, the king is old enough himself
To give his censure.

Censure (v.)—judge. H. 6, F. P. v. 5, n.
If you do censure me by what you were.

Censure—comparison. H. E. i. 1, n.
And no discerner
Durst wag his tongue in censure.

Censure—opinion. P. ii. 4, n.
Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our censure.

Censure well—approve. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
Say, you consent, and censure well the deed.

Censur'd—sentenced. M. M. i. 5, n.
Isab. Doth he so
Seek his life?
Lucio. Hath censur'd him already.

Censures—opinions. R. T. ii. 2, n.
Will you go
To give your censures in this weighty business?

Censures—judges, estimates. So. cxlviii. n.
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?

Cerns—concerns. T. S. v. 1, n.
What cerns it you if I wear pearl and gold?

Chairs. J. iv. 1, i.
Fast to the chair.

Challenge, legal use of the word. H. E. ii. 4, n.
And make my challenge
You shall not be my judge.

Change (v.)—vary, give a different appearance to. A. C. i. 2, n.
O, that I knew this husband, which, you say, must change his horns with garlands!

Change the cod's head for the salmon's tail—exchange the more delicate fare for the coarser. O. ii. 1, n.
She that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail.

Changeling—child procured in exchange. M. N. D. 1, n.
She never had so sweet a changeling.

Changeling—a child changed. W. T. iii. 3, n.
This is some changeling.

Channel—kennel. H. 6, T. P. ii. 2, n.
As if a channel should be call'd the sea.

Chapman—a seller. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
Base sale of chapmen's tongues.

Character—description. W. T. iii. 3, n.
There lie; and there thy character.

Character—handwriting. L. ii. 1, n.
Ay, though thou didst produce
My very character.

Characters—the help of letters. R. T. iii. 1, n.
I say, without characters, fame lives long.

*Charact*s—inscriptions, official designations. M. M. v. 1, n.
So may Angelo,
In all his dressings, *charact*s, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain.

Chared. T. N. K. iii. 2, n.
How stand I then?
All's chared when he is gone.

Chares—work. A. C. iv. 13, n.
By such poor passion as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chares.

Charge—burden. P. i. 2, n.
Let none disturb us: why should this charge of thoughts,—
The sad companion, dull-eyed Melancholy,
By me so used a guest.

Chariest—most cautious. H. i. 3, n.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon.

CHU

Charing Cross. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, i.

Chariot drawn by lion at the baptism of Henry Prince of Scotland. M. N. D. iii. 1, i.
A lion among ladies is a most dreadful thing.

Chariot of night. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast.

Charles' wain—constellation of the Great Bear. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
Charles' wain is over the new chimney.

Charm'd. Cy. v. 3, n.
I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death where I did hear him groan.

Charneco—name of a wine. H. 6, S. P. ii. 3, n.
Here's a cup of charneco.

Charnel-house. R. J. iv. 3, i.
As in a vault.

Chaucer's "Troilus and Cressida," M. V. v. 1, i.
Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan walls.

Chaucer's "Knight's Tale," M. N. D. i. 1, i.
Hippolyta, I woo'd thee with my sword.

Chaucer's "Knight's Tale," M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
Even till the eastern gate.

Chaucer's "Knight's Tale," M. N. D. iv. 1, i.
Go one of you, find out the forester.

Chaucer's description of Hector and Troilus. T. C. i. 2, i.
That's Hector, &c.

Chaucer's description of the parting of Troilus and Cressida. T. C. iv. 4, i.
Be thou but true of heart.

Chaucer's "Troilus and Cressida," extract from. T. C. v. 2, i.
Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Chaudron—entrails. M. iv. 1, n.
Add thereto a tiger's chaudron,
For the ingredients of our caldron.

Cheater. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, he.

Cheer—face. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer.

Cheer—countenance. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, n.
Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd.

Chertsey, monastery of. R. T. i. 2, i.
Come now, toward Chertsey with your holy load.

Cheverel—kid-skin. R. J. ii. 4, n.
O, here's a wit of cheverel, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Cheveril—kid-skin. H. E. ii. 3, n.
The capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

Cheveril glove—kid glove, easy-fitting glove. T. N. iii. 1, n.
A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit.

Chewet. H. 4, F. P. v. 1, n.
Peace, chewet, peace.

Chide (v.)—rebuke, resound. H. F. ii. 4, n.
That caves and womby vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock.

Chief—eminence, superiority. H. i. 3, n.
And they in France of the best rank and station
Are of a most select and generous chief in that.

Child. W. T. iii. 3, n.
A boy, or a child, I wonder?

Childing—producing. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
The childing autumn.

China dishes. M. M. ii. 1, i.
They are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Chiromancy. M. V. ii. 2, i.
Go to, here's a simple line of life!

Chivalry, usages of. Luc. n.
Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eyesore in my golden coat;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,
To cipher me how fondly I did dote.

Chopine. H. ii. 2, i.
By the altitude of a chopine.

Chopping French—French which changes the meaning of words. R. S. v. 3, n.
The chopping French we do not understand.

Christendom—christening. J. iv. 1, n.
By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long.

Christom child. H. F. ii. 3, n.
'A made a finer end, and went away, an it had been any christom child.

Chuffs—swollen, pampered gluttons. H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, n.
Ye fat chuffs.

CIC

Cicero,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. ii. 1, i.
But what of Cicero?

Cide—decide. So. xlvi. n.
To 'cide this title is impannelled
A quest of thoughts.

Cinna, the poet, death of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iii. 3, i.
Enter Cinna, the Poet.

Circummur'd—walled round. M. M. iv. 1, n.
He hath a garden circummur'd with brick.

Circumstance, in two senses: 1. circumstantial deduction; 2. position. G. V. i. 1, n.
So, by your circumstance, I fear, you'll prove.

Circumstance—circumlocution. O. i. 1, n.
With a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war,
Nonsuits my mediators.

Citizens to their dens. A. C. v. 1, n.
The round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens.

Cittern-head—head of a cittern or guitar. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Hol. What is this?
Boyet. A cittern-head.

City feasts. A. W. ii. 5, i.
Like him that leaped into the custard.

Civil—grave. T. N. iii. 4, n.
He is sad, and civil.

Civil—decorous. L. C. n.
Shook off my sober guards, and civil fears.

Clamour your tongues. W. T. iv. 3, n.
Clamour your tongues, and not a word more.

Clap thyself my love. W. T. i. 2, n.
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clap thyself my love.

Classical allusions. T. S. i. 1, i.
O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor had.

Clean kam—nothing to the purpose. Cor. iii. 1, n.
This is clean kam.

Clear-stories—clere-stories. T. N. iv. 2, n.
And the clear-stories towards the south-north are as lustrous as ebony.

Clear thy crystals—dry thine eyes. H. F. ii. 3, n.
Go, clear thy crystals.

Cleave to my consent—unite yourself to my fortunes. M. ii. 1, n.
If you shall cleave to my consent,—when 'tis,
It shall make honour for you.

Cleft the root—(in archery). G. V. v. 4, n.
How oft hast thou with perjury cleft the root!

Cleopatra, flight of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 8, i.
Naught, naught, all naught!

Cleopatra taken by Proculeius,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. v. 2, i.
Guard her till Cæsar come.

Cleopatra, death of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. v. 2, i.
Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey.

Clinquant—bright with jingling ornaments. H. E. 1, n.
To-day, the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English.

Clothier's yard. L. iv. 6, n.
That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper: draw me a clothier's yard.

Clubs, bills, and partisans. R. J. i. 1, i.
Clubs, bills, and partisans! strike! beat them down!

Coaches. M. W. ii. 2, i. (See A. W. iv. 4, i.)
Coach after coach.

Coasteth—advanceth. V. A. n.
And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.

Coats in heraldry. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
Two of the first, like coats in heraldry.

Cock—cock-boat. L. iv. 6, n.
And yon' tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock.

Cock and pye, swearing by. H. 4, S. P. v. 1, i.
By cock and pye.

Cock-a-hoop. R. J. i. 5, n.
You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop!

Cockle—weed amongst the corn. Cor. iii. 1, n.
We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition.

Cockney. L. ii. 4, i.
Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney did to the eels.

COM

Cock-shut time—cock-roost time, time at which the cock goes to rest. R. T. v. 3, n.
Thomas the earl of Surrey, and himself,
Much about cock-shut time, from troop to troop,
Went through the army.

Coffer of Darius. H. 6, F. P. i. 6, n.
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich jewell'd coffer of Darius.

Coffin—crust of a pie. T. S. iv. 3, n.
A custard coffin, a bauble, a silken pie.

Coffin—crust of a raised pie. T. And. v. 2, n.
And with your blood and it I'll make a paste,
And of the paste a coffin I will rear.

Coffin—coffer. P. iii. 1, n.
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander
Bring me the satin coffin.

Cog (v.)—term applied to dice. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

Cognizance—badge. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
This pale and angry rose,
As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction, wear.

Colbrand and Guy of Warwick, combat of. J. i. 1, i.
Colbrand the giant.

Cold—unmoved. H. F. i. 2, n.
All out of work, and cold for action.

Coleridge, passage from "Literary Remains." A. L. i. 1, i.
Of all sorts enchantingly beloved.

Coleridge, passage from. R. J. ii. 2, i.
Well, do not swear, &c.

Coleridge, extract from. R. J. ii. 4, i.
Why, is not this better now than groaning for love?

Coleridge's "Essay on Method," passage from. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, i.
Marry, if thou wert an honest man, &c.

Coleridge's remarks on Shakspere's philosophy of presentiments. R. J. iii. 5, i.
O God! I have an ill-divining soul.

Collection—consequence deduced from premises. Cy. v. 5, n.
When I wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can
Make no collection of it.

Collied—black, smutted. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Brief as the lightning in the collied night.

Collied—blackened, discoloured. O. ii. 3, n.
And passion, having my best judgment collied,
Assays to lead the way.

Collins's dirge to Fidele. Cy. iv. 2, i.
We have done our obsequies.

Colour'd hat and cloak. T. S. i. 1, n.
Tranio, at once
Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak.

Colours—deceits. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
I love no colours.

Colt (v.)—trick. H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, n.
What a plague mean ye to colt me thus?

Combinate—betrothed. M. M. iii. 1, n.
Her combinate husband, this well-seeming Angelo.

Combined—bound. M. M. iv. 3, n.
I am combined by a sacred vow.

"Come o'er the Bourn, a songe betwene the Queene's Majestie and Englande." L. iii. 6, i.
Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me.

Comforting—encouraging. W. T. ii. 3, n.
Yet that dares
Less appear so, in comforting your evils,
Than such as most seem yours.

Commings—meetings in assault. H. iv. 7, n.
We'll make a solemn wager on your commings.

Commodity—interest. J. ii. 2, n.
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity.

Common—make common, interchange thoughts. H. 5, n.
Laertes, I must common with your grief.

Common and several. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
My lips are no common, though several they be.

Compact—compounded, made up of. A. L. ii. 7, n.
If he, compact of jars, grow musical,
We shall have shortly discord in the spheres.

Compact—confederate. L. ii. 2, n.
When he, compact, and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind.

Compact of credit—credulous. C. E. iii. 2, n.
Being compact of credit, that you love us.

Companies—companions. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
To seek new friends and stranger companies.

Companies—companions. H. F. i. 1, n.
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow.

CON

Companion—fellow. Cy. ii. 1, n.
It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

Company—companion. A. W. iv. 3, n.
I would gladly have him see his company anatomized.

Compass (v.)—used ambiguously. G. V. iv. 2, n.
Sil. What is your will?
Pro. That I may compass yours.

Compass'd—arched. V. A. n.
His braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end.

Compassed window—bow-window. T. C. i. 2, n.
She came to him the other day into the compassed window.

Compassionate—complaining. R. S. i. 3, n.
It boots thee not to be compassionate.

Competitor—associate. A. C. i. 4, n.
It is not Cæsar's natural vice to hate
Our great competitor.

Competitors—confederates. T. N. iv. 2, n.
The competitors enter.

Competitors—associates. R. T. iv. 4, n.
And every hour more competitors
Flock to the rebels.

Complain of good breeding—complain of the want of good breeding. A. L. iii. 2, n.
That he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art may complain of good breeding.

Complain myself—the French se plaindre. R. S. i. 2, n.
Where then, alas! may I complain myself?

Complain'd—formerly used without a subjoined preposition. Luc. n.
And by chaste Lucrece' soul that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us.

Complement extern—outward completeness. O. i. 1, n.
For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In complement extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve.

Complements—ceremonies. L. L. L. i. 1, n.
A man of complements.

Compliment—respect for forms. R. J. ii. 2, n.
But farewell compliment!

Compose (v.)—agree, come to agreement. A. C. 2, n.
If we compose well here, to Parthia.

Composition—agreement. M. M. v. 1, n.
Her promised proportions
Came short of composition.

Comptible—apt to take into account, susceptible. T. N. i. 5, n.
Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible, even to the least sinister usage.

Concave as a covered goblet. A. L. iii. 4, n.
I do think him as concave as a covered goblet.

Conceited—ingenious, imaginative. Luc. n.
Threat'ning cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud.

Conceited characters—fanciful figures worked. L. C. n.
Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters.

Conclusions—experiments. Cy. i. 6, n.
Is 't not meet
That I did amplify my judgment in
Other conclusions?

Conclusions to be as kisses. T. N. v. 1, n.
So that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

Condition—temper. A. L. i. 2, n.
Yet such is now the duke's condition,
That he misconstrues all that you have done.

Condition—temper. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition.

Condition—art. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
This throne, this Fortune, and this hill methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.

Conduce (v.)—in the Latin sense of lead to. T. C. v. 2, n.
Within my soul there doth conduce a fight
Of this strange nature.

Conduct—conductor. Luc. n.
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case.

Conduits. W. T. v. 2, i.
Weather-bitten conduit.

INDEX I.

Coney-catching—thieving. M. W. i. 1, n.
Your coney-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Confession's seal—seal of confession. H. E. i. 2, n.
Whom after under the confession's seal
He solemnly had sworn.

Confound (v.)—destroy. A. C. iii. 2, n.
What willingly he did confound he wail'd.

Confounded—destroyed. H. F. iii. 1, n.
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base.

Confounds—destroys. Luc. n.
And one man's lust these many lives confounds.

Consent (v.)—concur. A. L. v. 1, n.
All your writers do consent, that ipse is he.

Consented. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, n.
But have consented unto Henry's death.

Considerate stone. A. C. ii. 2, n.
Go to, then; your considerate stone.

Consign'd—confirmed, ratified. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, n.
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes, consign'd.

Consist—stands on. P. i. 4, n.
Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist.

Consort—concert. G. V. iii. 2, n.
Visit by night your lady's chamber-window,
With some sweet consort.

Consuls, elections of,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. iii. 1, i.
Are these your herd?

Contain (v.)—retain. M. V. v. 1, n.
Or your own honour to contain the ring.

Contemn me this—contemptuously refuse this favour. V. A. n.
What am I, that thou shouldst contemn me this?

Content. A. L. i. 3, n.
Now go in we content,
To liberty, and not to banishment.

Content—acquiescence. V. A. n.
Forc'd to content, but never to obey.

Content with my harm—resigned to any evil. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Glad of other men's good, content with my harm.

Continents—banks. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
That they have overborne their continents.

Continuate—uninterrupted. O. iii. 4, n.
But I shall, in a more continuate time,
Strike off this score of absence.

Contrary—used as a verb. R. J. i. 5, n.
You must contrary me!

Contrary feet. J. iv. 2, n. (See G. V. ii. 3, i.)
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet).

Contrive—wear away. T. S. i. 2, n.
Please ye we may contrive this afternoon.

Convented—summoned. H. E. v. 1, n.
To-morrow morning to the council-board
He be convented.

Convents—serves, agrees, is convenient. T. N. v. 1, n.
When that is known, and golden time convents,
A solemn combination shall be made
Of our dear souls.

Conversion—change of condition. J. i. 1, n.
For new-made honour doth forget
names;
'Tis too respective, and too sociable,
For your conversion.

Convert (v.)—turn. T. Ath. iv. 1, n.
To general filths
Convert, o' the instant, green virginity.

Convertite—convert. J. v. 1, n.
But, since you are a gentle convertite.

Convey (v.)—manage. L. i. 2, n.
Convey the business as I shall find means.

Conveyance—theft. H. 6, F. P. i. 3, n.
Since Henry's death, I fear there is conveyance.

Conveyance—juggling, artifice. H. 6, T. P. iii. 3, n.
I make king Lewis behold
Thy sly conveyance.

Conveyers—fraudulent appropriators of property, jugglers. R. S. iv. 1, n.
Boling. Go, some of you, convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich. O, good! Convey?—Conveyers are you all.

Convicted—overpowered. J. iii. 4, n.
A whole armado of convicted sail
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Convince (v.)—overcome. Cy. i. 5.
Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier to convince the honour of my mistress.

Convince (v.)—overpower. M. i. 7, n.
His two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince.

Convince (v.)—overcome. P. i. 2, n.
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince.

Cooks. R. J. iv. 2, i.
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.

Copatain hat—high-crowned hat. T. S. v. 1, n.
A scarlet cloak! and a copatain hat!

Cope (v.)—encounter. A. L. ii. 1, n.
I love to cope him in these sullen fits.

Cords', knives', drams' precipitance. T. N. K. i. 1, n.
None fit for the dead!
Those that with cords', knives', drams' precipitance,
Weary of this world's light, have to themselves
Been death's most horrid agents.

Coriolanus, love of, for his mother. Cor. i. 3, i.
I pray you, daughter, sing.

Coriolanus standing for the consulship,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. ii. 2, i.
It then remains
That you do speak to the people.

Coriolanus, condemnation of,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. iii. 3, i.
First, hear me speak.

Coriolanus, banishment of,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. iii. 3, i.
Our enemy is banish'd.

Coriolanus, departure of, from Rome,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. iv. 1, i.
Come, leave your tears.

Coriolanus, reconcilement of, with Aufidius, — from North's Plutarch. Cor. iv. 4, i.
A goodly city is this Antium.

Coriolanus, mission of ambassadors to,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. v. 1, i.
He would not seem to know me.

Coriolanus, intercession of the mother and wife of,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. v. 3, i.
My wife comes foremost.

Coriolanus, death of,—from North's Plutarch. Cor. v. 5, i.
Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier.

Corollary—surplus number. T. iv. 1, n.
Bring a corollary,
Rather than want a spirit.

Corporal of his field. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
And I to be a corporal of his field.

Corpse, bleeding, superstition respecting. R. T. i. 2, i.
Dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed afresh!

Corsive—corrosive. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Away! though parting be a fretful corsive,
It is applied to a deathful wound.

Costard—head. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
Here's a Costard broken in a shin.

Coster-monger times—times of petty traffic. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
Virtue is of so little regard in these coster-monger times.

Coted—quoted. L. L. L. iv. 3, n.
Her amber hairs for foul have amber coted.

Coted—overtook, went side by side. H. ii. 2, n.
We coted them on the way.

Cotswold Hills, sports on. M. W. i. 1, i.
I heard say he was out-run on Cotsall.

Coucheth—causes to couch. Luc. n.
This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wing's shade.

Countenance—behaviour, bearing. A. L. i. 1, n.
The something that nature gave me his countenance seems to take from me.

Countenance—false appearance. M. M. v. 1, n.
Unfold the evil which is here wrapp'd up
In countenance.

Counter. A. L. ii. 7, i.
What, for a counter, would I do but good?

Counter—upon a wrong scent. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n. (See C. E. iv. 2, i.)
You hunt counter, hence! avaunt!

Counterfeit—likeness or copy. Luc. n.
The poor counterfeit of her complaining.

Counterfeit—portrait. So. xvi. n.
Much liker than your painted counterfeit.

Counterfeit—portrait. So. liii. n.
Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you.

Counterpoints—counterpanes. T. S. ii. 1, n.
In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;
In cypress chests my arras, counterpoints.

Counties—nobles. J. v. 1, n.
Our discontented counties do revolt.

Countries in her face. C. E. iii. 2, i.
I could find out countries in her.

Country-base—game of prison bars, or prison base. Cy. v. 3, n.
Lads more like to run
The country-base, than to commit such slaughter.

Couplement—union. So. xxi. n.
Making a couplement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems.

Couplets of the dove. H. v. 1, i.
Anon, as patient as the female dove, &c.

Court of guard—enclosed space where a guard is held. H. 6, F. P. ii. 1, n.
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

Court-cupboard. R. J. i. 5, i.
Remove the court-cupboard.

Courtesies—makes his courtesy. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Toby approaches; courtesies there to me.

Courtship—paying courtesies. O. ii. 1, n.
Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gyve thee in thine own courtship.

Cousin—kinsman. R. J. i. 5, n.
Nay sit, nay sit, good cousin Capulet.

Cousins—relations, kinsfolks. R. T. ii. 2, n.
My pretty cousins, you mistake me both.

Cover—set out the table. A. L. ii. 5, n.
Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree.

Cowl-staff—used for carrying a basket. M. W. iii. 3, n.
Where's the cowl-staff?

Coy (v.)—caress. M. N. D. iv. 1.
While I thy amiable cheeks do coy.

Cozier—botcher. T. N. ii. 3, n.
Ye squeak out your coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice.

Cranking—bending. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
See how this river comes me cranking in.

Cranks (v.)—winds. V. A. n.
With what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles.

Crare—small vessel. Cy. iv. 2, n.
To show what coast thy sluggish crare
Might easiliest harbour in.

Craven. T. S. ii. 1, n.
No cock of mine, you crow too like a craven.

Credent—credible. W. T. i. 2.
Then, 'tis very credent.

Credit—belief, thing believed. T. N. iv. 3, n.
And there I found this credit,
That he did range the town to seek me out.

Credit his own lie. T. i. 2, n.
Like one
Who having unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie.

Cresset-light. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
Burning cressets.

Crest. M. M. ii. 4, n.
Let 's write good angel on the devil's horn,
'Tis not the devil's crest.

Crooked age. R. S. ii. 1, n.
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower.

Crosby-house. R. T. iii. 1, i.
At Crosby-house there shall you find us both.

Cross—a coin. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
He speaks the mere contrary, crosses love not him.

Cross—piece of money stamped with a cross. A. L. 4, n.
I should bear no cross if I did bear you; for, I think, you have no money in your purse.

Cross-gartering. T. N. ii. 5, i.
Wished to see thee ever cross-gartered.

Crow-keeper—one who keeps crows from corn. L. iv. 6, n.
That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper.

Crowned swords. H. F. ii. Chorus, i.
And hides a sword, from hilts unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets.

Cruel—used in a double sense: 1, in its ordinary sense; 2, a loosely-woven, narrow woollen fabric. L. ii. 4, n.
Ha, ha; he wears cruel garters!

Crush'd—overpowered. H. F. i. 2, n.
It follows, then, the cat must stay at home:
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity;
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries.

Cruzadoes. O. iii. 4, i.
I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruzadoes.

Cry aim. M. W. iii. 2, n. (See G. V. iii. 1, n.)
To these violent proceedings all my neighbours shall cry aim.

CRY

Cry of clubs. H. E. v. 3, i.
Who cried out, Clubs!

Cry sleep to death—destroy sleep. L. ii. 4, n.
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry sleep to death.

Cry'd game. M. W. ii. 3, n.
Cry'd game? said I well?

Crystal. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, n.
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky.

Cuckoo and hedge-sparrow. H. 4, F. P. v. 1, i.
As that ungentle gull the cuckoo's bird
Useth the sparrow.

Cunning—knowing, learned. T. S. i. 1, n.
For to cunning men
I will be very kind.

Cunning—skilful. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Wherein cunning, but in craft?

Cunning—knowledge. P. iii. 2, n.
Virtue and cunning were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches.

Cupid and Vulcan. M. A. i. 1, i.
Cupid is a good hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare carpenter.

Cupid's bow. R. J. i. 4, i.
We'll have no Cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf.

Curb (v.)—bend. H. iii. 4, n.
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg;
Yea, curb and woo, for leave to do him good.

Curiosity—niceness, delicacy. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
They mocked thee for too much curiosity.

Curiosity—exact scrutiny. L. i. 1, n.
For qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Curiosity—fastidiousness. L. i. 2, n.
Wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom; and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me?

Curious—scrupulous. T. S. iv. 4, n.
For curious I cannot be with you.

Curled hair. Luc. n.
Let him have time to tear his curled hair.

Currance—current. H. F. i. 1, n.
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heavy currance.

Current—rush. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.
And all the current of a heady fight.

Curry favel. H. 4, S. P. v. 1, i.
I would curry with master Shallow.

Curst—shrewish. L. L. L. iv. 1, n.
Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty?

Curst—shrewish. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
I was never curst;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness.

Curst—crabbed. T. N. iii. 2, n.
Be curst and brief.

Curst—mischievous. W. T. iii. 3, n.
They are never curst, but when they are hungry.

Curtall dog. M. W. ii. 1, n.
Hope is a curtall dog in some affairs.

Cust-alorum—abridgment of Custos Rotulorum. M. W. i. 1, n.
Slen. In the county of Gloster, justice of peace, and coram.
Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and Cust-alorum.

Cut—horse. T. N. ii. 3, n.
If thou hast her not i' the end, call me Cut.

Cut and long-tail. M. W. iii. 4, n.
Ay, that I will, come cut and long-tail.

Cypress. T. N. ii. 4, n.
And in sad cypress let me be laid.

Cyprus. T. N. iii. 1, n. (See T. N. ii. 4, n.)
A cyprus, not a bosom,
Hides my heart.

Cyprus, invasion of, by the Turks in 1570. O. i. 3, i.
The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes.

D.

Daff—to put aside. M. A. v. 1, n.
Canst thou so daff me?

Daff'd—put aside. M. A. ii. 3, n.
I would have daff'd all other respects, and made her half myself.

Dafts—puts me aside. O. iv. 2, n.
Every day thou dafts me with some device.

Dagger, mode of wearing. R. J. v. 3, n.
O, heaven!—O, wife! look how our daughter bleeds!
This dagger hath mista'en,—for, lo! his house
Is empty on the back of Montague,—
And is mis-sheathed in my daughter's bosom.

Dagger of lath. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath.

DEL

Damask-coloured. T. N. i. 3, n.
A damask-coloured stock.

Dancing horse. L. L. L. i. 2, i.
The dancing horse will tell you.

Danger—power. M. V. iv. 1, n.
You stand within his danger, do you not?

Danger—power. V. A. n.
Come not within his danger by thy will.

Daniel's "Civil Wars." H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, i.
Hath wrought the mure, &c.

Danish intemperance. H. i. 4, i.
The king doth wake to-night, &c.

Danskers—Danes. H. ii. 1, n.
Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris.

Dark house—house which is the seat of gloom and discontent. A. W. ii. 3, n.
War is no strife
To the dark house, and the detested wife.

Darraign (v.)—prepare. H. 6, T. P. ii. 2, n.
Darraign your battle, for they are at hand.

Datchet mead. M. W. iii. 3, i.
Send him by your two men to Datchet mead.

Dateless—endless, having no certain time of expiration. So. xxx. n.
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night.

Day of season—seasonable day. A. W. v. 3, n.
I am not a day of season.

Day-woman. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
She is allowed for the day-woman.

Dead waste. H. i. 2, n. (See T. i. 2, n.)
In the dead waste and middle of the night.

Dealt on lieutenantry—made war by lieutenants. A. C. iii. 9, n.
He alone
Dealt on lieutenantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war.

Dear. T. N. v. 1, n. (See R. T. i. 3, n, and H. i. 2, n.)
Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies.

Dear—harmful. R. S. i. 3, n.
The sly slow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile.

Dear cause—important business. L. iv. 3, n.
Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrap me up awhile.

Dearer merit—more valued reward. R. S. i. 3, n.
A dearer merit, not so deep a maim
As to be cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved at your highness' hands.

Dearest—best. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
Summon up your dearest spirits.

Dearest—greatest. H. i. 2, n. (See R. S. i. 3, n.)
Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven.

Dearest. So. xxxvii. n.
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite.

Dearling—used in a plural sense. O. i. 2, n.
So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd
The wealthy curled dearling of our nation.

Dearly—extremely. A. L. i. 3, n.
My father hated his father dearly.

Death and the Fool. M. M. iii. 1, i.
Merely, thou art death's fool.

Deck—pack of cards. H. 6, T. P. v. 1, n.
But whiles he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slily finger'd from the deck.

Deck'd. T. i. 2, n.
When I have deck'd the sea with drops full salt.

Deer, tears of the. A. L. ii. 1, i.
The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase.

Defeat thy favour—change thy countenance. O. i. 3, n.
Defeat thy favour with an usurped beard.

Defeatures—want of beauty. C. E. ii. 1, n.
Then is he the ground
Of my defeatures.

Defect of judgment. Cy. iv. 2, n.
Being scarce made up,
I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors, for defect of judgment,
As oft the cause of fear.

Defend—forbid. M. A. ii. 1, n.
God defend the lute should be like the case!

Defunct—functional. O. i. 3, n.
Nor to comply with heat (the young affects
In me defunct and proper satisfaction).

Delations—secret accusations. O. iii. 3, n.
They're close delations, working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule.

Delighted. M. M. iii. 1, n.
And the delighted spirit
To bathe in fiery floods.

DIS

Deliverance, legal. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, i.
I do desire deliverance, &c.

Demanded of—demanded by. H. iv. 2, n.
Besides, to be demanded of a sponge!

Demerits—merits. O. i. 2, n.
And my demerits
May speak, unbonneted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

Demerits—merits. Cor. i. 1, n.
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Demoniacs. L. iii. 4, i.
That hath laid knives under his pillow.

Denay'd—denied. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
Then let him be denay'd the regentship.

Denied you had in him no right—denied you had in him a right. C. E. iv. 2, n.
First, he denied you had in him no right.

Denunciation—annunciation. M. M. i. 3, n.
She is fast my wife,
Save that we do the denunciation lack
Of outward order.

Depart (v.)—part. T. N. K. ii. 1, n.
I may depart with little, while I live.

Deprive your sovereignty of reason—displace the sovereignty of your reason. H. i. 4, n.
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason.

Derne—solitary. P. iii. Gower, n.
By many a derne and painful perch.

Descant (in music)—variation. G. V. i. 2, n.
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant.

Desdemona's handkerchief. O. iii. 4, i.
That handkerchief.

Design (v.)—designate, point out, exhibit. R. S. i. 1, n.
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Justice design the victor's chivalry.

Despised arms—arms which we despise. R. S. ii. 3, n.
Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war,
And ostentation of despised arms.

"Destruction of Troy," extract from. T. C. iv. 2, i.
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

"Destruction of Troy," extract from. T. C. iv. 5, i.
Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son.

"Destruction of Troy," extract from. T. C. v. 5, i.
Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse.

"Destruction of Troy," extract from. T. C. v. 9, i.
Rest, sword, &c.

Determine—come to an end. Cor. v. 3, n.
I purpose not to wait on fortune till
These wars determine.

Determin'd—ended. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me?

Devil of the old Mysteries. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
Ho, ho! ho, ho!

Dew. Luc. n.
But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set.

Dial. A. L. ii. 7, i.
And then he drew a dial from his poke.

"Dialogue on Taste," specimen of criticism in. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, i.
Who then, affrighted, &c.

Diana's priest. Cy. i. 7, n.
Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest.

Did comply—was complaisant. H. v. 2, n.
He did comply with his dug, before he sucked it.

Dido. M. V. v. 1, i.
In such a night,
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand.

Difference—heraldic distinction. M. A. i. 1, n.
Let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse.

Differing—discordant. Cy. iii. 6, n.
Laying by
That nothing gift of differing multitudes.

Diffused—wild. M. W. iv. 4, n.
Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once
With some diffused song.

Dig-you-den—corruption of "give you good e'en." L. L. L. iv. 1, n.
God dig-you-den all!

Digges's prognostication. M. N. D. iii. 1, i.
Look in the almanac; find out moonshine.

Digression—transgression. Luc. n.
Then my digression is so vile, so base.

Dint—impression. J. C. iii. 2, n.
And, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity.

Disable (v.)—detract from. A. L. iv. 1, n.
Disable all the benefits of your own country.

DIS

Disabled—impeached. A. L. v. 4, n. (See A. L. i, n.)
If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment.

Discandering—dis-squandering, squandering. A. C. ii, n.
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discandering of this pelleted storm,
Lie graveless.

Discourse. H. iv. 4, n. (See H. i. 2, n.)
Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse.

Discourse of reason—discursion of reason, faculty of pursuing a train of thought. H. i. 2, n.
O, heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,
Would have mourn'd longer.

Discourse of thought. O. iv. 2, n.
If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
Either in discourse of thought, or actual deed.

Disease—uneasiness. H. 6, F. P. ii. 5, n.
First, lean thine aged back against mine arm;
And, in that ease, I'll tell thee my disease.

Dislike—displease. R. J. ii. 2, n.
Jul. Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?
Rom. Neither, fair maid, if either thee dislike.

Dismes—tenths. T. C. ii. 2, n.
Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes.

Dispark'd my parks. R. S. iii. 1, n.
While you have fed upon my seignories,
Dispark'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods.

Dispos'd—made terms with. A. C. iv. 12, n.
You did suspect
She had dispos'd with Cæsar.

Disputable—disputatious. A. L. ii. 5, n.
He is too disputable for my company.

Dissemble (v.)—disguise. T. N. iv. 2, n.
Well, I'll put it on, and I will dissemble myself in 't.

Dis-stain'd—unstained. C. E. ii. 2, n.
I live dis-stain'd, thou, undishonoured.

Distemper'd. H. 4, S. P. iii. 1, n.
It is but as a body yet distemper'd,
Which to his former strength may be restor'd.

Distractions—detachments. A. C. iii. 7, n.
His power went out in such distractions,
As beguil'd all spies.

Dive-dapper—dabchick. V. A. n.
Like a dive-dapper peering through a wave.

Diverted blood—affections alienated and turned out of their natural course. A. L. ii. 3, n.
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloody brother.

Division, in music. R. J. iii. 5, n.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division
This doth not so, for she divideth us.

Do withal—help it. M. V. iii. 4, n.
I could not do withal.

Does yet depend—is yet depending. Cy. iv. 3, n.
But our jealousy
Does yet depend.

Dogs of war. H. F. i. Chorus, i.
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire, &c.

Dole—lot. W. T. i. 2, n
Happy man be his dole!

Dolours. L. ii. 4, n.
Thou shalt have as many dolours for thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year.

Dolts. A. C. iv. 10, n.
Most monster-like, be shown
For poor'st diminutives, for dolts.

Domestic fools. M. V. i. 1, i.
Let me play the Fool.

Domestic fools. A. W. i. 3, i.
What does this knave here? &c.

Done—destroyed. V. A. n.
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done.

Done—destroyed. Luc. n.
O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done.

Double. O. i. 2, n.
And hath, in his effect, a voice potential,
As double as the duke's.

Double set. O. ii. 3, n.
He'll watch the horologe a double set,
If drink rock not his cradle.

Doubt (v.)—awe. H. F. iv. 2, n.
And doubt them with superfluous courage.

EAR

Dout (v.)—extinguish. H. i. 4, n.
The dram of ill
Doth all the noble substance often dout,
To his own scandal.

Doves, presents of. M. V. ii. 2, i.
I have here a dish of doves.

Dowle—feather, particle of down. T. iii. 3, n.
As diminish
One dowle that's in my plume.

Drawers—waiters. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
Tom, Dick, and Francis.

Drawn—drawn out into the field. Luc. n.
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece.

Dream of Andromache, presaging. T. C. v. 3, i.
My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Dress (v.)—set in order, prepare. H. F. iv. 1, n.
Admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.

Drew—I drew. L. ii. 4, n.
Having more man than wit about me, drew.

Drink the free air—live, breathe. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him Drink the free air.

Ducat. G. V. i. 1, i.
Not so much as a ducat.

Ducdâme. A. L. ii. 5, i.
Ducdâme, ducdâme, ducdâme.

Dudgeon—handle of a dagger. M. ii. 1, n.
And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood.

Due—pay as due. H. 6, F. P. iv. 2, n.
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal.

Duelling. R. J. ii. 4, i.
A duellist, a duellist.

Duke. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!

Duke—commander. H. F. iii. 2, n.
Abate thy rage, great duke!

Dumb show. H. iii. 2, i.
The dumb show enters.

Dump—a mournful elegy. G. V. iii. 2, n.
Tune a deploring dump.

Dump. R. J. iv. 5, n. (See G. V. iii. 2, n.)
O, play me some merry dump, to comfort me.

Dumps—melancholy airs. Luc. n.
Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears;
Distress likes dumps when time is kept with tears.

"Dun is in the mire." R. J. i. 4, i.
Tut! dun's the mouse.

Dunsinane Hills. M. v. 5, i.
As I did stand my watch upon the hill.

Dupp'd—did up. H. iv. 5, n.
Then up he rose, and donn'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber-door.

Dure (v.)—endure. T. N. K. i. 3, n.
Yet I wish him
Excess and overflow of power, an 't might be,
To dure ill-dealing fortune.

Dusty death. M. v. 5, n.
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death.

Dwell (v.)—continue. M. V. i. 3, n.
I'll rather dwell in my necessity.

E.

Eager—sour, sharp. H. 6, T. P. ii. 6, n.
If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.

Eager—sour. So. cxviii. n.
With eager compounds we our palate urge.

Eanlings—lambs just dropped. M. V. i. 3, n.
That all the eanlings which were streak'd and pied.

Ear (v.)—plough. R. S. iii. 2, n.
And let them go
To ear the land.

Ear (v.)—plough. V. A. Dedication, n.
Never after ear so barren a land.

Earl Marshal of England. R. S. i. 3, i.

Ears, tingling of. M. A. iii. 1, i.
What fire is in mine ears?

Earth—inheritance, possession. R. S. iii. 2, n.
So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth.

Earth-treading stars. R. J. i. 2, n.
Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven light.

Earthly happier. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
But earthly happier is the rose distill'd.

Earthquake. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
The goats ran from the mountains.

Earthquake of 1580. R. J. i. 3, i.
'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years.

ENV

Easy—used adverbially. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
My lords, these faults are easy, quickly answer'd.

Eche—eke out. P. iii. Gower, n.
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly eche.

Education of women. T. S. ii. 1, i.
And this small packet of Greek and Latin books.

Edward III.'s seven sons. R. S. i. 2, i.
Edward's seven sons.

Edward III.'s tomb. R. S. iii. 3, i.
By the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grandsire's bones.

Eftest—quickest. M. A. iv. 2, n.
Yea, marry, that's the eftest way.

Eggs for money. W. T. i. 2, i.
Will you take eggs for money?

Egypt—the queen of Egypt. A. C. i. 3, n.
I prithee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears
Belong to Egypt.

Egyptian soothsayer,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. ii. 3, i.
Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's or mine?

Eight and six—alternate verses of eight and six syllables. M. N. D. iii. 1, n.
It shall be written in eight and six.

Eld—old age, old people. M. M. iii. 1, n.
And doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld.

Element—constituent quality of mind. H. E. i. 1, n.
One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Ely Place. R. T. iii. 4, i.
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there.

Embarquements—embargoes. Cor. i. 10, n.
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury.

Emboss'd—swollen. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
The poor cur is emboss'd.

Embossed—exhausted. A. W. iii. 6, n.
But we have almost embossed him.

Embossed—swollen, puffed up. H. 4, F. P. iii. 3, n.
Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal.

Empiricutick. Cor. ii. 1, n.
The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricutick.

Enchantingly beloved—beloved to a degree that looks like enchantment. A. L. i. 1, n. (See A. L. i. 1, i.)
Full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved.

Engag'd—retained as a hostage. H. 4, F. P. iv. 3, n.
Suffer'd his kinsman March
(Who is, if every owner were well plac'd,
Indeed his king,) to be engag'd in Wales.

Engag'd—held as surety. H. 4, F. P. v. 2, n.
For I have thrown
A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did bear it.

England, defenceless state of. H. F. i. 2, i.
My great grandfather,
Never went with his forces into France, &c.

Engle—gull. T. S. iv. 2, n.
But at last I spied
An ancient engle coming down the hill.

English bottoms. J. ii. 1, i.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide.

English travellers, ignorance of. M. V. i. 2, i.
He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian.

Engross (v.)—make gross. R. T. iii. 7, n.
Not sleeping, to engross his idle body,
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul.

Enridged. L. iv. 6, n.
Horns whelk'd, and wav'd like the enridged sea.

Ensconce (v.)—fortify. So. xlix. n.
Against that time do I ensconce me here.

Entertainment—engagement for pay. Cor. iv. 3, n.
The centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment.

Entrance—mouth, surface. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood.

Envious—malicious. H. 6, S. P. ii. 4, n.
With envious looks still laughing at thy shame.

ENV

Envy—malice. M. V. iv. 1, n.
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach.

Ephesus, unlawful arts of. C. E. ii. 2, i.
This is the fairy land.

Ercles—Hercules. M. N. D. i. 2, n.
This is Ercles' vein, a tyrant's vein.

Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay. So. lxviii. n. (See M. V. iii. 2, i.)
To live a second life on second head,
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay.

Eros, death of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iv. 12, i.
My mistress lov'd thee, &c.

Erring—wandering. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Runs his erring pilgrimage.

Erring—wandering, unsettled. O. i. 3, n.
Betwixt an erring barbarian and super-subtle Venetian.

Escoted—paid. H. ii. 2, n.
Who maintains them? how are they escoted?

Esil. H. v. 1, i.
Woul 't drink up Esil?

Esperancé—motto of the Percy family. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.
That roan shall be my throne.
Well, I will back him straight: Esperancé!

Esperancé. H. 4, F. P. v. 2, n. (See H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.)
Now,—Esperancé!—Percy!—and set on.

Espials—spies. H. 6, F. P. i. 4, n.
The prince's espials have informed me.

Essay—trial, examination. L. i. 2, n.
He wrote this but as an essay or taste of my virtue.

Estimation—conjecture. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
I speak not this in estimation
As what I think might be.

Eton. M. W. iv. 6, i.
With him at Eton
Immediately to marry.

Even—equal, indifferent. W. T. iii. 2, n.
Which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt, or the purgation.

Even (v.)—make even. T. N. K. i. 4, n.
But those we will depute which shall invest
You in your dignities, and even each thing
Our haste does leave imperfect.

Even Christian—fellow-Christian. H. v. 1, n.
And the more pity, that great folk should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even Christian.

Ever strike—continue to strike. Cor. i. 2, n.
'Tis sworn between us we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

"Every Man out of his Humour." A. L. ii. 7, i.
Let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him, &c.

Evils. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there?

Exchange. G. V. ii. 2, i.
Why then we'll make exchange.

Excommunication, ceremony of. J. iii. 3, i.
Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me back.

Excrements—hair, nails, feathers, &c. H. iii. 4, n.
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Starts up, and stands on end.

Exempt—released, acquitted. C. E. ii. 2, n.
Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt.

Exempt—excluded. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry.

Exeter, John Duke of. R. S. v. 3, i.
Our trusty brother-in-law.

Exhibition—stipend, allowance. G. V. i. 3, n.
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

Exhibition—allowance. L. i. 2, n.
And the king gone to-night! prescrib'd his power!
Confin'd to exhibition!

Exigent—end. H. 6, F. P. ii. 5, n.
These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent.

Expedient. J. ii. 1, n.
His marches are expedient to this town.

Expedient—prompt, suitable. R. S. i. 4, n. (See J. ii. 1, n.)
Expedient manage must be made, my liege.

Expedient—expeditious. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
A breach that craves a quick expedient stop!

Expedient—expeditious. R. T. i. 2, n.
I will with all expedient duty see you.

FAL

Expediently—promptly. A. L. iii. 1, n.
Do this expediently, and turn him going.

Expense—expenditure. L. ii. 1, n.
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have th' expense and waste of his revenues.

Expense—passing away. So. xxx. n.
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.

Expiate. R. T. iii. 3, n.
Make haste, the hour of death is expiate.

Express (v.)—make known. T. N. ii. 1, n.
Therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself.

Exsufflicate—exaggerated, extravagant. O. iii. 3, n.
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blow'd surmises.

Extend him—appreciate his good qualities, but only within the real limits of what they are. Cy. i. 1, n.
I do extend him, sir, within himself.

Extended—seized upon. A. C. i. 2, n.
Labienus
(This is stiff news) hath, with his Parthian force,
Extended Asia from Euphrates.

Extent—stretch. T. N. iv. 1, n.
Let thy fair wisdom, not thy passion, sway
In this uncivil and unjust extent
Against thy peace.

Extent—legal term. A. L. iii. 1, n.
Make an extent upon his house and lands.

Extracting—absorbing. T. N. v. 1, n.
A most extracting frenzy of mine own
From my remembrance clearly banish'd his.

Extravagant—wandering, unsettled. O. i. 1, n.
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes,
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger.

Eyas-musket—sparrow-hawk. M. W. iii. 3, n.
How now, my eyas-musket?

Eye—tinge, shade. T. ii. 1, n.
Ant. The ground, indeed, is tawny.
Seb. With an eye of green in 't.

Eye—character. H. i. 3, n.
Do not believe his vows; for they are brokers;—
Not of the eye which their investments show,
But mere implorators of unholy suits.

Eysell—vinegar. So. cxi. n.
I will drink
Potions of eysell, 'gainst my strong infection.

F.

Fa, sol, la, mi. L. i. 2, i.
O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! fa, sol, la, mi.

Faced—made facings to. T. S. iv. 3, n.
Thou hast faced many things.

Factions in Jerusalem. J. ii. 2, i.
The mutines of Jerusalem.

Factious. J. C. i. 3, n.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs.

Fadge (v.)—agree, fit. L. L. L. v. 1, n.
We will have, if this fadge not, an antic.

Fadge (v.)—suit, agree. T. N. ii. 2, n.
How will this fadge?

Fadings—a dance. W. T. iv. 3, i.
With such delicate burdens of "dildos and fadings."

Fain—glad. H. 6, S. P. ii. 1, n.
Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

Fair (used substantively)—beauty. C. E. ii. 1, n.
My decay'd fair
A sunny look of his would soon repair.

Fair—beauty. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Demetrius loves your fair.

Fair—beauty. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Rosalind.

Fair—beauty. V. A. n.
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear.

Fair—beauty. So. xvi. n.
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair.

Fair—beauty. So. lxviii. n.
Before these bastard signs of fair were born.

Fair vestal—allusion to Elizabeth. M. N. D. ii. 2, i.
My gentle Puck, come hither: Thou remember'st, &c.

Faith—confidence in a friend. M. A. i. 1, n.
He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat.

Falconry. R. J. ii. 2, i.
O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!

Fall—used as a verb active. C. E. ii. 2, n.
As easy may'st thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulf.

FAV

Fall—used actively. M. N. D. v. 1, n.
And, as she fled, her mantle she did fall.

Fall—cadence. T. N. i. 1, i.
That strain again;—it had a dying fall.

Fall—used as an active verb. T. N. K. i. 1, n.
Her twinning cherries shall their sweetness fall
Upon thy tasteful lips.

Fall (v.)—let fall. M. V. i. 3, n.
Did in eaning-time
Fall particolour'd lambs.

Fall (v.)—let fall. M. M. ii. 1, n.
And rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death.

Falls—lets fall. O. iv. 1, n.
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.

Falls—lets fall. Luc. n.
For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds.

Falls on the other. M. i. 7, n.
I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other.

False—used as a verb. Cy. ii. 3, n. (See C. E. ii. 2, n.)
'Tis gold
Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes
Diana's rangers false themselves.

False beards and hair. M. N. D. iv. 2, i.
Good strings to your beards.

False hair. M. V. iii. 2, i.
The skull that bred them in the sepulchre.

Falsing—participle of the verb to false. C. E. ii. 2, n.
Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Fan, fashion of. R. J. ii. 4, i.
My fan, Peter.

Fancy—love. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Fancy—love. W. T. iv. 3, n.
Cam. Be advised.
Flo. I am; and by my fancy.

Fancy—love. H. 6, F. P. v. 3, n.
Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.

Fancy—love. P. P. n.
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial might.

Fancy—used in two senses: 1, love; 2, humour. M. A. iii. 2, n.
Claud. Yet, say I, he is in love.
D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises.

Fancy—one possessed by fancy. L. C. n.
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew.

Fancy's slave—love's slave. Luc. n.
A martial man to be soft fancy's slave.

Fangled. Cy. v. 4, n.
'Be not, as in our fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Fantastical—belonging to fantasy, imaginary. M. i. 3, n.
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show?

Fap—cant word for drunk. M. W. i. 1, n.
And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashier'd.

Farced title. H. F. iv. 1, n.
The farced title running 'fore the king.

"Farewell, dear heart," ballad of. T. N. ii. 3, i.
Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Farmer's "Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare," extract from. H. F. v. 2, i.
Notre très cher fils, &c.

Fashions—farcins, or farcy. T. S. iii. 2, n.
Infected with the fashions.

Favour—features, appearance, countenance. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Sickness is catching; O, were favour so,
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go.

Favour—countenance. A. W. i. 1, n.
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour.

Favour—appearance. H. F. v. 2, n.
Which to reduce into our former favour
You are assembled.

Favour—appearance. J. C. i. 3, n.
And the complexion of the element
In favour's like the work we have in hand.

Favour—countenance. J. C. ii. 1, n.
And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.

FAV

Favour—countenance. So. cxiii. n.
For if it see the rud'st or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour, or deformed'st creature.

Favours—features, countenances. R. S. iv. 1, n.
Yet I well remember
The favours of these men.

Favours—features. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
And stain my favours in a bloody mask.

Fear (v.)—affright. M. M. ii. 1, n.
We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey.

Fear (v.)—affright. H. 6, T. P. iii. 3, n.
Thou seest what's past, go fear thy king withal.

Fear—matter or occasion of fear. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, sin,
To speak a truth.

Fear me—make me afraid. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
The people fear me.

Fear no colours. T. N. i. 5, n.
He that is well hanged in this world needs to fear no colours.

Fearful guard—guard that is the cause of fear. M. V. i. 3, n.
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an unthrifty knave.

Fears (v.)—used in the active sense. T. S. v. 2, n.
Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.
Wid. Then never trust me if I be afeard.

Feated. Cy. i. 1, n.
A sample to the youngest; to th' more mature,
A glass that feated them.

Feature (form or fashion)—applied to the body as well as the face. G. V. ii. 4, n.
He is complete in feature, and in mind.

Federary—confederate. W. T. ii. 1, n.
Camillo is
A federary with her.

Fee-simple. M. W. iv. 2, n.
If the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery.

Feeders—servants. A. C. iii. 11, n.
To be abus'd
By one that looks on feeders.

Feeding—pasture. W. T. iv. 3, n.
They call him Doricles; and boasts himself
To have a worthy feeding.

Fell—skin. L. v. 3, n.
The good years shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep.

Fellow—companion. T. N. iii. 4, n.
Fellow! not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow.

Fen—pestilential abode. Cor. iv. 1, n.
Though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Feodary. M. M. ii. 4, n. (See H. 4, F. P. i. 3, i.)
Else let my brother die,
If not a feodary, but only he
Owe, and succeed thy weakness.

Feodary. Cy. iii. 2, n. (See H. 4, F. P. i. 3, i.)
Senseless bauble,
Art thou a feodary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without?

Fere—companion, husband. T. And. iv. (See H. 4, F. P. i. 3, i.)
And swear with me,—as with the woful fere,
And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame.

Feres. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n. (See H. 4, F. P. i. 3, i.)
Indent with feres,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves.

Fern-seed. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, i.
We have the receipt of fern-seed.

Fet—fetched. H. F. iii. 1, n.
On, on, you nobless English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!

Fet—fetched. H. 6, S. P. ii. 4, n.
To see my tears, and hear my deep-fet groans.

Fewer—low. H. F. iv. 1, n.
So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak fewer.

Fierce—violent, excessive. T. Ath. iv. 2, n.
O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!

Fife. M. V. ii. 5, i.
The wry-neck'd fife.

Fife. O. iii. 3, i.
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife.

Fights—short sails, fighting sails. M. W. ii. 2, n.
Clap on more sails; pursue, up with your fights.

FLY

File—number. M. M. iii. 2, n.
The greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

File. M. iii. 1, n.
Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not in the worst rank of manhood, say it.

Filed—polished. L. L. L. v. 1, n.
His discourse peremptory, his tongue filed.

Fil'd—defiled. M. iii. 1, n.
For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind.

Fil'd up—gave the last polish to. So. lxxxvi. n.
But when your countenance fil'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter.

Fills—thills, shafts. T. C. iii. 2.
An you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.

Find his title—deduce a title. H. F. i. 2, n.
Hugh Capet also,—who usurp'd the crown
Of Charles the duke of Loraine, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,—
To find his title, with some shows of truth, &c.

Find him not—find him not out. H. iii. 1, n.
If she find him not,
To England send him.

Fine—conclusion. M. A. i. 1, n.
And the fine is (for the which I may go the finer,) I will live a bachelor.

Fine (v.)—sentence. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

Fine (v.)—to bring to an end. Luc. n.
Time's office is to fine the hate of foes.

Fineless—endless. O. iii. 3, n.
But riches, fineless, is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

Fire-drake. H. E. v. 3, n.
That fire-drake did I hit three times on the head.

Fire-new—bran-new. L. L. L. i. 1, n.
A man of fire-new words.

First—noblest. Cor. iv. 1, n.
My first son,
Whither wilt thou go?

First and second cause. L. L. L. i. 2, n. (See R. J. ii. 4, i.)
The first and second cause will not serve my turn.

First-born of Egypt. A. L. ii. 5, n.
I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.

Fitted—subjected to fits. So. cxix. n.
How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted!

Fixed figure for the time of scorn. O. iv. 2, n.
But, alas! to make me
The fixed figure for the time of scorn
To point his slow and moving finger at.

Flap-dragoned it. W. T. iii. 3, n.
To see how the sea flap-dragoned it.

Flask—soldier's powder-horn. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
The carv'd-bone face on a flask.

Flaw—sudden gust of wind. H. 6. S. P. iii. 1, n.
Calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.

Flaws. M. M. ii. 3, n.
A gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report.

Flaws—crystallizations upon the ground moist with the morning dew. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.

Flaws—fragments. L. ii. 4, n.
But this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws.

Flaws—violent blasts. V. A. n.
Sorrow to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
Gusts, and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

Flecked—dappled. R. J. ii. 3, n.
And flecked darkness like a drunkard reels
From forth day's path.

Fleet—float. A. C. iii. 11, n.
Our sever'd navy too
Have knit again, and fleet, threat'ning most sealike.

Flemish drunkard. M. W. ii. 1, i.
This Flemish drunkard.

Florentius' love. T. S. i. 2, i.
Be she as foul as was Florentius' love.

Flourish (v.)—bestow propriety and ornament. M. M. iv. 1, n.
The justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit.

Flying at the brook—hawking at waterfowl. H. 6, S. P. ii. 1, n.
Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,
I saw not better sport these seven years' day.

FOR

Foil—leaf of metal used in setting jewellery. R. S. i. 3, n.
The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Foining—thrusting. M. A. v. 1, n.
Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foining fence.

Foison—plenty. T. ii. 1, n.
All foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

Foison of the year—autumn, or plentiful season. So. liii. n.
Speak of the spring, and foison of the year.

Follow'd—driven. A. C. v. 1, n.
O Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this.

Folly—wickedness. Luc. n.
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts.

Fond—indulgent. M. V. iii. 3, n.
I do wonder,
Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Fond—foolish. Luc. n.
True grief is fond and testy as a child.

Fond—foolish. So. iii. n.
Or who is he so fond will be the tomb
Of his self-love?

Fool-begg'd patience. C. E. ii. 1, n. (See L. L. L. v. 2, i.)
This fool-begg'd patience in thee will be left.

Fools. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
You cannot beg us.

Fools (court). L. i. 4, i.
Here's my coxcomb.

For—because. A. W. iii. 5, n.
He stole from France,
As 'tis reported, for the king had married him
Against his liking.

For—because. M. M. ii. 1, n.
You may not so extenuate his offence,
For I have had such faults.

For—on account of. T. i. 1, n.
I'll warrant him for drowning.

For—in consequence of. H. 6, S. P. iv. 7, n.
These cheeks are pale for watching for your good.

For—because. Cy. iv. 2, n.
Play judge and executioner, all himself,
For we do fear the law.

For—on account of, because of. M. iii. 1, n.
Yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine.

For—because. So. xl. n.
I cannot blame thee for my love thou usest.

For—instead of. H. v. 1, n.
For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her.

For catching cold—lest they should catch cold. G. V. i. 2, n.
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.

For coining. L. iv. 6, n.
No, they cannot touch me for coining.

For inequality. M. M. v. 1, n.
Do not banish reason
For inequality.

For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot. H. iii. 2, n. (See L. L. L. iii. 1, i.)
Whose epitaph is, For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

For the heavens—a petty oath. M. V. ii. 2, n.
Away! says the fiend, for the heavens.

For two ordinaries—during two ordinaries at the same table. A. W. ii. 3, n.
I did think thee, for two ordinaries, to be a pretty wise fellow.

Force (v.)—enforce. H. E. iii. 2, n.
If you will now unite in your complaints
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them.

Force (v.)—value, regard. Luc. n.
For me, I force not argument a straw.

Foredoes—destroys, undoes. H. ii. 1, n.
This is the very ecstasy of love;
Whose violent property foredoes itself.

Fore-done—destroyed. L. v. 3, n.
Your eldest daughters have fore-done themselves,
And desperately are dead.

Fore-slow—delay, loiter. H. 6, T. P. ii. 3, n.
Fore-slow no longer, make we hence amain.

FOR

Foreign commercial laws. C. E. i. 1, i.
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more, If any, born at Ephesus,
Be seen at any Syracusan marts and fairs,
Again, If any Syracusan born,
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him.

Forestall'd remission—pardon supplicated, not offered freely. H. 4, S. P. v. 2, n.
And never shall you see that I will beg
A ragged and forestall'd remission.

Forfeit (v.)—transgress. M. M. iii. 2, n.
Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind?

Forfeiters. Cy. iii. 2, n.
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.

Forgetive—inventive. H. 4, S. P. iv. 3, n.
Makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive.

Forked heads—the heads of barbed arrows. A. L. i. 1, n.
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads
Have their round haunches gor'd.

Formal—reasonable. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Why, this is evident to any formal capacity.

Form'd as marble will. Luc. n.
For men have marble, women waxen minds,
And therefore are they form'd as marble will.

Former ensign—ensign in the van. J. C. v. 1, n.
Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign
Two mighty eagles fell.

Forres, moors near. M. i. 2, i.
A Camp near Forres.

Forres, town of. M. i. 4, i.
Forres. A Room in the Palace.

Forspent—wearied out. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
After him came, spurring hard,
A gentleman almost forspent with speed.

Forspent—wearied. H. 6, T. P. ii. 3, n.
Forspent with toil, as runners with a race.

Forspoke—spoken against. A. C. iii. 7, n.
Thou hast forspoke my being in these wars.

Fortune—chance. T. N. K. ii. 2, n.
Arcite shall have a fortune,
If he dare make himself a worthy lover.

Forty pence—I lay forty pence. H. E. ii. 3, n.
How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence, no.

Forwearied—wearied. J. ii. 1, n.
Your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Forwearied in this action of swift speed,
Craves harbourage within your city walls.

Foul—homely. A. L. iii. 3, n.
I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Fouler. Cor. iv. 7, n.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights fouler.

Fountains. T. S. v. 2, i.
A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled.

Fourteen years' purchase. T. N. iv. 1, n.
These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report after fourteen years' purchase.

Fox, Mr., strange tale of. M. A. i. 1, i.
Like the old tale, my lord: "it is not so, nor 'twas not so; but, indeed, God forbid it should be so."

Fox—sword. H. F. iv. 4, n.
Thou diest on point of fox.

Foysons—abundant provision. M. iv. 3, n.
Scotland hath foysons to fill up your will.

Frame—ordinance, arrangement. M. A. iv. 1, n.
Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?

Frampold—fretful, uneasy. M. W. ii. 2, n.
She leads a very frampold life with him.

Franciscan order of friars. R. J. v. 2, i.
Going to find a barefoot brother out.

Frank—sty. H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.
Doth the old boar feed in the old frank?

Franklins. Cy. iii. 2, i.
A franklin's housewife.

Fraughting—constituting the fraught, or freight. T. i. 2, n.
The fraughting souls within her.

Free—free from offence. H. ii. 2, n.
Make mad the guilty, and appal the free.

Free expressions, old mode of. R. J. i. 4, i.
Of this, sir reverence, love.

GAP

Free maids. T. N. ii. 4, n.
And the free maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it.

Frescoes at Grove House. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, i.
The German hunting in water-work.

Frets. T. S. ii. 1, n. (See H. iii. 2, n.)
I did but tell her she mistook her frets.

Frets—wires fixed across the finger-board of a lute or guitar. H. iii. 2, n.
Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

Friar Tuck. G. V. iv. 1, i.
Robin Hood's fat friar.

"Friar of Orders Grey." T. S. iv. 1, i.
It was the friar of orders grey.

Frogmore. Duel of Dr. Caius and Sir H. Evans, place of. M. W. ii. 3, i.
Go about the fields with me through Frogmore.

From—before, a short distance off. P. iii. Gower, n.
The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
Now couches from the mouse's hole.

From sun to sun—from the rising to the setting of the sun. R. S. iv. 1, n.
And spur thee on with full as many lies,
As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun.

Front (v.)—face. H. E. i. 2, n.
And front but in that file
Where others tell steps with me.

Frontier. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.

Frontiers—forts. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.
Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets.

Froth and lime. M. W. i. 3, n.
Let me see thee froth and lime.

Fruit to that great feast. H. ii. 2, n.
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

Frush (v.)—break to pieces. T. C. v. 6, n.
I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all.

Fulfill'd—completely filled. Luc. n.
O, let it not be hild
Poor women's faults that they are so fulfill'd
With men's abuses!

Fulfilling bolts—bolts filling full. T. C. Prologue, n.
With massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts.

Full of bread. H. iii. 3, n.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as fresh as May.

Full of knight. M. W. iv. 2, n.
Pray heaven it be not full of knight again.

Fulvia, death of,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. i. 2, i.
Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Furbish (v.)—polish. R. S. i. 3, n.
And furbish new the name of John of Gaunt.

Fust (v.)—become mouldy. H. iv. 4, n.
Gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fust in us unus'd.

G.

Gadshill. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.
But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill.

Gait—progress, the act of going. H. i. 2, n.
To suppress
His further gait therein.

Galliard, coranto, sink-a-pace. T. N. i. 3, i.
Why dost thou not go to church in a galliard, and come home in a coranto?.....sink-a-pace.

Galliard—ancient dance. H. F. i. 2, n.
There's naught in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won.

Galliasses—vessels of burthen. T. S. ii. 1, n.
Besides two galliasses,
And twelve tight galleys.

Gallimaufry—confused heap. W. T. iv. 3, n.
And they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols.

Gallow (v.)—scare. L. iii. 2, n.
Gallow the very wanderers of the dark.

Gamester—adventurer at a game. A. L. i. 1, n.
Now will I stir this gamester.

Gamut. T. S. iii. 1, i.
Gamut I am, the ground of all accord.

Gaping—shouting. H. E. v. 3, n.
Ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

Gaping pig. M. V. iv. 1, n.
Some men there are love not a gaping pig.

GIR

Garboils—disorders, commotions. A. C. i. 3, n.
Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
The garboils she awak'd.

Gardon—guerdon. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
Gardon—remuneration.

Gargantua's mouth—the mouth of the giant of Rabelais. A. L. iii. 2, n.
You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size.

Garters. G. V. ii. 1, i.
He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

Gate—got, procured. L. C. n.
Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue encloses.

Gaudy night—night of rejoicing. A. C. iii. 11, n.
Let 's have one other gaudy night.

Gave—was inclined to, made a movement towards. L. C. n.
These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often gave to tear.

Gear—matter. M. V. i. 1, n.
I'll grow a talker for this gear.

Geck—person derided. T. N. v. 1, n.
And made the most notorious geck and gull,
That e'er invention play'd on.

General—people. M. M. ii. 4, n.
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part.

Generous—used in its Latin sense. M. M. iv. 6, n.
The generous and gravest citizens.

Gentle—high-born, noble. T. i. 2, n.
He's gentle, and not fearful.

Gentle—well-born. Luc. n.
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts.

German clocks. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
Like a German clock.

Germens—seeds of matter. L. iii. 2, n.
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once.

Germins—seeds of matter. M. iv. 1, n.
Though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together.

Gest. W. T. i. 2, n.
To let him there a month, behind the gest
Prefix'd for 's parting.

Get her love to part—prevail upon her love that we may part. A. C. i. 2, n.
I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her love to part.

Get within him—close with him. C. E. v. 1, n.
Some get within him, take his sword away.

Ghebers. L. L. L. iv. 3, i.
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde.

Ghost of Banquo. M. iii. 4, i.
Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeth's place.

Ghosts they have depos'd—ghosts of those whom they have deposed. R. S. iii. 2, n.
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd.

Gib—cat. H. iii. 4, n.
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib,
Such dear concernings hide?

Gib cat—male cat. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
I am as melancholy as a gib cat, or a lugged bear.

Giglot. Cy. iii. 1, n.
O, giglot fortune!

Giglots—wantons. M. M. v. 1, n.
Away with those giglots too.

Gilded loam. R. S. i. 1, n.
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.

Gilly'vors—gillyflowers. W. T. iv. 3, n.
The fairest flowers o' the season
Are our carnations, and streak'd gilly'vors.

Gimmal bit—double-bit. H. F. iv. 2.
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal bit
Lies foul with chaw'd grass.

Gimmers. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, n.
I think, by some odd gimmers or device,
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on.

Ging—gang. M. W. iv. 2, n.
There's a knot, a ging, a pack, a conspiracy against me.

Gird (v.)—scoff, jeer. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me.

Gird. Cor. i. 1, n.
Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

GIV

Give away thyself in paper—be ruined by the securities you give. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
Thou giv'st so long, Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly.

Give you good night—God give you good night. H. 1, n.
Give you good night.

Glamis Castle. M. i. 3, i.
Thane of Glamis.

Glasses. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, i.
Glasses, glasses.

Glassy margents of such books. Luc. n. (See R. J. i. 3, i.)
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books.

Gleek (v.)—joke. M. N. D. iii. 1, n.
Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

Gloves. G. V. ii. 1, i.
Sir, your glove.

Gloves, perfumed. W. T. iv. 3, i.
A pair of sweet gloves.

Glow-worm. M. N. D. iii. 1, i.
And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes.

Gloze (v.)—explain, expound. H. F. i. 2, n.
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France.

Glut (v.)—swallow. T. i. 1, n.
Though every drop of water swear against it,
And gape at wid'st to glut him.

Go to the world—marry. A. W. i. 3, n.
If I may have your ladyship's good-will to go to the world.

God before—God being my guide. H. F. iii. 6, n.
Yet, God before, tell him we will come on.

God 'ild you—God yield you, give you recompense. A. L. iii. 3, n.
God 'ild you for your last company.

God 'ild you—God requite you. H. iv. 5, n.
Well, God 'ild you!

God of love, old song of. M. A. v. 2, i.
The god of love.

God-eyld. M. i. 6, n.
Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God-eyld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Godfathers—jurymen so called. M. V. iv. 1, n.
In christening, thou shalt have two godfathers;
Had I been judge, thou shouldst have had ten more.

Goes every one to the world—every one is married. M. A. ii. 1, n. (See A. W. i. 3, n.)
Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sun-burned.

Goîtres. T. iii. 3, i.
Mountaineers
Dew-lapp'd like bulls.

Golding's Translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, passage in. Cy. i. 4, i.
I would have broke mine eye-strings, &c.

Gondola. M. V. ii. 8, i.
That in a gondola were seen together.

Gondolier. O. i. 1, i.
Transported with no worse, nor better guard,
But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier.

Good. Cor. i. 1, n.
We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good.

Good deed—indeed. W. T. i. 2, n.
Yet, good deed, Leontes,
I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady she her lord.

Good den—good evening. J. i. 1, n.
Good den, sir Richard.

Good kissing carrion. H. ii. 2, n.
For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a good kissing carrion.

Good life—alacrity, energy, spirit. T. iii. 3, n.
So, with good life,
And observation strange.

Good my glass—used metaphorically. L. L. L. iv. 1, n.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true.

Good my complexion!—small oath. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am caparisoned like a man, &c.

Good old Mantuan. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
Ah, good old Mantuan!

Good years. L. v. 3, n.
The good years shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep.

Goodwin Sands. M. V. iii. 1, i.
The Goodwins, I think they call the place.

Gor'd—wounded. So. cx. n.
Gor'd mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear.

GUA

Gormandize, origin of the word. M. V. ii. 5, i.
Thou shalt not gormandize.

Gossamer. L. iv. 6, i.
Hadst thou been aught but gossamer.

Gourd, fullam, high, low—cant terms for false dice. M. W. i. 3, n.
Let vultures gripe thy guts! for gourd and fullam holds,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor.

Gower's "Confessio Amantis." M. V. v. 1, i.
In such a night,
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs, &c.

Gower's "Confessio Amantis," extracts from. P. i. ii. iii. iv. v. i.

Graces, metrical. M. M. i. 2, i.
Lucio. I think thou never wast where grace was said.
2 Gent. No? a dozen times at least.
1 Gent. What? in metre?

Gracious—beautiful. So. lxii. n.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine.

Grain, high price of. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, i.
Never joyed since the price of oats rose.

Grand-guard—armour for equestrians. T. N. K. iii. 6, n.
Arc. You care not for a grand-guard?
Pal. No, no; we'll use no horses.

Grange—lone farmhouse. O. i. 1, n. (See M. M. iii. 1, i.)
What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;
My house is not a grange.

Grates—offends. A. C. i. 1, n.
Att. News, my good lord, from Rome—
Ant. Grates me.

Grave (v.)—engrave. V. A. n.
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it.

Grave our acquaintance. T. N. K. ii. 2, n.
Envy of ill men
Grave our acquaintance.

Gravedigger's song. H. v. 1, i.
In youth, when I did love, did love.

Graymalkin—cat. M. i. 1, n.
I come, Graymalkin.

"Green Sleeves." M. W. ii. 1, i.
Green sleeves.

Green-eyed monster. O. iii. 3, n.
O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.

Greenly—unwisely. H. iv. 5, n.
And we have done but greenly,
In hugger-mugger to inter him.

Gregory Nazianzen's poem. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
O, and is all forgot?

Grey—said to be used as blue. V. A. n.
Mine eyes are grey, and bright, and quick in turning.

Grief, in two senses: 1. bodily pain: 2. mental sorrow. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
Even so my limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief.

Griefs—grievances. H. 4, F. P. iv. 3; n.
He bids you name your griefs.

Griefs—grievances. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, n.
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.

Griefs—grievances. J. C. iv. 2, n.
Speak your griefs softly.

Grise—step. T. N. iii. 1, n.
Vio. I pity you.
Oli. That's a degree to love.
Vio. No, not a grise.

Grize—step, degree. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
For every grize of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below.

Growing to me—accruing to me. C. E. iv. 1, n.
Even just the sum that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholus.

Grunt—loud lament. H. iii. 1, n.
To grunt and sweat under a weary life.

Grype—bird of prey. Luc. n.
Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws.

Gualtree forest. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, i.
'Tis Gualtree forest, an't shall please your grace.

Guard (v.)—border, ornament. J. iv. 2, n.
Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before.

Guarded—ornamented, fringed. M. V. ii. 2, n.
Give him a livery
More guarded than his fellows'.

HAR

Guarded—trimmed. M. A. i. 1, n.
The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments.

Guarded—faced, bordered. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, n.
Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags,

Guards—hem of a garment. L. L. L. iv. 3, n.
O, rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose.

Guarini's "Pastor Fido." A. L. i. 1, i.
Fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Guidon—leader's standard. H. F. iv. 2, n.
I stay but for my guidon.

Guiled—deceiving. M. V. iii. 2, n.
Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea.

Guiltless blood-shedding—shedding guiltless blood. H. 6, S. P. iv. 7, n.
These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding.

Guilty to—guilty of. C. E. iii. 2, n.
But, lest myself be guilty to self-wrong.

Gules—red, in the language of heraldry. H. ii. 2, n.
Head to foot
Now is he total gules.

Gull. H. 4, F. P. v. 1, n. (See H. 4, F. P. v. 1, i.)
As that ungentle gull the cuckoo's bird.

H.

Hack—be common. M. W. ii. 1, n.
These knights will hack.

Haggard—term of falconry, wild. O. iii. 3, n.
If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off.

Haggards of the rock. M. A. iii. 1, i.
Coy and wild
As haggards of the rock.

Halcyon beaks. L. ii. 2, n.
Turn their halcyon beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters.

Half-faced groats. J. i. 1, i.
A half-faced groat.

Half-fac'd sun—device of Edward III. H. 6, S. P. iv. 1, n.
Whose hopeful colours
Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine.

Half-pence—used for small particles or divisions. M. A. ii. 3, n.
O! she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence.

Halidom—holiness. G. V. iv. 2, n.
By my halidom, I was fast asleep.

Hallowmas—1st of November. R. S. v. 1, n.
She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas, or short'st of day.

Hand fire-arms. A. W. iii. 2, i.
Smoky muskets.

Handfast—betrothal or contract of marriage. Cy. i. 6, n.
The remembrancer of her, to hold
The handfast to her lord.

Hand-kercher—handkerchief. J. iv. 1, n.
I knit my hand-kercher about your brows.

Handlest in thy discourse. T. C. i. 1, n.
Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach.

Handsaw—heron. H. ii. 2, n.
I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Hang by the walls. Cy. iii. 4, i.
And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,
I must be ripp'd.

Hang hog. M. W. iv. 1, n.
Hang hog is Latin for bacon.

Hannibal. H. 6, F. P. i. 5, n.
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists.

Happies—makes happy. So. vi. n.
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happies those that pay the willing loan.

Harlot—hireling. C. E. v. 1, n.
While she with harlots feasted in my house.

Harmuir. M. i. 3, i.
A Heath.

Harold, outrage committed on the body of. H. 4, F. P. v. 4, i.
With a new wound in your thigh.

Harpy. T. iii. 3, i.
Enter Ariel like a harpy.

Harried—vexed, tormented. A. C. iii. 3, n.
I repent me much
That so I harried him.

Harrows. H. i. 1, n.
It harrows me with fear and wonder.

HAT

Hat, penthouse-like. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
With your hat penthouse-like.

Hath put himself—he hath put himself. L. ii. 4, n.
'Tis his own blame; hath put himself from rest.

Haughmond Hill. H. 4, F. P. v. 1, i.
How bloodily the sun begins to peer
Above yon busky hill!

Haughty—lofty, spirited. H. 6, F. P. iii. 3, n.
These haughty words of hers
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot.

Hautboy. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
The case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him.

Have done—we, his successors, have done. M. W. 1, n.
Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred years.

Have I—if I have. H. 6, S. P. v. 1, n.
A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
On which I'll toss the fleur-de-luce of France.

Have their free voices—have sent their free voices. H. E. ii. 2, n.
All the clerks,
I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices.

Have uncheck'd theft—have their theft uncheck'd. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
Have uncheck'd theft.

Have what shall have no end. So. cx. n.
Now all is done, have what shall have no end.

Having—possession. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue.

Having—estate. W. T. iv. 3, n.
Of what having, breeding.

Havings. L. C. n.
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote.

Havock—no quarter. J. C. iii. 1, n.
Cry "Havock," and let slip the dogs of war.

Hawks' bells. A. L. iii. 3, i.
The falcon her bells.

He not look'd. A. C. iii. 4, n.
Most narrow measure lent me,
When the best hint was given him: he not look'd,
Or did it from his teeth.

Headly—headstrong, rash, passionate. H. F. iii. 3, n.
The cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of headly murther, spoil, and villainy.

Heart's attorney. V. A. n.
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

Heat—heated. J. iv. 1, n.
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot.

Heavy—dark. O. v. 1, n.
'Tis heavy night.

Hector's challenge in Chapman's Homer. T. C. i. 3, i.
Kings, princes, lords, &c.

Hector, death of—from Chapman's Homer. T. C. 5, i.
Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him?

Hector's horse. T. C. v. 5, i.
Now here he fights on Galathe his horse.

Hector, death of. T. C. v. 9, i.
Strike, fellows, strike.

Heers. M. W. ii. 1, n.
Will you go on, heers?

Hefts—heavings. W. T. ii. 1, n.
He cracks his gorge, his sides,
With violent hefts.

Helmed—steered through. M. M. iii. 2, n.
And the business he hath helmed, must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation.

Helpless—that afford no help. V. A. n.
As those poor birds that helpless berries saw.

Hemp. C. E. iv. 4, i.
Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.

Henbane. H. i. 5, i.
With juice of cursed hebenon.

Henchman—page. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman.

Henry of Monmouth. R. S. v. 3, i.
Can no man tell of my unthrifty son?

Henry V., character of. H. F. i. 1, i.
Hear him but reason in divinity.

Hent (v.)—take hold of. W. T. iv. 2, n.
And merrily hent the stile-a.

HOL

Hent—grasp. H. iii. 3, n.
Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent.

Her affections—what she affected, liked. T. N. K. i. 3, n.
Her affections (pretty,
Though happily her careless wear) I follow'd
For my most serious decking.

Her noble suit in court—noble suit made to her in court. L. C. n.
Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun.

Her sweet perfections. T. N. i. 1, n.
When liver, brain, and heart,
Those sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd,
(Her sweet perfections,) with one self king!

Heralds. H. F. iii. 6, i.
There's for thy labour, Montjoy.

Herb-grace. H. iv. 5, n.
There's rue for you, and here's some for me:—we may call it, herb-grace o' Sundays.

Here—used as a noun. L. i. 1, n.
Thou losest here, a better where to find.

Hereby—as it may happen. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
That's hereby.

Hermits—beadsmen, bound to pray for a benefactor. M. i. 6, n.
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Herne's Oak. M. W. v. 1, i.
Be you in the park about midnight, at Herne's oak.

Hide the false seems true. M. M. v. 1.
But let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid;
And hide the false seems true.

Hide fox—name of a boyish sport. H. iv. 2, n.
Hide fox, and all after.

Higher—upper. A. W. ii. 1, n.
Let higher Italy
(Those, bated, that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy) see, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it.

Hild—held. Luc. n.
O, let it not be hild
Poor women's faults that they are so fulfill'd.

Hilding—mean-spirited person. T. S. ii. 1, n. (See H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.)
For shame, thou hilding, of a devilish spirit.

Hilding—cowardly, spiritless. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen
The horse he rode on.

His—its. V. A. n.
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

His—its. V. A. n.
And hearing him thy power had lost his power.

His grand sea—the grand sea that he (the dewdrop) arose from. A. C. iii. 10, n.
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle-leaf
To his grand sea.

His honesty rewards him in itself. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
Tim. The man is honest.
Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself.

His subject—those subject to him. H. i. 2, n.
The lists, and full proportions, are all made
Out of his subject.

Hit the white—term in archery. T. S. v. 2, n.
'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white.

Ho—stop. A. C. iv. 2, n.
Ho, ho, ho!

Hob, nob—at random, come what will. T. N. iii. 4, n.
Hob, nob, is his word.

Hobby-horse. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
The hobby-horse is forgot.

Hoist with his own petar—blown up with his own engine. H. iii. 4, n.
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar.

Hold a goodly manor. A. W. iii. 2, n.
I know a man that had this trick of melancholy hold a goodly manor for a song.

Hold, or cut bow-strings. M. N. D. i. 2, n.
Enough. Hold, or cut bow-strings.

Hold, therefore—hold, therefore, our power. M. M. 1, n.
Hold, therefore, Angelo;
In our remove, be thou at full ourself.

Holding—burden of the song. A. C. ii. 7, n.
Then the boy shall sing;
The holding every man shall bear, as loud
As his strong sides can volley.

HUR

Holla—enough, soft, soft, no more of that. V. A. n.
What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering "holla," or his "Stand, I say"?

Holy crosses in Italy. M. V. v. 1, i.
She doth stray about
By holy crosses.

Holy wells. G. V. iv. 2, i.
At Saint Gregory's well.

Honesty—liberality. T. Ath. iii. 1, n.
Every man has his fault, and honesty is his.

Honey-seed—used by Hostess for homicide. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, n.
O thou honey-seed rogue! thou art a honey-seed.

Honeysuckle—used by Hostess for homicidal. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, n.
O thou honeysuckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers, and the king's?

Honorificabilitudinitatibus. L. L. L. v. 1, i.
Not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus.

Honour—a style of nobility. V. A. Dedication, n.
I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content.

Hoodman comes—allusion to the game of blind-man's buff, formerly called hoodman-blind. A. W. iv. 3, n.

Hoodman-blind—blind-man's buff. H. iii. 4, n.
What devil was 't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?

Hope (v.)—expect. A. C. ii. 1, n.
I cannot hope
Cæsar and Antony shall well greet together.

Hopes—expectations. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes.

Hopes not surfeited to death. O. ii. 1, n.
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.

Horse—used in the plural. T. S. iii. 2, n.
Pet. Grumio, my horse.
Gru. Ay, sir, they be ready.

Horse, qualities of the. T. S. iii. 2, i.
His horse hipped.

House—representative of the family. L. ii. 4, n.
Ask her forgiveness?
Do you but mark how this becomes the house?

Household's grave. T. N. K. i. 5, n.
This funeral path brings to your household's grave.

Houses in 1577. H. v. 1, i.
Imperial Cæsar, &c.

How the wheel becomes it—how well is this ditty adapted to be sung by spinners at the wheel. H. 5, n.
You must sing, Down-a-down, an you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel becomes it!

However—in whatsoever way. G. V. i. 1, n.
However, but a folly bought with wit.

Hoxes—hamstrings. W. T. i. 2, n.
Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd.

Hugger-mugger—a confused state, disorderly. H. iv. 5, n.
And we have done but greenly,
In hugger-mugger to inter him.

Human mortals. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
The human mortals want.

Humour of forty fancies—a collection of ballads. T. S. iii. 2, n.
An old hat, and The humour of forty fancies pricked in 't for a feather.

Humorous—capricious. A. L. i. 2, n.
The duke is humorous.

Humorous—full of humours. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.

Humorous—dewy, vaporous. R. J. ii. 1, n.
Come, he hath hid himself among these trees,
To be consorted with the humorous night.

Humphrey Hower. R. T. iv. 4, n.
Duch. What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever grac'd me in thy company?
K. Rich. 'Faith, none, but Humphrey Hower, that call'd your grace
To breakfast once, forth of my company.

"Hundred Merry Tales." M. A. ii. 1, i.
That I had my good wit out of the "Hundred Merry Tales."

Hungarian. M. W. i. 3, n.
O base Hungarian wight!

Hunts-up, song of. R. J. iii. 5, i.
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up to the day.

Hurly—loud noise. H. 4, S. P. iii. 1, n.
That, with the hurly, death itself awakes.

INDEX I.

HUR

Hurlyburly—uproar, tumultuous stir. M. i. 1, n.
When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.

Hurtled—clashed. J. C. ii. 2, n.
The noise of battle hurtled in the air.

Husband. M. M. iii. 2, n.
You will turn good husband now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Husbandry—frugality. M. ii. 1, n.
There's husbandry in heaven,
Their candles are all out.

Hymn attributed to St. Ambrose, passage from. H. i. 1, i.
The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn, &c.

Hyperion. H. i. 2, i.
Hyperion to a satyr.

I.

I care no more for—I care as much for. A. W. i. 3, n.
Or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for than I do for heaven,
So I were not his sister.

I will—I shall. C. E. iv. 1, n.
Perchance, I will be there as soon as you.

Ice-brook's temper. O. v. 2, n.
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper.

Iceland dog. H. F. ii. 1, i.
Thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland.

Ides of March,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 2, i.
Beware the ides of March.

Idle—useless, fruitless. C. E. ii. 2, n.
Usurping ivy, briar, or idle moss.

Idle—sterile, barren. O. i. 3, n.
Antres vast, and deserts idle.

Idle talk. A. C. v. 2, n.
Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir;
If idle talk will once be necessary,
I'll not sleep neither.

If—virtues of. A. L. v. 4. (See R. J. ii. 4, i.)
Your If is the only peace-maker: much virtue in If.

If I were a woman—allusion to men acting female parts. A. L. v. 4, n.
If I were a woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me.

If not denounc'd against us—if there be no especial denunciation against us. A. C. iii. 7, n.
If not denounc'd against us, why should not we
Be there in person?

Ilium. T. C. i. 2, i.
When were you at Ilium?

Ill—ill-usage. H. 6, F. P. ii. 5, n.
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good.

Ill-erected—erected for evil. R. S. v. 1, n.
Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower.

Ill-inhabited—ill-lodged. A. L. iii. 3, n.
O knowledge ill-inhabited! worse than Jove in a thatched house!

Imbar. H. F. i. 2, n.
And rather choose to hide them in a net
Than amply to imbar their crooked titles.

Immanity—barbarity. H. 6, F. P. v. 1, n.
It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Imogen's cookery, Mrs. Lennox's remarks on. Cy. iv. 2, i.
But his neat cookery! He cut our roots in characters;
And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been sick.

Imp—a shoot, a graft, applied to a child. L. L. L. i. 2.
The self-same thing, dear imp.

Imp (v.)—engraft, insert. R. S. ii. 1, n.
Imp out our drooping country's broken wing.

Impair—used adjectively, in the sense of unsuitable. T. C. iv. 5, n.
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath.

Impartial—very partial. M. M. v. 1, n.
Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause.

Impawn (v.)—engage. H. F. i. 2, n.
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person.

Imperseverant—most perseverant. Cy. iv. 1, n.
Yet this imperseverant thing loves him in my despite.

Impertinent—used by Launcelot for pertinent. M. V. 2, n.
The suit is impertinent to myself.

Impeticos thy gratillity. T. N. ii. 3, n.
I did impeticos thy gratillity; for Malvolio's nose is no whipstock.

IND

Impitious—unpitying. H. iv. 5, n.
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impitious haste,
Than young Laertes.

Impleach'd—interwoven. L. C. n.
And lo! behold these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd.

Importance—importunity. T. N. v. 1, n.
Maria writ
The letter, at sir Toby's great importance.

Importance—import. W. T. v. 2, n.
The wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say if the importance were joy or sorrow.

Importance—importunity. J. ii. 1, n.
At our importance hither is he come.

Importance—import. Cy. i. 5, n.
Upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.

Important—importunate. M. A. ii. 1, n.
If the prince be too important, tell him there is measure in everything.

Impose—command. G. V. iv. 3, n.
According to your ladyship's impose.

Impossible slanders. M. A. 1, n.
His gift is in devising impossible slanders.

In—into. R. T. i. 2, n.
But, first, I'll turn yon' fellow in his grave.

In—during. P. i. Gower, n.
And lords and ladies, in their lives,
Have read it for restoratives.

In at the window. J. i. 1, n.
Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch.

In blood—term of the forest. H. 6, F. P. iv. 2, n.
If we be English deer, be then in blood.

In good time—very well. M. M. iii. 1, n.
Duke. Leave me awhile with the maid; my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.
Prov. In good time.

In great measure—abundantly. M. A. i. 1, n.
Leon. Did he break out into tears?
Mess. In great measure.

In lieu—in consideration of, in exchange for. T. i. 2, n.
Which was, that he, in lieu o' the premises
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine.

In place—there present. H. 6, T. P. iv. 1, n.
But what said Henry's queen?
For I have heard that she was there in place.

In print—with exactness. G. V. ii. 1, n.
All this I speak in print.

In that—because. M. A. v. 4, n.
But in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised, and love my cousin.

In the quill—written. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
And then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

In their poor praise he humbled—in their poor praise he being humbled. A. W. i. 2, n.
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled.

In use—in trust. M. V. iv. 1, n.
He will let me have
The other half in use.

In your books—in your favour. M. A. i. 1, n.
I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your books.

Incensed—incited. R. T. iii. 1, n.
Think you, my lord, this little prating York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Incontinent—immediately. A. L. v. 2, n.
They have made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent.

Incony—knowing, cunning. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my incony Jew!

Increase—produce. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
The mazed world,
By their increase, now knows not which is which.

Index. H. iii. 4, n.
Ah me, what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Indies, Linschoten's map of, allusion to. T. N. iii. 2, i.
He does smile his face into more lines than are in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies.

Indifferent knit—party-coloured knitting. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Their garters of an indifferent knit.

Indifferently—tolerably well. H. iii. 2, n.
We have reformed that indifferently with us, sir.

INV

Indigest—disordered, indigested state of affairs. J. v. 7, n.
You are born
To set a form upon that indigest.

Induction. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Inexecrable—most execrable. M. V. iv. 1, n.
O, be thou damn'd, inexecrable dog!

Infection. R. S. ii. 1, n.
This fortress, built by nature for herself,
Against infection and the hand of war.

Infection. V. A. n.
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection from the dangerous year.

Infinite—infinity. G. V. ii. 7, n.
And instances of infinite of love.

Inform on that—give information on that point. A. W. iv. 1, n.
Inform on that.

Informal—without sense. M. M. v. 1, n.
These poor informal women are no more
But instruments of some more mightier member.

Ingag'd—pledged. A. W. v. 3, n.
I stood ingag'd.

Ingener—contriver, designer. O. ii. 1, n.
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,
And in the essential vesture of creation
Does tire the ingener.

Inhabit them. M. iii. 4, n.
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhabit them, protest me
The baby of a girl.

Inhabitable—uninhabitable. R. S. i. 1, n.
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable.

Inherit (v.)—obtain possession. G. V. iii. 2, n.
This, or else nothing, will inherit her.

Inherit us—cause us to receive. R. S. i. 1, n.
It must be great, that can inherit us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Inkhorn mate. H. 6, F. P. iii. 1, n.
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate.

Inn—dwelling. R. S. v. 1, n.
Thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee?

Insane root—henbane. M. i. 3, n.
Or have we eaten on the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner?

Insconce it—defend it, fortify it. C. E. ii. 2, n.
I must get a sconce for my head, and insconce it too.

Instance—example, corroboration. R. T. iii. 2, n.
Tell him, his fears are shallow, without instance.

Instances—solicitations, inducements. H. iii. 2, n.
The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

Instruction. O. iv. 1, n.
Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction.

Insurrection of the Roman plebeians against the patricians, Plutarch's account of. Cor. i. 1, i.
Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain.

Intend (v.)—direct. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
For if thou dost intend
Never so little show of love to her.

Intend to sell. T. C. iv. 1, n.
We'll not commend what we intend to sell.

Intending—pretending. R. T. iii. 5, n.
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion.

Intending—pretending. Luc. n.
Intending weariness with heavy spright.

Intendments—intentions. V. A. n.
And now her sobs do her intendments break.

Intention—eagerness of attention. W. T. i. 2, n.
Affection! thy intention stabs the centre.

Interess'd. L. i. 1, n.
To whose young love
The vines of France and milk of Burgundy
Strive to be interess'd.

Intituled—having a title to, or in. Luc. n.
But beauty, in that white intituled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field.

Intrinse—closely tied. L. ii. 2, n.
Which are too intrinse t' unloose.

Invention—imagination. M. M. ii. 4, n.
Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel.

Invis'd—invisible. L. C. n.
The diamond, why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invis'd properties did tend.

Invisible—unlooked at, disregarded. J. v. 7, n.
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them invisible.

Inward—intimate. M. M. iii. 2, n.
Sir, I was an inward of his.

Inward—intimate, in confidence. R. T. iii. 4.
Who is most inward with the noble duke?

Iona, cathedral at. M. ii. 4, i.
Rosse. Where is Duncan's body?
Macd. Carried to Colme-kill.

Irish rhyme. A. L. iii. 2, i.
I was never so be-rhymed since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat.

Irks—is irksome to. A. L. ii. 1, n.
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools,—
Being native burghers of this desert city,—
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads
Have their round haunches gor'd.

Irregulous—irregular, disorderly. Cy. iv. 2, n.
Conspir'd with that irregulous devil, Cloten.

Italian division of time. R. J. ii. 4, i.
Is it good den?

Italian gardens. M. V. v. 1, i.
How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!

Italian mode of interment. R. J. iv. 1, i.
In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier.

Italian nights. M. V. v. 1, i.
This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick.

Iteration—repetition. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
O, thou hast damnable iteration.

"Ivanhoe," reference to. R. S. i. 2, i.
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom.

J.

Jack. R. T. iv. 2, n. (See R. S. v. 5, n.)
Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke
Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.

Jack-a-lent—puppet thrown at in Lent. M. W. iii. 3, n.
You little Jack-a-lent.

Jack at bowls. Cy. ii. 1, n.
When I kissed the jack, upon an up-cast to be hit away!

"Jack Drum's entertainment." A. W. iii. 6, i.

Jack o' the clock—automaton that strikes the hours. R. S. v. 5, n.
While I stand fooling here, his Jack o' the clock.

Jacks—leathern drinking vessels. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without.

Jacks—small hammers, moved by the keys, which strike the strings of a virginal. So. cxxviii. n.
Do I envy those jacks, that nimble leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand.

Jades. H. F. iii. 7, n.
He is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Jades. H. 6, S. P. iv. 1, n.
And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night.

Janus, two-headed. M. V. i. 1, i.
Now, by two-headed Janus.

Jape—belonging to a buffoon, a japer. T. N. K. iii. 5, n.
Ye most coarse frieze capacities, ye jape judgments.

Jar o' the clock—tick of the pendulum. W. T. i. 2, n.
I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind
What lady she her lord.

Jauncing—jaunting, hurriedly moving. R. S. v. 5, n.
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jauncing Bolingbroke.

Jay of Italy. Cy. iii. 4, n.
Some jay of Italy,
Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd him.

"Jephthah, Judge of Israel," passage from the ballad of. H. ii. 2, i.
One fair daughter, and no more.

Jerkins. G. V. ii. 4, i.
My jerkin is a doublet.

Jerusalem Chamber. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, i.
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

Jesses—term of falconry, footstraps. O. iii. 3, n.
If I do prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
To prey at fortune.

Jest—a masque, or pageant. R. S. i. 3, n.
As gentle and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight.

Jews, toleration of, in Venice, and practice of usury by. M. V. i. 3, i.
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance here with us in Venice.

Jews in Venice. M. V. ii. 2, i.
Which is the way to master Jew's?

Jig—ludicrous interlude. H. ii. 2, n.
He's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps.

Jills—cups or measures of metal. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without.

"Jog on, jog on." W. T. iv. 2, i.
Jog on, jog on, the footpath-way.

John-a-dreams—heavy, lethargic fellows. H. ii. 2, n.
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing.

Johnson's criticism on Edgar's description of the cliff. L. iv. 6, i.
How fearful
And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low!

Joint-ring, Dryden's description of. O. iv. 3, i.
A joint-ring.

Joy—used as a verb. R. S. ii. 3, n.
The present benefit which I possess:
And hope to joy, is little less in joy,
Than hope enjoy'd.

Judicious—judicial. Cor. v. 5, n.
His last offences to us
Shall have judicious hearing.

Jump (v.)—risk. Cor. iii. 1, n.
And wish
To jump a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure of death without it.

Jump—just, exactly. T. N. K. i. 2, n.
Where not to be even jump
As they are.

Just—merely. T. And. iv. 2, n.
Ay, just a verse in Horace; right, you have it.

Just occasion. A. L. iv. 3, n.
And nature, stronger than his just occasion,
Made him give battle to the lioness.

Justicer. Cy. v. 5, n.
Some upright justicer.

Jutty (v.)—jut over. H. F. iii. 1, n.
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base.

K.

Katharine of France. H. F. iii. 4, i.
Alice, tu as été, &c.

Keech. H. E. i. 1, n.
I wonder
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun.

Keel (v.)—scum. L. L. L. v. 2.
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Keep (v.)—restrain. G. V. iv. 4, n.
A cur cannot keep himself in all companies.

Keep (v.)—care for. M. M. iii. 1, n.
Reason thus with Life:
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing
That none but fools would keep.

Keep (v.)—dwell. V. A. n.
And sometime where earth-delving conies keep.

Keeps—dwells. M. M. i. 4, n.
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps.

Kendal green—livery of Robin Hood. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Three misbegotten knaves in Kendal green came at my back.

Kenilworth, pageants at. M. N. D. iii. 1, i.
Let him name his name; and tell them plainly he is Snug the joiner.

Kerne. H. F. iii. 7, i.
A kerne of Ireland.

Kernes. H. 6, S. P. iv. 9, n. (See H. F. iii. 7, i., and M. i. 2, i.)
Of Gallowglasses, and stout Kernes.

Kernes and gallowglasses. M. i. 2, i. (See H. 6, S. P. iv. 9, n.)
Of kernes and gallowglasses is supplied.

Ketch—tub, cask. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-ketch.

Key-cold—cold as a key. Luc. n.
And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream.

Kill—ancient word of onset in the English army. L. iv. 6, n.
And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Killingworth—Kenilworth. H. 6, S. P. iv. 4, n.
My gracious lord, retire to Killingworth.

Kind—kindly affections. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Whether that thy youth and kind
Will the faithful offer take
Of me, and all that I can make.

Kind—natural. Luc. n.
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind.

Kindle (v.)—instigate. A. L. i. 1, n.
Nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither.

Kindly—naturally. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
This do, and do it kindly, gentle sirs.

Kindly gird—reproof meant in kindness. H. 6, F. P. iii. 1, n.
Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.

"King Cophetua," ballad of. R. J. ii. 1, i.
When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid.

Kings, of our fear. J. ii. 2, n.
We do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates,
Kings, of our fear.

King's chamber. R. T. iii. 1, i.
Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

King's evil, cure of. M. iv. 3, i.
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks.

King's wards. A. W. i. 1, i.
To whom I am now in ward.

Kiss—as a form of affiancing. R. S. v. 1, n. (See G. V. ii. 2, i.)
Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me,
And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.

Kissing cherries. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
Thy lips, those kissing cherries.

Knee—used as a verb. Cor. v. 1, n.
A mile before his tent fall down, and knee
The way into his mercy.

Knight, use of the term. Cy. iii. 1, i.
Thy Cæsar knighted me.

Knight of the sun. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.
Phœbus,—he, that wandering knight so fair.

Knot-grass—a low reptant herb. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made.

Knots—beds. R. S. iii. 4, n. (See L. L. L. i. 1, i.)
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd.

Knotted gardens. L. L. L. i. 1, i.
Curious-knotted garden.

L.

Labras—lips. M. W. i. 1, n.
Word of denial in thy labras here.

Lace (v.)—embellish, ornament. So. lxvii. n.
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And lace itself with his society.

Laced mutton. G. V. i. 1, n.
I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her, a laced mutton.

Lad of the castle. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
My old lad of the castle.

Lady of the Strachy. T. N. ii. 5, n.
The lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

Lady of my earth. R. J. i. 2, n.
She is the hopeful lady of my earth.

Lady brach—female harrier. L. i. 4, n.
Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when the lady brach may stand by the fire and stink.

Laid on with a trowel—coarsely. A. L. i. 2, n.
Well said; that was laid on with a trowel.

Lamentation of the French. H. F. v. Chorus, i.
As yet the lamentation of the French, &c.

Land-damn. W. T. ii. 1, n.
'Would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him.

Lapwing. C. E. iv. 2, i.
Far from her nest the lapwing cries, away.

Lash'd with woe. C. E. ii. 1, n.
Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe.

Latch (v.)—lay hold of. So. cxiii. n.
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, or flower, or shape, which it doth latch.

Latch them—lay hold of them. M. iv. 3, n.
But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Latch'd—fastened. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice?

LAT

Late—lately. R. T. iii. 1, n.
Too late he died that might have kept that title.

Late—recently. Luc. n.
I did give that life
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.

Late, five thousand. T. Ath. ii. 1, n.
And late, five thousand.

Lated—obstructed, hindered. A. C. iii. 9, n.
I am so lated in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever.

Latin. T. S. i. 2, i.
Nay, 'tis no matter, what he 'leges in Latin.

Latten bilbo—sword of thin latten plate. M. W. i. 1, n.
I combat challenge of this latten bilbo.

Laugh mortal. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep: who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Launch'd—lanced. L. ii. 1, n.
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, launch'd mine arm.

Laund—lawn, plain among trees. H. 6, T. P. iii. 1, n.
For through this laund anon the deer will come.

Laund—lawn. V. A. n.
And homeward through the dark laund runs apace.

Laund'ring—washing. L. C. n.
Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.

Laundry—launder or laundress. M. W. i. 2, n.
His cook, or his laundry.

Laurel—used adjectively. A. C. i. 3, n.
Upon your sword
Sit laurel victory.

Lavoltas. H. F. iii. 5, i.
They bid us—to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltas high.

Law, and heraldry. H. i. 1, n.
Who, by a seal'd compact,
Well ratified by law, and heraldry.

Lay by—stop. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Got with swearing—lay by.

Lead apes in hell—die unmarried. T. S. ii. 1, n.
I must dance bare-foot on her wedding-day,
And, for your love to her, lead apes in hell.

League, war of the. C. E. iii. 2, i.
Making war against her hair.

Leasing—falsehood. T. N. i. 5, n.
Now Mercury endue thee with leasing, for thou speakest well of fools!

Leave (v.)—part with. G. V. iv. 4, n.
It seems you loved her not to leave her token.

Leave—license. V. A. n.
Chiefly in love, whose leave exceeds commission.

Leaven'd. M. M. i. 1, n.
We have with a leaven'd and prepared choice
Proceeded to you.

Leek, custom of wearing the. H. F. v. 1, i.
Why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Leer—feature. A. L. iv. 1, n.
But he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Leer—complexion, hue. T. And. iv. 2, n.
Here's a young lad fram'd of another leer.

Leese (v.)—lose. So. v. n.
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Leese but their show; their substance still lives sweet.

Left on your right hand—being, as you pass, left. A. L. iv. 3.
The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand.

'Leges—alleges. T. S. i. 2, n.
Nay, 'tis no matter, what he 'leges in Latin.

Leiger—resident ambassador. M. M. iii. 1, n.
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leiger.

Lenten—sparing. H. ii. 2, n.
What lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you.

L'envoy. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
No l'envoy, no l'envoy, no salve, sir, but a plantain!

Less than kind. H. i. 2, n.
King. But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—
Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.

LIM

Lesser linen. W. T. iv. 2, n.
My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen.

Let (v.)—stay. W. T. i. 2, n.
I'll give him my commission,
To let him there a month.

Let (v.)—forbear. Luc. n.
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmatched red and white.

Let (v.)—obstruct. Luc. n.
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let.

Let them work. M. M. i. 1, n.
Then, no more remains:
But that, to your sufficiency as your worth, is able;
And let them work.

Lets—hinders. G. V. iii. 1, n.
What lets, but one may enter at her window?

Lets—obstructs. H. i. 4, n.
Unhand me, gentlemen;
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets me.

Let'st slip. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
Before the game's afoot thou still let'st slip.

Letter—syllable. Cy. iv. 3, n.
I heard no letter from my master.

Letters, formal conclusions of. M. A. i. 1, i.
Ere you flout old ends any further.

Letters, ancient forms of conclusions to. Luc. n.
So I commend me from our house in grief.

Level—aim. W. T. iii. 2, n.
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Levy. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy.

Lewd—wicked. R. S. i. 1, n.
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments.

Lewdly—wickedly. H. 6, S. P. ii. 1, n.
A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent.

Libbard—leopard. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
With libbard's head on knee.

Liberal—licentiously free. M. A. iv. 1, n.
Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain.

Liberal—licentious. O. ii. 1, n.
Is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor?

Liberal—unrestrained, uncontrolled. O. v. 2, n.
No, I will speak as liberal as the north.

Licence to kill (beasts during Lent). H. 6, S. P. iv. 3, n.
The Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a hundred lacking one.

Lie (v.)—reside. L. L. L. i. 1, n.
She must lie here on mere necessity.

Lie for you—be imprisoned in your stead. R. T. i. 1, n.
I will deliver you or else lie for you.

Liefest—dearest. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n. (See H. 6, S. P. i. 1, n.)
And, with your best endeavour, have stirr'd up
My liefest liege to be mine enemy.

Lies—sojourns, dwells. T. N. iii. 1, n.
The king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him.

Lies—dwells. H. 6, F. P. ii. 2, n.
To visit her poor castle where she lies.

Lifter—thief. T. C. i. 2, n.
Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Ligarius,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. ii. 1, i.
Here is a sick man, &c.

Light o' love. G. V. i. 2, i.
Best sing it to the tune of Light o' love.

"Light o' love." M. A. iii. 4, i.
Clap us into—"Light o' love."

Lightly—commonly. R. T. iii. 1, n.
Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

Like—probable. M. M. v. 1, n.
O, that it were as like as it is true!

Likeness—comeliness. M. M. iii. 2, n.
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Making practice on the times.

Likes—pleases. G. V. iv. 2, n.
How do you, man? the music likes you not.

Liking—substance. H. 4, F. P. iii. 3, n.
Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking.

Limbeck—alembic, part of a vessel through which distilled liquor passes. M. i. 7, n.
And the receipt of reason
A limbeck only.

Limited—legalised. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
For there is boundless theft
In limited professions.

LOS

Limited—appointed. M. ii. 3, n.
I'll make so bold to call,
For 'tis my limited service.

Limits—calculations, estimates. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight.

Lin'd—delineated. A. L. iii. 2, n.
All the pictures, fairest lin'd,
Are but black to Rosalind.

Line. T. iv. 1, i.
Come, hang them on this line.

Line—genealogy. H. F. ii. 4, n.
He sends you this most memorable line,
In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you, overlook this pedigree.

Linen, price of. H. 4, F. P. iii. 3, i.
Holland of eight shillings an ell.

Linstock—match. H. F. iii. Chorus, n.
And the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches.

Lion in Book of Job. M. M. i. 4, i.
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,
That goes not out to prey.

Lions make leopards tame. R. S. i. 1, n.
Give me his gage:—Lions make leopards tame.

List—limit, bound. T. N. iii. 1, n.
I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

List—bound, barrier. O. iv. 1, n.
Confine yourself but in a patient list.

Lists—limits. M. M. i. 1, n.
Your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice.

Litters. J. v. 3, i.
To my litter straight.

Little—miniature. A. L. iii. 2, n.
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show.

Little world. R. S. v. 5, n.
And these same thoughts people this little world.

Live in thy tongue and heart. M. M. i.
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart.

Livelihood—liveliness, cheerfulness. R. T. iii. 4, n.
What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any livelihood he show'd to-day?

Livery, the nature of suing out of. R. S. ii. 1, i.
Call in the letters-patents that he hath
By his attorneys-general to sue
His livery.

Livery. H. 4, F. P. iv. 3, n. (See R. S. ii. 1, i.)
He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery.

Livery coats. H. 6, F. P. i. 3, i.
Blue-coats to tawny-coats.

Living—estate, means of living. L. i. 4, n.
If I gave them all my living, I'd keep my coxcombs myself.

Load-star. M. N. D. i. 1, i.
Your eyes are load-stars.

Lob—looby, lubber, lubbard. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone.

Lockram—coarse linen. Cor. ii. 1, n.
The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck.

Loggats. H. v. 1, i.
To play at loggats with them.

Lombardy. T. S. i. 1, i.
Fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy.

Long of you—through you. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
'Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.

Long one—long reckoning. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, n.
A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear.

Longing—used as a substantive. M. M. ii. 4, n.
As to a bed
That longing had been sick for.

Lord have mercy on us—inscription on houses visited with the plague. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Write, "Lord have mercy on us," on those three;
They are infected, in their hearts it lies.

Lord's sake. M. M. iv. 3, n.
And, I think, forty more, all great doers in our trade, and are now for the Lord's sake.

Lordship—authority. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up
Unto his lordship.

Loss—exposure. W. T. ii. 3, n.
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!

Lost—caused to be lost. T. N. ii. 2, n.
That, methought, her eyes had lost her tongue.

LOT

Lots to blanks—the whole number to a proportion. Cor. v. 2, n.
It is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears.

Louvre. H. F. ii. 4, i.
He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it.

Love—used as the queen of love. C. E. iii. 2, n.
Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink!

Lover—mistress. M. M. i. 5, n.
Your brother and his lover have embrac'd.

Lovers—companions, friends. T. N. K. v. 4, n.
Lead your lady off;
And call your lovers from the stage of death,
Whom I adopt my friends.

"Lover's Complaint," ballad of. O. iv. 3, i.
She had a song of "willow."

Lowted—treated with contempt. H. 6, F. P. iv. 3, n.
And I am lowted by a traitor villain.

Lozel—one that has cast off his own good and welfare. W. T. ii. 3, n.
Lozel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.

Lucilius, capture of,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. 4, i.
Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

Lucrece, seal of. T. N. ii. 5, i.
The impressure her Lucrece.

Lucrece, Shakspere's. Cy. ii. 2, i.
Our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes.

Lucy family, arms of. M. W. i. 1, i.
The luce is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an old coat.

Ludlow Castle. R. T. ii. 2, i.
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fet.

Lud's town. Cy. iii. 1, i.
The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point (O, giglot fortune!) to master Cæsar's sword, Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright.

Luke's iron crown. R. T. iv. 1, i.
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain.

Lunatics, treatment of. T. N. iii. 4, i.
We'll have him in a dark room, and bound.

Lunes—courses, humours. M. W. iv. 2, n.
Your husband is in his old lunes again.

Lupercalian feast,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 2, i.
Our elders say, &c.

Lurch'd. Cor. ii. 2, n.
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords o' the garland.

Lush. T. ii. 1, n.
How lush and lusty the grass looks!

Lustick—lusty. A. W. ii. 3, n.
Par. Here comes the king.
Laf. Lustick, as the Dutchman says.

Lutestring. M. A. iii. 2, i.
His jesting spirit; which is now crept into a lutestring.

Lydgate's description of Priam's palace. Luc. n.
And little stars shot from their fixed places, &c.

Lyly's "Euphues and his England," passage from. H. F. i. 2, i.
So work the honey bees.

Lyly's "Alexander and Campaspe," passage from. Cy. ii. 3, i.
Hark! hark! the lark.

Lym—limmer, hunting dog. L. iii. 6, n.
Hound or spaniel, brach or lym.

M.

Macbeth's castle at Inverness. M. i. 5, i.

Macduff's castle at Fife. M. iv. 2, i.

Maculate—stained. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
Most maculate thoughts.

Made against you—closed against you. C. E. iii. 1, n.
Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Magnificoes—nobles of Venice. M. V. iv. 1, n.
Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes.

Mahomet. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, i.
Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?

Main—main land. L. iii. 1, n.
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main.

Main of light—mass or flood of light. So. lx. n.
Nativity, once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity.

Mained—lamed. H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, n.
Thereby is England mained, and fain to go with a staff.

Make (v.)—make up. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Will the faithful offer take
Of me, and all that I can make.

MAS

Make—invent. M. M. i. 5, n.
Sir, make me not your story.

Make it speak. H. iii. 2, n.
And there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak.

Make the doors—make fast the doors. A. L. iv. 1, n.
Make the doors upon a woman's wit.

Makeless—mateless. So. ix. n.
The world will wail thee, like a makeless wife.

Makes not up—does not conclude, decide. L. i. 1, n.
Election makes not up in such conditions.

Malkin. Cor. ii. 1, n.
The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck.

Mallet—mallard. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
There is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

Malt-worms—drunkards. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
None of these mad, mustachio purple-hued malt-worms.

Mammering—doubting, hesitating. O. iii. 3, n.
I wonder in my soul,
What you would ask me that I should deny,
Or stand so mammering on.

Mammets—puppets. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.
This is no world
To play with mammets and to tilt with lips.

Man in the moon. M. N. D. v. 1, i.
Myself the man i' th' moon do seem to be.

Man my haggard—tame my wild hawk. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Another way I have to man my haggard.

Manage—management, government. J. i. 1, n.
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

Mandragora—mandrake, a powerful opiate. O. iii. 3, n.
Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world.

Mane. O. ii. 1, n.
The chidden billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous mane.

Mane—used as a plural noun. V. A. n.
His braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end.

Manes of horses, superstition respecting. R. J. i. 4, i.
This is that very Mab
That plats the manes of horses in the night.

Mankind—masculine. W. T. ii. 3, n.
A mankind witch!

Mankind—woman with the roughness of a man. Cor. iv. 2, n.
Sic. Are you mankind?
Vol. Ay, fool: Is that a shame?

Manner. L. L. L. i. 1, n.
The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Manner, taken with the—taken with a stolen thing in hand. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n. (See L. L. L. i. 1, n.)
Thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner.

Manners—morals. A. L. iii. 2, n.
If thou never saw'st good manners then thy manners must be wicked.

Mansions, old mode of building. H. E. v. 2, i.
At a window above.

Mantua, notice of. R. J. v. 1, i.

Marches—boundaries, borders. H. F. i. 2, n.
They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

Marchpane—almond-cake. R. J. i. 5, n.
Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane.

Mark—cross. R. J. iii. 2, i.
God save the mark!

Marlowe's "Passionate Shepherd." M. W. iii. 1, i.
To shallow rivers, to whose falls.

Marlowe's "Hero and Leander," lines from. A. L. iii. 3, i.
Dead shepherd! now I find thy saw of might;
"Who ever lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?"

Marseilles—pronounced as a trisyllable. A. W. iv. 4, n.
His grace is at Marseilles; to which place
We have convenient convoy.

Martians, house of the,—from Plutarch. Cor. ii. 3, i.
What stock he springs of.

Martlemas—11th of November. H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.
And how doth the martlemas, your master?

Masks. G. V. iv. 4, i.
Sun-expelling mask.

MER

Masks. R. J. i. 1, i.
These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies' brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair.

Master of fence. M. W. i. 1, i.
At sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Master person. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
Good morrow, master person.

Mastick. T. C. i. 3, n.
When rank Thersites opes his mastick jaws.

Mated—made senseless. C. E. iii. 2, n.
Not mad, but mated; how, I do not know.

Mated—amated, dismayed. M. v. 1, n.
My mind she has mated, and amaz'd my sight.

Mated—confounded. V. A. n.
Her more than haste is mated with delays.

Material fool—fool with matter in him. A. L. iii. 3, n.
A material fool!

Mates—destroys, confounds. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
For that is good deceit
Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Maund—basket. L. C. n.
A thousand favours from a maund she drew.

May-day. M. N. D. i. 1, i.
To do observance to a morn of May.

Mazes. T. iii. 3, i.
Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders!

Meal'd—compounded. M. M. iv. 2, n.
Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous.

Mean (in music)—tenor. G. V. i. 2, n.
There wanteth but a mean to fill your song.

Mean (in music)—an intermediate part. L. L. L. v 2, n.
Nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly.

Means—tenors, intermediate voices. W. T. iv. 2, i.
Means and bases.

Means—resources, powers, capacities. L. iv. 1, n.
Full oft 'tis seen
Our means secure us; and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.

Meant love—meant as love. R. J. iii. 5, n.
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Measure—grave dance. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
To tread a measure with you on this grass.

Measure. R. J. i. 4, i.
We'll measure them a measure.

Measures—solemn dances. J. iii. 1, n.
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp.

Med'cine potable. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in med'cine potable.

Medea, Ovid's invocation of. T. v. 1, i.
Ye elves of hills, &c.

Meeds—merits. H. 6, T. P. ii. 1, n.
Each one already blazing by our meeds.

Meet—even. M. A. i. 1, n.
He'll be meet with you, I doubt it not.

Meiny—retinue, attendants. L. ii. 4, n.
They summon'd up their meiny, straight took horse.

Mendicancy, laws for the suppression of. L. iii. 4, i.
Whipped from tything to tything, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned.

Merchant—merchant-vessel. T. ii. 1, n.
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe.

Merchant—used in opposition to gentleman. R. J. ii. 4, i.
What saucy merchant was this?

Mercy—reference to Ecclesiasticus. M. V. iv. 1, i.
The quality of mercy is not strain'd.

Mere—sole, unmixed, absolute. M. M. v. 1, n.
Upon his mere request.

Mere—absolute. H. E. iii. 2, n.
To the mere undoing
Of all the kingdom.

Mere—entire. O. ii. 2, n.
Certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere perdition of the Turkish fleet.

Mere—absolute, certain. P. iv. 3, n.
Seldom but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere profit.

Mere—absolute. T. N. K. ii. 2, n.
I see two comforts rising, two mere blessings.

Mered—marked, limited. A. C. iii. 11, n.
At such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The mered question.

MER

Merely—absolutely. T. i. 1, n.
We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards.

Merely—entirely. A. C. iii. 7, n.
The horse were merely lost.

Mermaid—synonymous with syren. V. A. n.
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong.

Messes. W. T. i. 2, i.
Lower messes.

Metal of India. T. N. ii. 5, n.
How now, my metal of India!

Metaphysical—supernatural. M. i. 5, n.
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal.

Methinks, already. W. T. v. 3, n.
Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already—
What was he that did make it?

Methoughts—a form found in old writers. W. T. i. 2, n.
Looking on the lines
Of my boy's face, methoughts, I did recoil
Twenty-three years.

Mettle—temper, disposition. T. N. v. 1, n.
So much against the mettle of your sex.

Mew'd—term of falconry. R. J. iii. 4, n.
To-night she's mew'd up to her heaviness.

Micher—truant. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher?

Miching mallecho. H. iii. 2, n.
Marry, this is miching mallecho; it means mischief.

Middleton's "Witch." M. iv. 1, i.
Black spirits, &c.

Might—will. M. N. D. v. 1, n.
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.

Might—power. P. P. n.
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial might.

Mile-end. A. W. iv. 3. (See H. 4, S. P. iii. i.)
He had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end.

Mill-sixpences. M. W. i. 1, i.
Seven groats in mill-sixpences.

Milton, notice of a passage in. R. J. ii. 3, i.
The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb.

Mimic—actor. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
And forth my mimic comes.

Mine enemy. R. S. i. 3, n.
Norfolk,—so far as to mine enemy.

Mineral—mine, compound mass of metals. H. iv. 1, n.
Like some ore,
Among a mineral of metals base,
Shows itself pure.

Mines—undermines, seeks to destroy. A. L. i. 1, n.
And, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education.

Mingled damask. A. L. iii. 5, n.
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled damask.

Misconster—misconstrue. H. 6, F. P. ii. 3, n.
Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconster
The mind of Talbot.

Miscreate—spurious. H. F. i. 2, n.
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth.

Miser—wretch, miserable creature. H. 6, F. P. v. 4, n.
Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!

Misprising—undervaluing. M. A. iii. 1, n.
Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprising what they look on.

'Miss—amiss, fault. V. A. n.
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss.

Missingly—missing him. W. T. iv. 1, n.
But I have, missingly, noted he is of late much retired from court.

Mistaken—misapprehended. H. E. i. 1, n.
I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in 't.

Mo—more. Luc. n.
Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many mo?

Mo—more. L. C. n.
Found yet mo letters sadly penn'd in blood.

Mobled—muffled up. H. ii. 2, n.
The mobled queen?

Mock-water. M. W. ii. 3, n.
Ah, monsieur Mock-water.

Model—thing formed or fashioned. R. S. iii. 2, n.
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.

Modena, battle near,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. i. 4, i.
When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, &c.

MOR

Modern—common. A. C. v. 2, n.
As we greet modern friends withal.

Modern—trite, common. So. lxxxiii. n.
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short.

Modo and Mahu. L. iii. 4, i.
The prince of darkness is a gentleman;
Modo he's call'd, and Mahu.

Moiety. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
Methinks, my moiety, north from Burton here,
In quantity equals not one of yours.

Moiety—small portion, share. L. i. 1, n. (See H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.)
Curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety.

Moiety—portion. Luc. Dedication, n.
But a superfluous moiety.

Moiety—portion. So. xlvi. n.
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety, and the dear heart's part.

Moist star—moon. H. i. 1, n.
And the moist star,
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.

Moll Cutpurse. T. N. i. 3, i.
Like mistress Mall's picture.

Mome—blockhead. C. E. iii. 1, n.
Mome, malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!

Monarch. A. W. i. 1, n. (See L. L. L. iv. 1, i.)
And you, monarch.

Monarch of the north. H. 6, F. P. v. 3, n.
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes
Under the lordly monarch of the north,
Appear.

Monarcho. L. L. L. iv. 1, i.
A Monarcho.

Monopolies in the reign of Elizabeth. L. i. 4, i.
If I had a monopoly out, they would have part on 't.

Montagues and Capulets, badges of. R. J. i. 1, i.
Here comes of the house of the Montagues.

Montanto—term of the fencing-school. M. A. i. 1, n.
Is signior Montanto returned from the wars, or no?

Month's mind. G. V. i. 2, n.
I see you have a month's mind to them.

Monument of the victory. H. 6, S. P. iv. 3, n.
This monument of the victory will I bear.

Mood—caprice. A. W. v. 2, n.
I am now, sir, muddied in fortune's mood.

Moods—manner. H. i. 2, n.
Together with all forms, moods, shows of grief.

Moon—used in the sense of month. P. P. n.
To spite me now, each minute seems a moon.

Moor-ditch. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.
The melancholy of Moor-ditch.

Moors in Venice. O. i. 1, i.
The Thick-lips.

Moralize—comment. V. A. n.
Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize.

Moralize (v.)—interpret. Luc. n.
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight.

More and less—great and small. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
And more and less do flock to follow him.

More and less—greater and less. M. v. 4, n.
Both more and less have given him the revolt.

More gratulate—more to be rejoiced in. M. M. v. 1, n.
There's more behind that is more gratulate.

Morisco. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
I have seen him
Caper upright like a wild Morisco.

Morning, description of, in Venus and Adonis. R. J. iii. 5, i.
It was the lark, the herald of the morn.

Morning's love. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
I with the morning's love have oft made sport.

Morris-dance. A. W. ii. 2, i.
A morris for May-day.

Morris-pike—pike of the Moors. C. E. iv. 3.
He that sets up his rest to do more exploits with his mace than a morris-pike.

Mort o' the deer—note of the hunter's horn at the death of the deer. W. T. i. 2, n.
And then to sigh, as 'twere
The mort o' the deer.

Mortal—deadly. O. ii. 1, n.
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Mortal—deadly. V. A. n.
Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

MY

Mortal in folly—extremely foolish. A. L. ii. 4, n.
As all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Mortified man—hermit, one indifferent to the concerns of the world. M. v. 2, n.
For their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm,
Excite the mortified man.

Mortise—hole of one piece of timber fitted to receive the tenon of another. O. ii. 1, n.
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise?

Mot—motto. Luc. n.
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar.

Motion—puppet-show. G. V. ii. 1, n.
O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet!

Motion—puppet-show. W. T. iv. 2, i.
A motion of the prodigal son.

Motion—dumb show. Luc. n.
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold.

Motions—impulses. H. E. i. 1, n.
(Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions.)

Motions. H. iii. 2, n. (See G. V. ii. 1, n.)
I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

Motley—a fool. So. cx. n.
Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley to the view.

Mount—Mount Misenum. A. C. ii. 4, n.
We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at the Mount
Before you, Lepidus.

Mounted—term of falconry. H. F. iv. 1, n.
His affections are higher mounted than ours.

Mowes—mouths. H. ii. 2, n.
Those that would make mowes at him.

Moys. H. F. iv. 4, n.
Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi.
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?

Much—expression of contempt. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
What, with two points on your shoulders? much!

Much—ironical and contemptuous expression. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me much.
Apem. Much!

Much good dich—much good may it do. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Much Orlando—a great deal of Orlando. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Is it not past two o'clock? and here much Orlando!

Mufflers. M. W. iv. 2, i.
I spy a great peard under her muffler.

Mulmutius. Cy. iii. 1, i.
Mulmutius made our laws, &c.

Murdering piece—cannon. H. iv. 5, n.
This,
Like to a murdering piece, in many places
Gives me superfluous death.

Mure—wall. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n. (See H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, i.)
The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in.

Muscovites, costume of. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
And are apparel'd thus,—
Like Muscovites or Russians.

Muse (v.)—wonder. H. 6, S. P. iii. 1, n.
I muse, my lord of Gloster is not come.

Music—a source of discord amongst the commentators upon Shakspere. M. V. v. 1, i.
The man that hath no music in himself.

Music to hear. So. viii. n.
Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly?

Musicians. R. J. iv. 5, i.
Musicians, O, musicians.

Musit. T. N. K. iii. 1, n. (See V. A. n.)
You hear the horns:
Enter your musit, lest this match between us
Be cross'd ere met.

Musits. V. A. n.
The many musits through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Muss—scramble. A. C. iii. 11, n.
Like boys unto a muss, kings would start forth,
And cry, "Your will?"

Mutines—mutineers. H. v. 2, n.
Methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes.

My cake is dough—proverbial expression. T. S. v. 1, n.
My cake is dough: but I'll in among the rest.

MY

My part in him advertise. M. M. i. 1, n.
But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise.

My some rich jewel—some rich jewel of my own. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Or play with my some rich jewel.

Mysteries—artificial fashions. H. E. i. 3, n.
Is 't possible the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mysteries?

N.

Napkin—handkerchief. O. iii. 3, n.
Des. Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.
Oth. Your napkin is too little.

Napkin—handkerchief. L. C. n.
Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne.

Napless—threadbare. Cor. ii. 1, n.
Nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility.

Nashe's "Life of Jacke Wilton." H. E. i. 3, i.
Of fool, and feather.

Nature's copy. M. iii. 2, n.
But in them nature's copy's not eterne.

Nature's productions, philosophy of the use or abuse of. Cy. i. 6, i.
Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers.

Nautical knowledge of Shakspere. T. i. 1, i.
Boatswain, &c.

Needless—needing not. A. L. ii. 1, n.
First, for his weeping into the needless stream.

Neeld—needle. Luc. n.
And griping it, the neeld his finger pricks.

Ne'er the near'—never the nearer. R. S. v. 1, n.
Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;
Better far off, than near, be ne'er the near'.

Neif—fist. M. N. D. iv. 1, n.
Give me your neif.

Neif—fist. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n. (See M. N. D. iv. 1, n.)
Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif.

Nephew—term used generally for a relative. H. 6, F. P. ii. 5, n.
Plan. Declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.
Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me.

Nephews—grandsons. O. i. (See R. T. iv. 1, n.)
You'll have your nephews neigh to you.

Nether stocks—stockings. L. ii. 4, n.
When a man is over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.

New made—regenerate. M. M. ii. 2, n.
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

"News from Scotland," passage from. M. i. 3, i.
But in a sieve I'll thither sail.

Next—nearest. A. W. i. 3, n.
And I speak the truth the next way.

Nice—affected. A. L. iv. 1, n.
Nor the lady's [melancholy], which is nice.

Nice—weak. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch.

Nice—slight. R. J. iii. 1, n.
Bade him bethink
How nice the quarrel was.

Nice—trivial. R. J. v. 2, n.
The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import.

Nick—reckoning. G. V. iv. 2, n.
He loved her out of all nick.

Nicks him like a fool. C. E. v. 1, n.
His man with scissors nicks him like a fool.

Niece—grand-daughter. R. T. iv. 1, n.
Who meets us here?—my niece Plantagenet.

Night-rule—night revel. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Nightly gulls him with intelligence. So. lxxxvi. n.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence.

Nights of the early summer of the north of Europe. H. i. 1, i.
But, look, the morn, &c.

Nile, rise of the. A. C. ii. 7, i.
They take the flow o' the Nile, &c.

Nine men's morris. M. N. D. ii. 2, i.
The nine men's morris is fill'd up with mud.

Nine moons wasted—nine months unemployed. O. i. 3, n.
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have used
Their dearest action in the tented field.

OAT

Nine Worthies. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
Pageant of the Nine Worthies.

Nine years old—during nine years. M. M. iv.
One that is a prisoner nine years old.

No deal—in no degree. P. P. n.
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal.

No manner person—no sort of person. R. T. iii. 5, n.
Give order that no manner person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes.

No more—say no more. T. i. 2, n.
Ari. My liberty.
Pro. Before the time be out? no more.

No passage—no one passing. O. v. 1, n.
What, hoa! no watch? no passage?

No poynt—the double negative of the French. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
Biron. Will you prick 't with your eye?
Ros. No poynt, with my knife.

No reason can sound his state in safety. T. Ath. ii. 1, n.
It cannot hold; no reason
Can sound his state in safety.

Nobless English—English nobility. H. F. iii. 1, n.
On, on, you nobless English.

Nobody. T. iii. 2, i.
The picture of Nobody.

Noise—band of musicians. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
And see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise; mistress Tear-sheet would fain have some music.

Noise—music of the hautboys. M. iv. 1, n.
Why sinks that caldron? and what noise is this?

Non-payment, penalty for. V. A. n.
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?

Nonce—once, the one thing in question. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
I have cases of buckram for the nonce.

None for me—none on my part. R. S. i. 4, n.
'Faith none for me.

Nook-shotten. H. F. iii. 5, n.
In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Noontide prick—point of noon. Luc. n.
Ere he arrive his weary noontide prick.

Nor here, nor here, nor what ensues. Cy. iii. 2, n.
I see before me, man: nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues, but have a fog in them.

Not thinking on—being forgotten. H. iii. 2, n.
Or else shall he suffer not thinking on.

Note—knowledge. L. iii. 1, n.
Sir, I do know you;
And dare, upon the warrant of my note,
Commend a dear thing to you.

Noted weed—dress known and familiar, through being always the same. So. lxxvi. n.
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed?

Nott-pated—with the hair cut close. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Wilt thou rob this leathern jerkin, crystal button, nott-pated, agate-ring.

Nourish. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, n.
Our isle be made a nourish of salt tears.

Novum—a game at dice. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Abate a throw at novum; and the whole world again
Cannot prick out five such, take each one in his vein.

Now my dear lady. T. i. 2, n.
Bountiful Fortune,
Now my dear lady, hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore.

Nowl—noll, head. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
An ass's nowl I fixed on his head.

Number'd—numerous, numberous. Cy. i. 7, n.
And the twinn'd stones
Upon the number'd beach.

Numbers alter'd—the number of the metrical feet is altered. T. N. ii. 5, n.
What follows?—the number's altered!

Numb'ring clock. R. S. v. 5, n.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
For now hath time made me his numb'ring clock.

Nurture—education. A. L. ii. 7, n.
Yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture.

Nuthook. M. W. i. 1, n.
If you run the nuthook's humour on me.

O.

Oaths upon the sword. H. i. 5, i.
Upon my sword.

Ob—halfpenny. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Item, Bread, a halfpenny. Ob.

OLD

Oberon and Titania. M. N. D. ii. 2, i.
Ill met by moonlight, proud Titania, &c.

Objected—proposed, suggested. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Good master Vernon, it is well objected.

Obsequious—performing obsequies. H. 6, T. P. ii. 5, n.
My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
And so obsequious will thy father be.

Obsequious—funereal. H. i. 2, n.
And the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term
To do obsequious sorrow.

Obsequious—funereal. So. xxxi. n.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye!

Obsequiously—performing obsequies. R. T. i. 2, n.
Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.

Observed as they flew. L. C. n.
And had let go by
The swiftest hours, observed as they flew.

Obstacle—obstinate. H. 6, F. P. v. 4, n.
Fie, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle!

Octavia and Octavius Cæsar, meeting of, — from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 4, i.
A more unhappy lady, &c.

Odd-even. O. i. 1, n.
At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night.

O'er-dyed—re-dyed. W. T. i. 2, n.
But were they false
As o'er-dyed blacks.

O'er-look'd—enchanted. M. V. iii. 2, n.
Beshrew your eyes,
They have o'er-look'd me.

O'erparted—not equal to a part. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
A little o'erparted.

O'er-raught—over-reached. C. E. i. 2, n.
The villain is o'er-raught of all my money.

O'erstraw'd—o'erstrewed. V. A. n.
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd
With sweets that shall the truest sights beguile.

Oes—circles. M. N. D. iii. 2, n.
Than all yon fiery oes and eyes of light.

Of—with. M. i. 2, n.
From the western isles
Of kernes and gallowglasses is supplied.

Of all loves. M. W. ii. 2, n.
Send her your little page, of all loves.

Of all loves. M. N. D. ii. 3, n.
Speak, of all loves.

Of all 'say'd yet—of all who have essayed yet. P. i. 1, n.
Of all 'say'd yet, may'st thou prove prosperous.

Of rashness—on account of rashness. A. C. ii. 2, n.
If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.

Of season—when in season. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season.

Of your answer—for you to answer. M. M. ii. 4, n.
You granting of my suit,
If that be sin, I'll make it my morn prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Off-capp'd. O. i. 1, n.
Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Off-capp'd to him.

Offering—assailing. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
We of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement.

Office—business. T. i. 1, n.
A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather, or our office.

Officers of night—night guard. O. i. 1, n.
And raise some special officers of night.

Offices—rooms of hospitality. T. Ath. ii. 2, n.
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders.

Offices of a mansion. R. S. i. 2, i.
Unpeopled offices.

Old—wold. L. iii. 4, n.
Swithold footed thrice the old.

Old coil—great bustle. M. A. v. 2, n.
Yonder's old coil at home.

Old faced ancient—old patched-up standard. H. 4, F. P. iv. 2, n.
Ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient.

Old news—rare news. T. S. iii. 2, n.
Master, master! news, old news.

Old utis—extreme merriment. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
By the mass, here will be old utis.

OME

Omen—portentous event. H. i. 1, n.
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on.

Omens and prodigies,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. i. 3, i.
A common slave, &c.

On—of. M. i. 3, n.
Have we eaten on the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner?

On—let us go on. W. T. v. 3, n.
It is requir'd
You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still:
On: Those that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

On—of. J. C. i. 2, n.
And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus.

"On a day." L. L. L. iv. 3, i.
On a day, &c.

On his knee—down on his knee. Cor. ii. 2, n.
Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee.

Once—once for all. M. A. i. 1, n.
'Tis once, thou lovest.

Once—sometimes. H. E. i. 2, n.
What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd.

Once this—once for all. C. E. iii. 1, n.
Once this, — Your long experience of her wisdom.

One—pronounced on. G. V. ii. 1, n.
Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.
Speed. Why then this may be yours, for this is but one.

Oneyers. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
Burgomasters and great oneyers.

Opal—gem whose colours change when viewed in different lights. T. N. ii. 4, n.
Thy mind is a very opal.

Open room—common room. M. M. ii. 1, n.
It is an open room, and good for winter.

Ophelia's songs, music of. H. iv. 5, i.
How should I your true love know
From another one?

Opinion—reputation. H. 4, F. P. v. 4, n.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion.

Opinion—reputation. T. N. K. iii. 6, n.
Might breed the ruin of my name's opinion.

Opposite—adversary. M. M. iii. 2, n.
Or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite.

Opposite with—of a different opinion. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Be opposite with a kinsman.

Or—gold in heraldry. Luc. n.
Virtue would stain that or with silver white.

Or e'er—before, sooner than. T. i. 2, n.
I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallow'd.

Or e'er—before. J. iv. 3, n.
Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er we meet.

Orbs—fairy rings. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
And I serve the fairy queen,
To dew her orbs upon the green.

Order—rule, canon of ecclesiastical authority. H. v. 1, n.
Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd.

Ordnance. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, i.
Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin.

Orgulous—proud. T. C. Prologue, n.
The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd.

Ostent—display. M. V. ii. 2, n.
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam.

Ouphes—goblins. M. W. iv. 4, n.
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies.

Out—complete. Cor. iv. 5, n.
Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times.

Out of all cess—excessively. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
The poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess.

Out of all whooping—beyond all measure. A. L. 2, n.
And yet again wonderful, and after that out of all whooping.

Out three years old—quite three years old. T. i. 2, n.
Then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Out went the candle. L. i. 4, n.
So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.

PAR

Overflown—flooded, drowned. M. N. D. iv. 1, n.
I would be loth to have you overflown with a honey-bag.

Oversee this will. Luc. n.
Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will.

Overture for the wars. Cor. i. 9, n.
May these same instruments, which you profane,
Never sound more, when drums and trumpets shall
I' the field prove flatterers! Let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing, where steel grows soft
As the parasite's silk!
Let them be made an overture for the wars!

Ovid's Metamorphoses, passage in. W. T. iv. 3, i.
O, Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that, frighted, thou let'st fall
From Dis's waggon!

Ow'd—owned. R. T. iv. 4, n.
The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown.

Ow'd—owned, his own. L. C. n.
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd.

Owe—possess. L. L. L. i. 2, n.
For still her cheeks possess the same,
Which native she doth owe.

Owe—own. C. E. iii. 1.
What art thou, that keep'st me out from the house I owe?

Owe (v.)—possess. T. N. i. 5, n.
Ourselves we do not owe
What is decreed must be.

Owe (v.)—own. P. v. 1, n.
Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?

Owe—own. So. lxx. n.
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.

Owe, and succeed thy weakness. M. M. ii. 4, n.
Else let my brother die,
If not a feodary, but only he
Owe, and succeed thy weakness.

Owes—owns. J. ii. 1, n.
Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes it.

Owest—ownest. L. i. 4, n.
Lend less than thou owest.

Ox-yokes. A. L. iii. 3, i.
The ox hath his bow.

Oyes—proclamation (pronounced as a monosyllable). M. W. v. 5, n.
Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy oyes.

P.

Pack (v.)—contrive, arrange. T. And. iv. 2, n.
His child is like to her, fair as you are:
Go pack with him, and give the mother gold.

Packings—intrigues. L. iii. 1, n.
Either in snuffs and packings of the dukes.

Paddock—toad. H. iii. 4, n.
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib,
Such dear concernings hide?

Paddock—toad. M. i. 1, n.
Paddock calls.

Padua. T. S. i. 1, i.
Fair Padua, nursery of arts.

Pageants. G. V. iv. 4, i.
At Pentecost,
When all our pageants of delight were play'd.

Painted cloth. A. L. iii. 2, i.
I answer you right painted cloth, from whence you have studied your questions.

Painted cloth. Luc. n. (See A. L. iii. 2, i.)
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.

Paiocke—coin of about three farthings value. H. iii. 2, n.
And now reigns here
A very, very—Paiocke.

Pale (v.)—impale, encircle. H. 6, T. P. i. 4, n.
And will you pale your head in Henry's glory?

Palliament—robe. T. And. i. 2, n.
This palliament of white and spotless hue.

Pap of hatchet. H. 6, S. P. iv. 7, n.
Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the pap of hatchet.

Papers (v.)—H. E. i. 1, n.
And his own letter,
(The honourable board of council out,)
Must fetch him in he papers.

"Paradise Lost." M. N. D. i. 1, i.
Ah me! for aught that ever I could read, &c.

PAT

Parcel-gilt—partially gilt, party-gilt. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, n.
Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet.

Parish-top. T. N. i. 3, i.
Till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top.

Parle—speech. G. V. i. 2, n.
That every day with parle encounter me.

Parling—speaking. Luc. n.
But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling looks.

Parlous—perilous. M. N. D. iii. 1, n.
By'rlakin, a parlous fear.

Parlous—perilous. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Thou art in a parlous state, shepherd.

Parlous—perilous. R. J. i. 3, n.
It had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;
A parlous knock.

Part I had in Gloster's blood—my consanguinity to Gloster. R. S. i. 2, n.
Alas! the part I had in Gloster's blood
Doth more solicit me, than your exclaims.

Part with—depart with. C. E. iii. 1, n.
In debating which was best, we shall part with neither.

Partake (v.)—take part. So. cxlix. n.
Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I, against myself, with thee partake?

Partaker—confederate. H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, n.
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory.

Parted—shared. H. E. v. 2, n.
I had thought
They had parted so much honesty among them.

Parted—endowed with parts, talents. T. C. iii. 3, n.
That man, how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without, or in,
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath.

Parthians. Cy. i. 7, i.
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight.

Particular—letter of detail. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
Here at more leisure may your highness read;
With every course, in his particular.

Parting of Antony and his friends,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 9, i.
Friends, come hither.

Parts—parties, party. H. 6, S. P. v. 2, n.
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.

Pash. W. T. i. 2, n.
Thou want'st a rough pash, and the shoots that I have,
To be full like me.

Pass on—condemn, adjudicate. M. M. ii. 1, n.
What know the laws,
That thieves do pass on thieves?

Passage. A. W. i. 1, n.
O, that had! how sad a passage 'tis!

Pass'd—surpassed. M. W. i. 1, n.
The women have so cried and shriek'd at it, that it pass'd.

Passed—was excessive. T. C. i. 2, n.
All the rest so laughed that it passed.

Passes—passages. M. M. v. 1, n.
When I perceive your grace, like power divine,
Hath look'd upon my passes.

Passes—excels, goes beyond common virtues. T. Ath. i, n.
A most incomparable man; breath'd, it were,
To an untirable and continuate goodness:
He passes.

Passing—surpassing. H. 6, T. P. v. 1, n.
O passing traitor, perjur'd, and unjust!

Passionate—given up to grief. J. ii. 2, n.
She is sad and passionate.

Passy-measures pavin. T. N. v. 1, n.
Then he's a rogue and a passy-measures pavin; I hate a drunken rogue.

Patch—pretender. C. E. iii. 1, n.
Coxcomb, idiot, patch!

Patch—fool. M. V. ii. 5, n.
The patch is kind enough.

Patch a quarrel. A. C. ii. 2, n.
If you'll patch a quarrel,
As matter whole you have to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Patched fool—fool in a party-coloured coat. M. N. D. iv. 1, n.
But man is but a patched fool.

Path (v.)—walk on a trodden way, move forward amidst observation. J. C. ii. 1, n.
For if thou path thy native semblance on.

PAT

Patient—used as a verb. T. And. i. 2, n.
Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.

Patine—small flat dish or plate used in the service of the altar. M. V. v. 1, n.
Look how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold.

Paucas pallabris—few words. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
Therefore, paucas pallabris.

Paul's Walk. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, i.
I bought him in Paul's.

Paved fountain. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
By paved fountain, or by rushy brook.

Pax. H. F. iii. 6, i.
But Exeter hath given the doom of death,
For pax of little price.

Pay down for our offence by weight—pay the full price of our offence. M. M. i. 3, n.
Thus can the demi-god, Authority,
Make us pay down for our offence by weight.

Pearls down sleeves—pearls set on down the sleeves. M. A. iii. 4, n.
Set with pearls down sleeves.

Peat—pet, spoiled child. T. S. i. 1, n.
A pretty peat; 'tis best
Put finger in the eye—an she knew why.

Peel'd—shaven. H. 6, F. P. i. 3, n.
Peel'd priest, dost thou command me to be shut out?

"Peg-a-Ramsay." T. N. ii. 3, i.
Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsay, and "Three merry men be we."

Peevish—silly. C. E. iv. 1, n.
Why thou peevish sheep.

Peise (v.)—weigh. R. T. v. 3, n.
Lest leaden slumber peise me down to-morrow.

Peised—poised. J. ii. 2, n.
The world, who of itself is peised well,
Made to run even.

Peize (v.)—keep in suspense, upon the balance. M. V. iii. 2, n.
I speak too long; but 'tis to peize the time.

Pelican. H. iv. 5, i.
Like the kind, life-rend'ring pelican.

Pelleted—formed into pellets, or small balls. L. C. n.
Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.

Pelt (v.)—to be clamorous, to discharge hasty words as pellets. Luc. n.
Another smother'd seems to pelt and swear.

Pelting—petty, contemptible. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
Have every pelting river made so proud.

Pelting—paltry, petty. R. S. ii. 1, n.
Like to a tenement, or pelting farm.

Pelting—petty, of little worth. L. ii. 3, n. (See R. S. ii. 1, n.)
Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes and mills.

Pelting—petty. T. C. iv. 5, n.
We have had pelting wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Penalty of Adam. A. L. ii. 1, n.
Here feel we not the penalty of Adam.

Penitent—in the sense of doing penance. C. E. i. 2, n.
But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to-day.

Penner—case for holding pens. T. N. K. iii. 5, n.
At whose great feet I offer up my penner.

Pennyworth of sugar. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n. (See H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.)
To sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar.

Pense—pronounced as a dissyllable. M. W. v. 5, n.
And, Hony soit qui mal y pense, write.

Pensioners. M. W. ii. 2, i.
Nay, which is more, pensioners.

Pensioners—courtiers. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
The cowslips tall her pensioners be.

Pepper-gingerbread—spice gingerbread. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
And leave in sooth,
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread,
To velvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Perfect—assured. W. T. iii. 3, n.
Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia?

Perfect—assured. Cy. iii. 1, n.
I am perfect
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for
Their liberties, are now in arms.

Perfuming rooms. M. A. i. 3, i.
Smoking a musty room.

Periapts—amulets, charms. H. 6, F. P. v. 3, n.
Now help, ye charming spells, and periapts.

PIP

Period—end. M. W. iv. 2, n.
There would be no period to the jest.

Perish—used actively. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.

Periwig. G. V. iv. 4, i.
A colour'd periwig.

Perjure, wearing papers. L. L. L. iv. 3, n.
He comes in like a perjure, wearing papers.

Perspectives. R. S. ii. 2, i.
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion,—eyed awry,
Distinguish form.

Pervert (v.)—avert. Cy. ii. 4, n.
Let 's follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Peruse (v.)—examine. H. iv. 7, n.
He, being remiss,
Most generous, and free from all contriving,
Will not peruse the foils.

Pew-fellow—companion, occupiers of the same seat. R. T. iv. 4, n.
This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,
And makes her pew-fellow with others' moan.

Pheere—companion, mate. P. i. Gower, n.
The king unto him took a pheere,
Who died and left a female heir.

Pheese (v.)—to beat. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
I'll pheese you, in faith.

Philip?—sparrow! J. i. 1, n.
Gur. Good leave, good Philip.
Bast. Philip?—sparrow!

Phill-horse—horse in the shafts. M. V. ii. 2, n.
Thou hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbin my phill-horse has on his tail.

Philosopher's two stones. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
And it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me.

Phraseology of the time of Elizabeth. H. i. 2, i.
More than the scope
Of these dilated articles allow.

Pick (v.)—pitch. Cor. i. 1, n.
As high
As I could pick my lance.

Picked—trimmed. L. L. L. v. 1.
He is too picked.

Picked—spruce, affected, smart. H. v. 1, n.
The age is grown so picked.

Picked man of countries. J. i. 1, n.
Why then I suck my teeth and catechise
My picked man of countries.

Pickers and stealers—hands. H. iii. 2, n.
So I do still, by these pickers and stealers.

Pickt-hatch. M. W. ii. 2, n.
To your manor of Pickt-hatch, go.

Picture—person. G. V. ii. 4, n.
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld.

Pierced—penetrated. O. i. 3, n.
I never yet did hear
That the bruis'd heart was pierced through the ear.

Pight—settled, pitched. L. ii. 1, n.
When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it.

Pilcher—scabbard. R. J. iii. 1, n.
Will you pluck your sword out of his pilcher by the ears?

Pilgrims. G. V. ii. 7, i.
A true-devoted pilgrim.

Pill'd—peeled. M. V. i. 3, n.
The skilful shepherd pill'd me certain wands.

Pillory. G. V. iv. 4, i.
I have stood on the pillory.

Pin—centre of a target. R. J. ii. 4, n.
The very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft.

Pin and web—cataract in the eye. W. T. i. 2, n. (See L. iii. 4, n.)
And all eyes blind
With the pin and web.

Pinch'd—painted. G. V. iv. 4, n.
And pinch'd the lily-tincture of her face.

Pinch'd—petty, contemptible. W. T. ii. 1, n.
He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a pinch'd thing.

Pinnace—small vessel attached to a larger. M. W. i. 3, n.
Sail like my pinnace to these golden shores.

Pioned and twilled brims. T. iv. 1, n.
Thy banks with pioned and twilled brims,
Which spongy April at thy hest betrims.

Pipe-wine. M. W. iii. 2, n.
I think I shall drink in pipe-wine first with him.

Pipes of corn. M. N. D. ii. 2, i.
Playing on pipes of corn.

POL

Pittie-ward. M. W. iii. 1, n.
Marry, sir, the pittie-ward, the park-ward.

Place—abiding-place. A. L. ii. 3, n.
This is no place, this house is but a butchery.

Places—honours. W. T. i. 2, n.
Thy places shall
Still neighbour mine.

Planched—planked, made of boards. M. M. iv.
And to that vineyard is a planched gate.

Plantagenet. J. i. 1, i.
Arise sir Richard, and Plantagenet.

Plantain-leaf. R. J. i. 2, i.
Your plantain-leaf is excellent for that.

Plate armour. H. F. iv. Chorus, i.
With busy hammers closing rivets up.

Plates—pieces of silver money. A. C. v. 2, n.
Realms and islands were
As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Platforms—plans. H. 6, F. P. ii. 1, n.
And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Platonism. H. F. i. 2, i.
For government, &c.

Plausibly—with expressions of applause, with acclamation. Luc. n.
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

Play-pheers—play-fellows. T. N. K. iv. 3, n.
Learn what maids have been her companions and play-pheers.

Play the men—behave like men. T. i. 1, n.
Where's the master? Play the men.

Pleach'd—folded. A. C. iv. 12, n.
Thy master thus with pleach'd arms.

Please you wit—be pleased to know. P. Gower, iv. 4, n.
Now please you wit
The epitaph is for Marina writ.

Plighted—plaited, folded. L. i. 1, n.
Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides.

Plot—spot. H. 6, S. P. ii. 2, n.
And, in this private plot, be we the first
That shall salute our rightful sovereign.

Pluck off—descend. H. E. ii. 3, n.
Old L. What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?
Anne. No, in truth.
Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a little;
I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to.

Plurisy—abundance. H. iv. 7, n.
For goodness, growing to a plurisy,
Dies in his own too-much.

Plurisy—fulness. T. N. K. v. 1, n. (See H. iv. 7, n.)
That heal'st with blood
The earth when it is sick, and cur'st the world
Of the plurisy of people.

Plutarch's description of the prowess of Coriolanus. Cor. i. 3, i.
To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak.

Plutarch's narrative of the war against the Volsces. Cor. i. 4, i.
Before Corioli.

Pockets in stays. G. V. iii. 1, i.
Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.

Pockets in stays. H. ii. 2, n. (See G. V. iii. 1, i.)
In her excellent white bosom, these.

Poesy—motto. H. iii. 2, n.
Is this the prologue, or the poesy of a ring?

Point—particular spot. M. iv. 3, n.
With ten thousand warlike men,
Already at a point.

Point-devise—minutely exact. A. L. iii. 2, n. (See T. N. ii. 5, n.)
You are rather point-devise in your accoutrements.

Point-devise—exactly. T. N. ii. 5, n.
I will be point-devise, the very man.

Point-devise—nice to excess. L. L. L. v. 1, n.
Such insociable and point-devise companions.

Poise—balance. O. iii. 3, n.
Nay, when I have a suit
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poise and difficult weight,
And fearful to be granted.

Poisons, laws respecting the sale of. R. J. v. 1, i.
Whose sale is present death in Mantua.

Poking-sticks. W. T. iv. 3, i.
Poking-sticks of steel.

Polacks—Poles. H. i. 1, n.
He smote the sledded Polacks on the ice.

POL

Politic worms. H. iv. 3, n.
A certain convocation of politic e'en at him.

Polled—cleared. Cor. iv. 5, n.
He will mow all down before him, and leave his passage polled.

Pomander. W. T. iv. 3, i.
Pomander.

Pomegranate-tree. R. J. iii. 5, t.
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate-tree.

Pomewater—a species of apple. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
Ripe as a pomewater.

Poor fool is hang'd. L. v. 3, n.
And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no life.

Poor John—hake dried and salted. R. J. i. 1, n.
'Tis well thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John.

Porpentine. C. E. iii. 1, n.
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porpentine.

Porpentine—porcupine. H. i. 5, n.
And each particular hair to stand an end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine.

Port—state, show. T. S. i. 1, n.
Keep house, and port, and servants, as I should.

Port—appearance, carriage. M. V. i. 1, n.
By something showing a more swelling port.

Portable. M. iv. 3, n.
All these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd.

Portage—port-holes. H. F. iii. 1, n.
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon.

Possess (v.)—inform. T. N. ii. 3, n.
Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Possess'd—informed. M. V. i. 3, n.
Is he yet possess'd
How much you would?

Possess'd—informed. M. M. iv. 1, n.
And that I have possess'd him, my most stay
Can be but brief.

Possess'd. R. S. ii. 1, n.
Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd,
Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.

Possessions, in two senses: 1, lands; 2, mental endowments. G. V. v. 2, n.
Thu. Considers she my possessions?
Pro. O, ay; and pities them.
Thu. Wherefore?
Pro. That they are out by lease.

Post indeed. C. E. i. 2, n.
If I return, I shall be post indeed.

Powder-flask. R. J. iii. 3, i.
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask.

Power of medicine, experiments upon the. Cy. i. 6, i.
Your highness
Shall from this practice but make hard your heart.

Practice—craft, subornation. M. M. v. 1, n.
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour,
In hateful practice.

Practice—artifice. H. E. i. 1, n.
I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Prank'd up—dressed splendidly, decorated. W. T. iv. 3, n.
And me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up.

Prayers cross. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Amen:
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Precise. M. M. iii. 1, n.
The precise Angelo?

Precisian. M. W. ii. 1, n.
Though love use reason for his precisian.

Preferred—offered. M. N. D. iv. 2, n.
The short and the long is, our play is preferred.

Premises of homage—circumstances of homage premised. T. i. 2, n.
In lieu o' the premises
Of homage, and I know not how much tribute.

Presence. J. i. 1, n.
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside.

Presents of wine. M. W. ii. 2, i.
Hath sent your worship a morning's draught of sack.

Prest—ready. M. V. i. 1, n.
And I am prest unto it.

Prest—ready. P. iv. Gower, n.
The pregnant instrument of wrath
Prest for this blow.

Prester John. M. A. ii. 1, i.
Bring you the length of Prester John's foot.

PRO

Pretence—design. G. V. iii. 1, n.
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Pretence—design. W. T. iii. 2, n.
The pretence thereof being by circumstances partly laid open.

Pretence—purpose. L. i. 2, n.
I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

Pretend—intend. H. 6, F. P. iv. 1, n.
And none your foes but such as shall pretend
Malicious practices against his state.

Pretend—portend. H. 6, F. P. iv. 1, n.
Or doth this churlish superscription
Pretend some alteration in good will?

Pretend (v.)—propose. M. ii. 4, n.
What good could they pretend?

Pretended—intended. G. V. ii. 6, n.
Of their disguising, and pretended flight.

Pretended—proposed. Luc. n.
Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended.

Prevented—anticipated, gone before. T. N. iii. 1, n.
I will answer you with gait and entrance: But we are prevented.

Price of sheep. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
A score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Prick-song—music pricked, or noted, down. R. J. ii. 4, n.
He fights as you sing prick-song.

Pricket. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
'Twas a pricket.

Prince of cats. R. J. ii. 4, n.
Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?
Mer. More than prince of cats.

Principals—strongest timbers of a building. P. iii. 2, n.
Sir, our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook as the earth did quake;
The very principals did seem to rend,
And all to topple.

Princox—coxcomb. R. J. i. 5, n.
You are a princox; go.

Priser. A. L. ii. 3, n.
The bony priser of the humorous duke.

Probal—probable. O. ii. 3, n.
When this advice is free, I give, and honest,
Probal to thinking, and indeed the course
To win the Moor again.

Process—summons. A. C. i. 1, n.
Where's Fulvia's process?

Procures. P. P. n.
My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;
With sighs so deep,
Procures to weep,
In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight.

Prodigious—preternatural. J. iii. 1, n.
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious.

Proface—much good may it do you. H. 4, S. P. v. 3, n.
Master page, good master page, sit: proface!

Profession—declaration of purpose. A. W. ii. 1, n.
With one, that, in her sex, her years, profession.

Projection—forecast, preparation. H. F. ii. 4, n.
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;
Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,
Doth like a miser spoil his coat with scanting
A little cloth.

Prologue arm'd. T. C. Prologue, n.
And hither am I come
A prologue arm'd.

Promis'd end—end of the world foretold in the Scriptures. L. v. 3, n.
Kent. Is this the promis'd end?
Edg. Or image of that horror?

Prompture—suggestion. M. M. ii. 4, n.
I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood.

Prone—humble. M. M. i. 3, n.
For in her youth
There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men.

Prone—forward. Cy. v. 4, n.
Unless a man would marry a gallows, and beget young gibbets, I never saw one so prone.

Prone—having inclination or propensity, self-willed, headstrong. Luc. n.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!

Propagation. M. M. i. 3, n.
Only for propagation of a dower
Remaining in the coffer of her friends.

Proper-false—handsome-false. T. N. ii. 2, n.
How easy is it for the proper-false
In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!

PUZ

Properties—a theatrical phrase. M. N. D. i. 2, n.
In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties.

Prophecies. L. iii. 2, i.
When priests are more in word than matter.

Propose—conversation. M. A. iii. 1, n.
There will she hide her,
To listen our propose.

Proposed—purposed. H. iv. 4, n.
Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?
Cap. They are of Norway, sir.
Ham. How proposed, sir?

Protest (v.)—declare openly. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
Do villainy, do, since you protest to do 't,
Like workmen.

Proud to be so valiant—proud of being so valiant. Cor. i. 1, n.
The present wars devour him: he is grown
Too proud to be so valiant.

Provost—keeper of prisoners. M. M. ii. 1, n.
Enter Angelo, Escalus, a Justice, Provost, and other Attendants.

Pruning—preening, trimming up. L. L. L. iv. 3.
Or spend a minute's time
In pruning me.

Public shows. T. ii. 2, i.
Were I in England now, &c.

Puck. M. N. D. ii. 1, i.
That shrewd and knavish sprite,
Call'd Robin Good-fellow.

Pudder—pother. L. iii. 2, n.
Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pudder o'er our heads.

Pugging. W. T. iv. 2, n.
Doth set my pugging tooth on edge.

Puisny—inferior. A. L. iii. 4, n.
As a puisny tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose.

Puke-stocking—puce stocking. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Nott-pated, agate-ring, puke-stocking.

Pull in resolution. M. v. 5, n.
I pull in resolution; and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend.

Pump—shoe. R. J. ii. 4, n.
Why, then is my pump well flowered.

Pun (v.)—pound. T. C. ii. 1, n.
He would pun thee into shivers with his fist.

Pupil age—young age. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
Since the old days of goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight.

Purchase—theft. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n. (See R. S. iv. 1, n.)
Thou shalt have a share in our purchase.

Puritans. T. N. ii. 3, i.
Dost thou think because thou art virtuous, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Puritans, allusion to. A. W. i. 3, i.
Though honesty be no puritan, yet it will do no hurt; it will wear the surplice of humility over the black gown of a big heart.

Purl'd. Luc. n.
Thin winding breath, which purl'd up to the sky.

Push—thrust, defiance. M. A. v. 1, n.
And made a push at chance and sufferance.

Put on (v.)—instigate. Cy. v. 1, n.
Gods! if you
Should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never
Had liv'd to put on this.

Put to know—cannot avoid knowing. M. M. i. 1, n.
Since I am put to know, that your own science.

Puts the period often from his place. Luc. n.
She puts the period often from his place,
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks.

Putter-out. T. iii. 3, n.
Which now we find,
Each putter-out of five for one will bring us
Good warrant of.

Puttest up—puttest aside. R. J. iii. 3, n.
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou puttest up thy fortune and thy love.

Putting on—incitement. M. M. iv. 2, n.
Lord Angelo, belike, thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting on.

Puttock—kite, worthless species of hawk. Cy. i. 2, n.
I chose an eagle,
And did avoid a puttock.

Puzzel—dirty drab. H. 6, F. P. i. 4, n.
Pucelle or puzzel, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels.

INDEX I.

PYR

Pyramides—plural of pyramid, used as a quadrisyllable. A. C. v. 2, n.
Rather make
My country's high pyramides my gibbet.

" Pyramus and Thisbe," a new sonnet of. M. N. D. v. 1, i.
This palpable gross play.

Q.

Quail (v.)—slacken. A. L. ii. 2, n.
And let not search and inquisition quail
To bring again these foolish runaways.

Qualify (v.)—moderate. M. M. iv. 2, n.
He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others.

Quality—kind. H. 4, F. P. iv. 3, n.
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us like an enemy.

Quarrel—arrow. H. E. ii. 3, n.
Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer.

Quarry—prey. M. i. 2, n.
And fortune, on his damned quarry smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore.

Quart d'ecu—a French piece of money. A. W. iv. 3, n.
Sir, for a quart d'ecu he will sell the fee-simple of his salvation.

Quarter-staff play. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
I will not fight with a pole, like a northern man.

Quat. O. v. 1, n.
I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense.

Queazy—delicate, ticklish. L. ii. 1, n.
And I have one thing, of a queazy question,
Which I must act.

Quell—murder. M. i. 7, n.
Who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell?

Quern—handmill. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
And sometimes labour in the quern.

Quest—inquest, jury. So. xlvi. n.
To 'cide this title is impannelled
A quest of thoughts.

Question—discourse. A. L. iii. 4.
I met the duke yesterday, and had much question with him.

Questionable—capable of being questioned. H. i. 4, n.
Thou com'st in such questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee.

Questioned—conversed. Luc. n.
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece.

Questioning—discoursing. A. L. v. 4, n.
Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing,
Feed yourselves with questioning.

Quests—inquisitions. M. M. iv. 1, n.
These false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings.

Quick—alive. H. v. 1, n.
Be buried quick with her, and so will I.

Quick winds lie still. A. C. i. 2, n.
O, then we bring forth weeds
When our quick winds lie still; and our ills told us,
Is as our earing.

Quiddits—quiddities, subtleties. H. v. 1, n.
Where be his quiddits now?

Quillet, quodlibet—argument without foundation. L. L. L. iv. 3, n.
Some tricks, some quillets, how to cheat the devil.

Quillets—quidlibets, frivolous distinctions. H. 1, n.
Where be his quiddits now, his quillets?

Quintain. A. L. i. 2, i.
My better parts
Are all thrown down; and that which here stands up
Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block.

Quit (v.)—requite, answer. H. F. iii. 2, n.
And I sall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion.

Quits—requites. M. M. v. 1, n.
Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well.

Quiver—nimble. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus.

Quote (v.)—mark. G. V. ii. 4, n.
And how quote you my folly?

Quote—pronounced cote. G. V. ii. 4, n.
I quote it in your jerkin.

RAY

Quote (v.)—observe. R. J. i. 4, n.
What curious eye doth quote deformities?

Quote (v.)—observe. Luc. n.
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To 'cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

Quoted—observed, noted. H. ii. 1, n.
I am sorry that with better heed and judgment,
I had not quoted him.

Quotes—observes, searches through. T. And. 1, n.
See, brother, see; note how she quotes the leaves.

R.

R, the dog's letter. R. J. ii. 4, i.
R is for the dog.

Rabato, or neck-ruff. M. A. iii. 4, i.
Troth, I think your other rabato were better.

Rack (v.)—strain, stretch, exaggerate. M. A. iv. 1, n.
That what we have we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value.

Rack—small feathery cloud. T. iv. 1, n.
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.

Rack—vapour. So. xxxiii. n.
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face.

Ragged—broken, discordant. A. L. ii. 5, n.
My voice is ragged; I know I cannot please you.

Ragged—contemptible. Luc. n. (See H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.)
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name.

Ragged'st—most broken, torn. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
And approach
The ragged'st hour that time and spite dare bring.

Rain (v.)—pour down. M. V. iii. 2, n.
In measure rain thy joy.

Raise up the organs of her fantasy—elevate her fancy. M. W. v. 5, n.
Raise up the organs of her fantasy.

Rakes. Cor. i. 1, n.
Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes.

Rams—battering-rams. H. E. iv. 1, n.
Like rams
In the old time of war.

Rang'd—orderly ranged, parts entire and distinct. A. C. i. 1, n.
Let Rome in Tiber melt! and the wide arch
Of the rang'd empire fall!

Rank—full. V. A. n.
Rain added to a river that is rank,
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Rapier, anachronism respecting. R. S. iv. 1, n.
I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Rapiers. M. W. ii. 1, i.
I have heard the Frenchman hath good skill in his rapier.

Raps—transports. Cy. i. 7, n.
What, dear sir,
Thus raps you?

Rapture—fit. Cor. ii. 1, n.
Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry.

Rascal—term given to young deer, lean and out of season. A. L. iii. 3, n.
The noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal.

Rascal-like—like a lean deer. H. 6, F. P. iv. 2, n.
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch.

'Ras'd—erased. P. i. 1, n.
Her face the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence
Sorrow were ever 'ras'd.

Raught—reached. L. L. L. iv. 2, n.
And raught not to five weeks.

Raught—taken away. H. 6, S. P. ii. 3, n.
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
This staff of honour raught.

Raught—reached. H. 6, T. P. i. 4, n.
Come, make him stand upon this molehill here;
That raught at mountains with outstretched arms.

Ravin (v.)—devour greedily. M. M. i. 3, n.
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane.

Rayed—covered with mire, sullied. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so rayed?

REM

Razed—slashed. H. iii. 2, n.
With two Provincial roses on my razed shoes.

Razes—packages. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger.

Re, fa. R. J. iv. 5, n.
I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you, I'll fa you.

Read (v.)—discover. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
For therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope.

Read—counsel, doctrine. H. i. 3, n.
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own read.

Rear of our birth. W. T. iv. 3, n.
My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' the rear of our birth.

Rearly—early. T. N. K. iv. 1, n.
Broth. I'll bring it to-morrow.
Daugh. Do, very rearly.

Rear-mice—bats. M. N. D. ii. 3, n.
Some, war with rear-mice for their leathern wings.

Reason (v.)—converse. R. T. ii. 3, n.
You cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily and full of dread.

Reason'd—discoursed. M. V. ii. 8, n.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday.

Rebeck—three-stringed violin. R. J. iv. 5, n.
What say you, Hugh Rebeck?

Receiving—comprehension. T. N. iii. 1, n.
To one of your receiving
Enough is shown.

Recheat—huntsman's note to recall the hounds. M. A. i. 1, n.
I will have a recheat winded in my forehead.

Record (v.)—sing. G. V. v. 4, n.
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.

Recorder—flageolet, or small English flute. H. iii. 2, n.
Enter one with a recorder.

Records—makes music, sings. P. iv. Gower, n.
She sung, and made the night-bird mute
That still records with moan.

Redbreast. Cy. iv. 2, i.
The ruddock would, &c.

Red-lattice phrases—ale-house terms. M. W. ii. 2, n.
Your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases.

Reduce (v.)—bring back. R. T. v. 4, n.
Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again.

Reechy—begrimed, smoky. M. A. iii. 3, n.
Like Pharaoh's soldiers in the reechy painting.

Refell'd—refuted. M. M. v. 1.
How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me.

Refuse, technical use of the word. H. E. ii. 4, n.
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge.

Regards—considerations. L. i. 1, n.
Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards that stand
Aloof from the entire point.

Regiment. R. T. v. 3, n.
The earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment.

Regiment—government, authority. A. C. iii. 6, n.
And gives his potent regiment to a trull.

Regreets—salutations. M. V. ii. 9, n.
From whom he bringeth sensible regreets.

Reguerdon—recompense. H. 6, F. P. iii. 1, n.
And, in reguerdon of that duty done,
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York.

Relapse of mortality. H. F. iv. 3.
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

Remember'd—reminded. So. cxx. n.
O that our night of woe might have remember'd
My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits!

Remiss—inattentive. H. iv. 7, n.
He, being remiss,
Most generous, and free from all contriving.

Remorse—compassion. A. L. i. 3, n.
It was your pleasure, and your own remorse.

Remorse—pity, tenderness. J. C. ii. 1, n.
The abuse of greatness is when it disjoins Remorse from power.

Remorse—tenderness. V. A. n.
"Pity"—she cries—"some favour—some remorse."

Remorseful—compassionate. G. V. iv. 3.
Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplished.

REM

Remov'd—distant. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
From Athens is her house remov'd seven leagues.

Removed—remote. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Removes—stages. A. W. v. 3, n.
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath, for four or five removes, come short
To tender it herself.

Render (v.)—represent. A. L. iv. 3, n.
O, I have heard him speak of that same brother;
And he did render him the most unnatural
That liv'd 'mongst men.

Reneagues—r A. C. i. 1, n.
His captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneagues all temper.

Renege (v.)—deny. L. ii. 2, n.
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks.

Renew me with your eyes. Cy. iii. 2, n.
Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, an you, O the dearest of creatures, would even renew me with your eyes.

Repeal—recall. Luc. n.
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal.

Repetition of lines. L. L. L. iv. 3, i.
For when would you, my liege, or you, or you.

Repine—used as a substantive. V. A. n.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brows' repine.

Report, to his great worthiness—my report compared to his great worthiness. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
And much too little of that good I saw,
Is my report, to his great worthiness.

Reproof—disproof. H. 4, F. P. iii. 2, n.
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd.

Repugn (v.)—resist. H. 6, F. P. iv. 1, n.
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law.

Reserve (v.)—preserve. P. iv. 1, n.
Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve
That excellent complexion which did steal
The eyes of young and old.

Reserve (v.)—preserve. So. xxxii. n.
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme.

Reserve (v.)—preserve. So. lxxxv. n.
While comments of your praise, richly compil'd,
Reserve their character with golden quill.

Resolve—be firmly persuaded. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, n.
Resolve on this: Thou shalt be fortunate
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Respect—circumspection. V. A. n.
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain,
Full of respect, yet naught at all respecting.

Respect—prudence. Luc. n.
Respect and reason wait on wrinkled age!

Respective—having relation to. G. V. iv. 4, n.
What should it be, that he respects in her
But I can make respective in myself?

Respective—regardful. M. V. v. 1, n.
You should have been respective, and have kept it.

Respectively—respectfully. T. Ath. iii. 1, n.
You are very respectively welcome, sir.

Resty—rusty, spoiled for want of use. Cy. iii. 6, n.
Resty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard.

Retail'd—retold. R. T. iii. 1, n.
Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retail'd to all posterity.

Retires—retreats. H. 4, F. P. ii. 3, n.
And thou hast talk'd
Of sallies and retires.

Retiring—used in the sense of coming back again. Luc. n.
One poor retiring minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends.

Revolution—change of circumstances. A. C. i. 2, n.
The present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become
The opposite of itself.

Re-worded—echoed. L. C. n.
From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A plaintful story from a sistering vale.

Rhodope's, or Memphis'. H. 6, F. P. i. 6, n.
A statelier pyramis to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's, or Memphis', ever was.

Rialto, the. M. V. i. 3, i.
What news on the Rialto?

ROY

Richard Cœur-de-Lion and the lion, combat of. J. i. 1, i.
The awless lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.

Riches—used as a singular noun. O. ii. 1, n. (See So. lxxxvii.)
The riches of the ship is come on shore.

Richest coat—highest descent. L. C. n.
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat.

Rides the wild mare—plays at seesaw. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
And rides the wild mare with the boys.

Rigol—ringed circle. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, n.
This is a sleep,
That from this golden rigol hath divorc'd
So many English kings.

Rigol—circle. Luc. n.
About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigol goes.

Rim. H. F. iv. 4, n.
For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat.

Ringlets green sour—fairy-rings. T. v. 1, n.
You demi-puppets that
By moonshine do the green sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites.

Rites. H. v. 1, n.
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin rites.

Rivage—shore. H. F. iii. Chorus, n.
You stand upon the rivage, and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing.

Rivals—partners, companions. H. i. 1, n.
If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals of my watch.

Road—open harbour. G. V. ii. 4, n.
I must unto the road, to disembark.

Roaming. H. i. 3, n.
Tender yourself more dearly;
Or, (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase,
Roaming it thus,) you'll tender me a fool.

Roaring devil i' the old play. H. F. iv. 4, n. (See H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.)
Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil i' the old play.

Roasted pig in Bartholomew fair. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, i.
Bartholomew boar-pig.

Robe of durance. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

Romage. H. i. 1, n.
This post-haste and romage in the land.

Roman law, Shakspere's acquaintance with. A. L. ii. 5, i.
Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing.

Romances of chivalry. L. L. L. i. 1, i.
In high-born words, the worth of many a knight
From tawny Spain, lost in the world's debate.

Romans. H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, n.
I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity.

"Romaunt of the Rose," antithetical peculiarities of. R. J. i. 1, i.
O brawling love! O loving hate!

Rome—pronounced room. J. iii. 1, n.
O, lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile!

Rondure—circumference. So. xxi. n.
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge rondure hems.

Ronyon. M. i. 3, n.
The rump-fed ronyon cries.

Roof of the theatre. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, i.
Hung be the heavens with black.

Rose-cheek'd Adonis—an expression found in Marlowe's poem of "Hero and Leander." V. A. n.
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase.

Rosemary, for remembrance. H. iv. 5, n.
There's rosemary, that's for remembrance.

Round, a piece of music printed in 1609. T. S. iv. 1, i.
Jack, boy! ho, boy!

Round with you—in two senses: 1. plain-spoken; 2. in allusion to the game of foot-ball. C. E. ii. 1, n.
Am I so round with you, as you with me,
That like a foot-ball you do spurn me thus?

Rounded—surrounded. T. iv. 1, n.
We are such stuff
As dreams are made on, and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

Rounder—roundure. J. ii. 1, n.
'Tis not the rounder of your old-fac'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war.

Rounding—telling secretly. W. T. i. 2, n.
They're here with me already; whispering, rounding.

Royal faiths—faiths due to a king. H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, n.
That were our royal faiths martyrs in love.

SAM

Royal merchant. M. V. iv. 1, n.
Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Roynish—mangy, scurvy. A. L. ii. 2, n.
My lord, the roynish clown.

Rue—ruth, sorrow. H. iv. 5, n.
There's rue for you.

Ruff—top of a loose boot, turned over. A. W. iii. 2, n.
Why, he will look upon his boot, and sing; mend the ruff, and sing.

Ruffling. T. S. iv. 3, n.
To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Ruffs. W. T. iv. 3, i.
Poking-sticks of steel.

Ruin—the ruin which princes inflict. H. E. iii. 2, n.
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
More pangs and fears than wars or women have.

Rule—conduct, method of life. T. N. ii. 3, n.
You would not give means for this uncivil rule.

Rushes. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
On the wanton rushes lay you down.

Rushes, custom of strewing. R. J. i. 4, i.
Tickle the senseless rushes with their heels.

Ruth—pity. Cor. i. 1, n.
Would the nobility lay aside their ruth.

S.

Sables. H. iii. 2, i.
I'll have a suit of sables.

Sacred—in the Latin sense, accursed. T. And. ii. 1, n.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit,
To villainy and vengeance consecrate.

Sacred subjects, Shakspere's treatment of. A. W. i. 2, i.
His plausive words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there, and to bear.

Sad—serious. G. V. i. 3, n.
Tell me, Panthino, what sad talk was that?

Sad—serious. M. A. i. 3, n. (See M. A. v. 1, n.)
The prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference.

Sad—grave, gloomy. R. S. v. 5, n.
Where no man ever comes, but that sad dog
That brings me food.

Sad—grave. Luc. n.
Sad pause and deep regard beseem the sage.

Sadness—seriousness. H. 6, T. P. iii. 2, n.
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit.

Safe. M. i. 4, n.
And our duties
Are to your throne and state, children and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing everything
Safe toward your love and honour.

Safe (v.)—render safe. A. C. i. 3, n.
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvia's death.

Saf'd—made safe. A. C. iv. 6, n.
Best you saf'd the bringer
Out of the host.

Sage—grave, solemn. H. v. 1, n.
We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing sage requiem, and such rest to her,
As to peace-parted souls.

Sagg (v.)—droop, sink down. M. v. 3, n.
And the heart I bear,
Shall never sagg with doubt, nor shake with fear.

Sagittary—the arsenal. O. i. 1, n.
Lead to the Sagittary the raised search.

Sagittary, description of, by Lydgate. T. C. v. 5, i.
The dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers.

Sallet—helmet. H. 6, S. P. iv. 10, n.
Many a time, but for a sallet my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill.

Sallet—salad, herb which is eaten salted. H. 6, S. P. iv. 10, n.
And now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Sallets—ribaldry. H. ii. 2, n.
One said, there were no sallets in the lines to make the matter savoury.

Salt-cellars. G. V. iii. 1, i.
The cover of the salt hides the salt.

Samphire. L. iv. 6, i.
Half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire; dreadful trade!

INDEX I.

SAN

Sand-blind—having an imperfect sight. M. V. ii. 2, n.
Who, being more than sand-blind.

Satyrs' dance. W. T. iv. 3, i.
Made themselves all men of hair.

Savoy Palace. R. S. i. 2, i.
Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Sawn—sown. L. C. n.
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise was sawn.

Say—assay. L. v. 3, n. (See L. i. 2, n.)
And that thy tongue some say of breeding breathes.

Scaled—weighed. M. M. iii. 1, n.
The corrupt deputy scaled.

Scales—used as a singular noun. R. J. i. 2, n.
But in that crystal scales, let there be weigh'd.

Scaligers, family of the. R. J. v. 3, i.
Some shall be pardoned.

Scaling. Cor. ii. 3. (See Cor. i. 1, n.)
But you have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy.

Scall—scald. M. W. iii. 1, n.
This same scall, scurvy, cogging companion.

Scambling—disorderly. H. F. i. 1, n.
But that the scambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of further question.

Scamels. T. ii. 2, n.
And sometimes I'll get thee
Young scamels from the rock.

Scarfed bark—vessel gay with streamers. M. V. ii. 6, n.
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay.

Scarre—rock, precipitous cliff. A. W. iv. 2, n.
Men make ropes, in such a scarre.

Scath—harm. H. 6, S. P. ii. 4, n.
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any scath.

Scath (v.)—injure. R. J. i. 5, n.
This trick may chance to scath you.

Scathful—harmful, destructive. T. N. v. 1, n.
With which such scathful grapple did he make.

Sconce—fortification. H. F. iii. 6, n.
At such and such a sconce, at such a breach.

Scope of nature. J. iii. 4, n.
No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scope of nature, no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause.

Scotland, contests of, with England. C. E. iii. 2, i.
Where Scotland?

Scrimers—fencers. H. iv. 7, n.
The scrimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye.

Scrip—script, a written paper. M. N. D. i. 2, n.
Call them generally, man by man, according to the scrip.

Scroyles—persons afflicted with king's evil. J. ii. 2, n.
By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers flout you, kings.

Sculls—shoals of fish. T. C. v. 5, n.
And there they fly, or die, like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale.

Sea of wax. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax.

Seal, method of attaching, to a deed. R. S. v. 2, n.
What seal is that that hangs without thy bosom?

Seal of my petition. T. C. iv. 4, n.
Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the seal of my petition to thee,
In praising her.

Seals. H. iii. 2, n.
How in my words soever she be shent,
To give them seals never, my soul, consent!

Search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it. P. ii. 1, n.
If it be a day fits you, search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.

Sear'd hopes. Cy. ii. 4, n.
In these sear'd hopes,
I barely gratify your love.

Season (v.)—to preserve by salting. A. W. i. 1, n.
'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in.

Season (v.)—salt, preserve. T. N. i. 1, n.
All this, to season
A brother's dead love, which she would keep fresh.

Season, ungenial, of 1593 and 1594. M. N. D. ii. 2, i.
Therefore, the winds, piping to us in vain, &c.

SET

Seasons—used as a verb. Cy. i. 7, n.
Blessed be those,
How mean soe'er, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort.

Seat—throne. H. F. i. 2, n.
We never valued this poor seat of England.

Secondary stage in old theatres. O. v. 2, i.
A bedchamber, &c.

Secondary stage, the. T. N. K. ii. 2, n. (See O. v i.)

Seconds. So. cxxv. n.
And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
Which is not mix'd with seconds, knows no art.

Sect—in horticulture, a cutting. O. i. 3, n.
Whereof I take this, that you call love, to be a sect or scion.

Sectional rhyme, example of. M. N. D. iii. 2, i.
Shall seem a dream, and fruitless vision.

Secular tunes adapted to versions of the psalms. W. T. iv. 2, i.
Sings psalms to hornpipes.

Security—legal security, surety. M. M. iii. 2, n.
There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accursed.

Seeing—used as a noun. W. T. ii. 1, n.
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation,
But only seeing.

Seel with wanton dulness. O. i. 3, n.
No, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid seel with wanton dulness
My speculative and offic'd instrument.

Seeling—blinding. M. iii. 2, n.
Come, seeling night,
Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day.

Seeming—specious resemblance. M. A. iv. 1, n.
Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?
Claud. Out on the seeming!

Seeming—seemly. A. L. v. 4, n.
Bear your body more seeming.

Seen—versed. T. S. i. 2, n.
Well seen in music.

Seen with mischief's eyes. P. i. 4, n.
O my distressed lord, ev'n such our griefs are;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mischief's eyes,
But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Self king. T. N. i. 1, n.
All supplied, and fill'd,
(Her sweet perfections,) with one self king!

Self-sovereignty—self-sufficiency. L. L. L. iv. 1, n.
Do not curst wives hold that self-sovereignty?

Selling a bargain. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
The boy hath sold him a bargain.

Seniory—seniority. R. T. iv. 4, n.
If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of seniory.

Sense—sensibility. O. ii. 3, n.
I had thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sense in that than in reputation.

Sense—impression upon the senses. O. iii. 3, n.
What sense had I in her stolen hours of lust?

Separable—separating. So. xxxvi. n.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite.

Sere—affection of the throat, by which the lungs are tickled. H. ii. 2, n.
The clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickled o' the sere.

Serious hours—private hours. C. E. ii. 2, n.
And make a common of my serious hours.

Servant. G. V. ii. 1, i.
Sir Valentine and servant.

Sesey. L. iii. 4, n.
Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind: Says suum, mun, nonny, dolphin my boy, boy, Sesey; let him trot by.

Sessa—be quiet. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
Sessa!

Set (v.)—in two senses: 1. compose; and, used with by, make account of. G. V. i. 2, n.
Give me a note: your ladyship can set.
Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.

Set—term used at tennis. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
A set of wit well play'd.

Set a watch. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a watch.

Set her two courses. T. i. 1, n.
Set her two courses; off to sea again; lay her off.

Set on—stirred up. Cor. iii. 1, n.
The people are abus'd,—set on.

SHO

Several plot. So. cxxxvii. n. (See L. L. L. ii. 1, n.)
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common place?

Severals—details. H. F. i. 1, n.
The severals, and unhidden passages,
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms.

Serving-man. L. iii. 4, n.
A serving-man, proud in heart and mind.

Shadow of poor Buckingham. H. E. i. 1, n.
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham;
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By dark'ning my clear sun.

Shakspere and Hogarth, Lamb's parallel between. T. Ath. i. 1, i.
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance.

Shakspere's Cliff. L. iv. 1, i.
There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep.

Shakspere's grammar, objections to. R. J. ii. 3, i.
Both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies.

Shakspere's knowledge of art. Cy. v. 5, i.
Postures beyond brief nature, &c.

Shall be thought—where shall be thought. R. T. 1, n.
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health and recreation.

Shame—decency. O. i. 1, n.
For shame put on your gown.

Shapes our ends. H. v. 2, i.
There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Shard, meaning of. Cy. iii. 3, i.
The sharded beetle.

Shard-borne beetle—beetle borne on its shards, or scaly wing-cases. M. iii. 2, n. (See Cy. iii. 3, i.)
The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums.

Shards—rubbish. H. v. 1, n.
For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her.

She lov'd me well, delivered it to me—she lov'd me well, who delivered it to me. G. V. iv. 4, n.
Deliver it to madam Silvia:
She lov'd me well, delivered it to me.

She's my good lady—used ironically. Cy. ii. 3, n.
Your mother too:
She's my good lady.

She to scant her duty—she knows to scant her duty. L. ii. 4, n.
You less know how to value her desert,
Than she to scant her duty.

Sheav'd—made of straw collected from sheaves. L. C. n.
For some, untuck'd, descended her sheav'd hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside.

Sheep—pronounced ship. G. V. i. 1.
And I have play'd the sheep, in losing him.

Sheep—pronounced ship. C. E. iv. 1, n.
Why thou peevish sheep,
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me?

Sheer—pure. R. S. v. 3, n.
Thou sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain.

Shent—roughly handled. M. W. i. 4,
We shall all be shent.

Shent—reproved. T. N. iv. 2, n.
I am shent for speaking to you.

Shent—rebuked, hurt. H. iii. 2, n.
How in my words soever she be shent.

Shent—rebuked. T. C. ii. 3, n.
He shent our messengers.

Shent—rebuked. Cor. v. 2, n.
Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?

Sheriff's post. T. N. i. 5, i.
He says, he'll stand at your door like a sheriff's post.

Sherris-sack. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, i.
Sir John Sack-and-Sugar.

Ships of Antony and Cæsar,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 7, i.
Your ships are not well mann'd.

Shoal. M. i. 7, n.
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,
We'd jump the life to come.

Shoes. G. V. ii. 3, i.
This left shoe.

Shooting deer. L. L. L. iv. 1, i.
Where is the bush,
That we must stand and play the murderer in?

Shove-groat. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, i.
A shove-groat shilling.

SHO

Show'd his visage—his visage showed. L. C. n.
Yet show'd his visage by that cost more dear.

Shrew—pronounced as shrow. T. S. v. 2, n.
Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast tam'd a curst shrew.
Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so.

Shriving-time—time of shrift, or confession. H. v. 2, n.
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving-time allow'd.

Shylock—origin of the name. M. V. i. 3, i.
Shylock.

Sib—kin. T. N. K. i. 2, n.
The blood of mine that's sib to him be suck'd
From me with leeches.

Side-sleeves—ample long sleeves. M. A. iii. 4, n.
Side-sleeves, and skirts, round underborne with a bluish tinsel.

Siege—seat. M. M. iv. 2, n.
Upon the very siege of justice.

Siege—throne, elevated seat. O. i. 2, n.
I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege.

Sieve. T. C. ii. 2, n.
Nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective sieve.

Sightless—unsightly. J. iii. 1, n.
Full of unpleasing blots and sightless stains.

Silent—used as a noun. H. 6, S. P. i. 4, n.
Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night.

Simplicity—folly. So. lxvi. n.
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity.

Simular—counterfeit. L. iii. 2, n.
Thou perjur'd, and thou simular of virtue.

Single—pointless. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
Your chin double? your wit single?

Sir—a title of priests. M. W. i. 1, i.
Sir Hugh, persuade me not.

Sir John—title of a priest. H. 6, S. P. i. 2, n.
Sir John! nay, fear not, man.

Sir Nob. J. i. 1, n.
I would give it every foot to have this face;
It would not be sir Nob in any case.

Sir reverence. C. E. iii. 2, n. (See R. J. i. 4, i.)
May not speak of, without he say, sir reverence.

Sir Robert his—Sir Robert's, Sir Robert's shape. J. 1, n.
Madam, an if my brother had my shape,
And I had his, sir Robert his, like him.

Sirra. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Ah, sirra, a body would think this was well counterfeited.

Sirrah—used familiarly, not contemptuously. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
And, sirrah, I have cases of buckram.

Sithence—since. Cor. iii. 1, n.
Have you inform'd them sithence?

Sits on his horseback. J. ii. 1, n.
St. George, that swindg'd the dragon, and e'er since
Sits on his horseback, at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence!

Sixpenny strikers—petty footpads, robbers for sixpence. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
I am joined with no foot-land-rakers, no long-staff, sixpenny strikers.

Sizes—allowances. L. ii. 4, n.
To cut off my train,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes.

Skir (v.)—scour. M. v. 3, n.
Send out more horses, skir the country round.

Skogan. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
I saw him break Skogan's head at the court gate.

Sleave—unwrought silk. M. ii. 2, n.
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care.

"Sleeper Awakened." T. S. Induction, 1, i.
What think you, if he were convey'd to bed?

Sleided silk. L. C. n.
Found yet mo letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With sleided silk feat and affectedly
Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

Slip. R. J. ii. 4, i.
What counterfeit did I give you?
The slip, sir, the slip.

Smilets. L. iv. 3, n.
Those happy smilets,
That play'd on her ripe lip.

Smiling at grief. T. N. ii. 4, n.
She sat, like patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.

Smirched—smutched, smudged. M. A. iii. 3, n.
Like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry.

SOU

Smithfield. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, i.
A horse in Smithfield.

Smooth (v.)—flatter. P. i. 2, n.
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth.

Smoothing—flattering. Luc. n.
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name.

Smot—old preterite of smote. L. L. L. iv. 3, n.
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smot
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows.

Sneaped—checked. Luc. n.
And give the sneaped birds more cause to sing.

Sneck up. T. N. ii. 3, n.
We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneck up!

Snuff, aromatic powders used as. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n. (See L. iii. 1, n.)
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff.

Snuffs—dislikes. L. iii. 1, n.
What hath been seen,
Either in snuffs and packings of the dukes.

So Antony loves—so that Antony loves. A. C. i. 3, n.
I am quickly ill, and well,
So Antony loves.

So his case was like—his case was so like. C. E. i. 1, n.
That his attendant, (so his case was like,
Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name).

So much of earth and water wrought. So. xliv. n.
But that, so much of earth and water wrought,
I must attend time's leisure with my moan.

Soil—spot. H. i. 3, n.
And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmirch
The virtue of his will.

Soils—defilements, taints. A. C. i. 4, n.
Yet must Antony
No way excuse his soils.

Solidity—earth. H. iii. 4, n.
Yea, this solidity and compound mass.

Solve—solution. So. lxix. n.
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve is this,—that thou dost common grow.

Some nature—some impulses of nature. R. J. iv. 5, n.
For though some nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Sometimes—formerly. M. V. i. 1, n.
Sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages.

"Songs and Sonnets." M. W. i. 1, i.
I had rather than forty shillings, I had my book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Songs, fragments of old. H. 4, S. P. v. iii. i.
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer.

Songs in old comedies. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
Concolinel.

Soon at five o'clock—about five o'clock. C. E. i. 2, n.
Soon at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart.

Sooth—truth. W. T. iv. 3, n.
He looks like sooth.

Sooth—assent. R. S. iii. 3, n.
Should take it off again
With words of sooth.

Sore—excessively, extremely, much. M. V. v.
I'll fear no other thing
So sore, as keeping safe Nerissa's ring.

Sorrow wag. M. A. v. 1, n.
And, "sorrow wag" cry: hem, when he should groan.

Sort (v.)—choose. G. V. iii. 2, n.
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in music.

Sort—condition, kind. M. A. i. 1, n.
Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this action?
Mess. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Sort—company. R. S. iv. 1, n.
But they can see a sort of traitors here.

Sort—company. H. 6, S. P. ii. 1, n.
A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent.

Sort (v.)—assign, appropriate. Luc. n.
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end?

Sorteth—consorteth. V. A. n.
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer.

Soud—expression of fatigue. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Sit down, Kate, and welcome.
Soud, soud, soud, soud!

Soul-fearing. J. ii. 2, n.
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brawl'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city.

Sound (v.)—swoon. A. L. v. 2, n.
Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to sound?

STA

Sounds. Luc. n.
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords.

South-sea of discovery. A. L. iii. 2, n.
One inch of delay more is a South-sea of discovery.

Sowle (v.)—pull out. Cor. iv. 5, n.
He'll go, he says, and sowle the porter of Rome gates by the ears.

Speak him far—carry your praise far. Cy. i. 1, n.
You speak him far.

Speak sad brow, and true maid—speak with a serious countenance, and as a true maid. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Nay, but the devil take mocking; speak sad brow, and true maid.

Speed—issue. W. T. iii. 2, n.
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone.

Sperr up. T. C. Prologue, n.
Sperr up the sons of Troy.

Spet—old preterite of spit. M. V. i. 3, n.
And spet upon my Jewish gaberdine.

Spider. W. T. ii. 1, n.
There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd.

Spirit of sense—sensibility of touch. T. C. i. 1, n.
To whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman.

Spirit that appeared to Brutus,—from North's Plutarch. J. C. iv. 3, i.
How ill this taper burns! &c.

Spirits all of comfort. A. C. iii. 2, n.
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort!

Spleen—passion, caprice. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heaven and earth.

Spoom. T. N. K. iii. 4, n.
Spoom her before the wind, you'll lose all else!

Spotted—stained, impure. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Upon this spotted and inconstant man.

Sprag—quick, lively. M. W. iv. 1, n.
He is a good sprag memory.

Spring—beginning. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
And never, since the middle summer's spring.

Spring—bud, young shoot. V. A. n.
This canker that eats up love's tender spring.

Spring, return of. R. J. i. 2, i.
Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel, &c.

Springs—shoots, saplings. Luc. n.
To dry the old oak's sap, and cherish springs.

Spurs. Cy. iv. 2, n.
I do note
That grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together.

Spurs, fashions of. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, i.
Up to the rowel-head.

Squander'd abroad—scattered. M. V. i. 3, n.
And other ventures he hath, squander'd abroad.

Square (v.)—quarrel. M. N. D. ii. 1, n.
They never meet in grove, or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled star-light sheen,
But they do square.

Squarer—quarreller. M. A. i. 1, n.
Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Squire—esquierre, a rule. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Do not you know my lady's foot by the squire?

Squire—foot-rule. W. T. iv. 3, n.
And not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.

Squire—rule. H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, n.
If I travel but four foot by the squire.

St. Colmes' Inch, notice of. M. i. 2, i.

St. George. J. ii. 1, i.
St. George, that swindg'd, &c.

St. Martin's summer—fine weather in November, prosperity after misfortune. H. 6, F. P. i. 2, n.
Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.

St. Nicholas. G. V. iii. 1, i.
St. Nicholas be thy speed.

St. Nicholas' clerks—thieves. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n. (See G. V. iii. 1, i.)
If they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks I'll give thee this neck.

Stage action. H. iii. 4, i.
Look here, upon this picture, and on this.

Stage, construction of the old. L. iii. 7, i.
Where is thy lustre now?

Stage, construction of the old. M. ii. 2, i.
Who's there?—what, hoa!

STA

Stage costume, old. M. V. ii. 1, i.

Stage directions. T. S. i. 1, i.
The Presenters above speak.

Stage directions. H. E. i. 1, i.
Enter the Duke of Buckingham, &c.

Stage, internal roof of the. M. i. 5, i. (See H. 6, F. P. i. 1, i.)
Come, thick night, &c.

Staggers—uncertainty, insecurity. A. W. ii. 3, n.
Or I will throw thee from my care for ever,
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance.

Stain—tincture, slight mark. A. W. i. 1, n.
You have some stain of soldier in you.

Stain—used as a verb neuter. So. xxxiii. n.
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

Staineth—used as a verb neuter. So. xxxiii. n.
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

Stale—stalking-horse. C. E. ii. 1, n.
Poor I am but his stale.

Stale—thing stalled, exposed for common sale. T. S. i. 1, n.
To make a stale of me amongst these mates.

Stale—stalking-horse. H. 6, T. P. iii. 3, n.
Had he none else to make a stale but me?

Stale 't. Cor. i. 1, n.
I shall tell you
A pretty tale; it may be you have heard it;
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To stale 't a little more.

Stalking-horses. M. A. ii. 3, i.
Stalk on, stalk on: the fowl sits.

Stalks—goes warily, softly. Luc. n.
Into the chamber wickedly he stalks.

Stand, ho!—pass-word. J. C. iv. 2, n.
Bru. Stand, ho!
Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Stand my good lord—be my good lord. H. 4, S. P. iv. 3, n.
When you come to court, stand my good lord.

Standing. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
How this grace
Speaks his own standing!

Standing and truckle beds. M. W. iv. 5, i.
His standing-bed and truckle-bed.

Stannyel—common hawk. T. N. ii. 5, n.
And with what wing the stannyel checks at it!

Stark—stiff. Cy. iv. 2, n.
Bel. How found you him?
Arv. Stark, as you see.

Starkly—stiffly. M. M. iv. 2, n.
As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labour
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones.

Start some otherwhere—go somewhere else. C. E. ii. 1, n.
How if your husband start some otherwhere?

State—canopied chair, throne. T. N. ii. 5, n.
Having been three months married to her, sitting in my state.

Station—manner of standing, attitude. H. iii. 4, n.
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Station—act of standing. A. C. iii. 3, n.
Her motion and her station are as one.

Statue—used as a picture. G. V. iv. 4, n.
My substance should be statue in thy stead.

Statues—pictures. R. T. iii. 7, n. (See G. V. iv. 4, n.)
But, like dumb statues or breathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale.

Statues, painted. W. T. v. 3, i.
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet.

Statute—security, obligation. So. cxxxiv. n.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that putt'st forth all to use.

Statute-caps. L. L. L. v. 2, i.
Better wits have worn plain statute-caps.

Stay—interruption. J. ii. 2, n.
Here's a stay.

Stayers of sand. M. V. iii. 2, n.
Whose hearts are all as false
As stayers of sand.

Stays—detains. A. L. i. 1, n.
Stays me here at home unkept.

Stel'd. Luc. n.
To find a face where all distress is stel'd.

Sternage—steerage, course. H. F. iii. Chorus, n.
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy.

Sterv'd—starved. M. V. iv. 1, n.
Are wolfish, bloody, sterv'd, and ravenous.

Stickler—arbitrator, sidesman. T. C. v. 9, n.
And, stickler-like, the armies separate.

STU

Stigmatical—branded in form. C. E. iv. 2, n.
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.

Stigmatick—one upon whom a stigma has been set. H. 6, S. P. v. 1, n.
Foul stigmatick, that's more than thou canst tell.

Stigmatick—one on whom a stigma has been set. H. 6, T. P. ii. 2, n. (See H. 6, S. P. v. 1, n.)
But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick.

Still-peering—appearing still. A. W. iii. 2, n.
Move the still-peering air,
That sings with piercing.

Stint—stop. P. i. 2, n.
With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,
And with the stint of war will look so huge.

Stinted—stopped. R. J. i. 3, n.
And, pretty fool, it stinted, and said—Ay.

Stithe—pronounced stithy. H. iii. 2, n.
And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithe.

Stock—stocking. G. V. iii. 1, n.
When she can knit him a stock.

Stock—stocking. T. S. iii. 2, n.
With a linen stock on one leg.

Stock—stocking. T. N. i. 3, n.
A damask-coloured stock.

Stocks. G. V. iv. 4, i.
I have sat in the stocks.

Stone at Scone. M. ii. 4, i.
And gone to Scone,
To be invested.

Stone-bow. T. N. ii. 5, i.
O, for a stone-bow.

Stone jugs and no seal'd quarts. T. S. Induction, 2, n.
Because she brought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.

Stoop. J. iii. 1, n.
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stoop.

Stoop—term of falconry. H. F. iv. 1, n.
And though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing.

Stout—healthy. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads.

Straight—straightway, forthwith. H. v. 1, n.
1 Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial, that wilfully seeks her own salvation?
2 Clo. I tell thee, she is; and therefore make her grave straight.

Strain—turn, humour, disposition. M. W. ii. 1, n.
Unless he know some strain in me.

Strain—lineage. M. A. ii. 1, n.
He is of a noble strain, of approved valour.

Strangeness—coyness, bashfulness. V. A. n.
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years.

Stranger—foreigner. H. E. ii. 3, n.
Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again.

Strappado, punishment of. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
At the strappado.

Stratagem—military movement. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
Every minute now
Should be the father of some stratagem.

Stratagems—disastrous events. H. 6, T. P. ii. 5, n.
What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly.

Stricture—strictness. M. M. i. 4, n.
Lord Angelo
(A man of stricture and firm abstinence).

Strides. M. ii. 1, n.
Thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design
Moves like a ghost.

Strike (v.)—lower sail. R. S. ii. 1, n.
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.

Stronds—strands, shores. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in stronds afar remote.

Strong escape—escape effected by strength. C. E. v. 1, n.
I wot not by what strong escape.

Strong in, astern. P. iii. 1, n.
Per. That's your superstition.
1 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it hath been still observed; and we are strong in, astern.

Stuck—rapier. H. iv. 7, n.
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there.

Stuff—baggage. C. E. iv. 4, n.
Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard.

Stuff—matter, material, substance. O. i. 2, n.
Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience,
To do no contriv'd murder.

SWO

Stuffed—stored, furnished. M. A. i. 1, n.
Stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Subject—used as a plural noun. M. M. iii. 2, n.
The greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Subject—used as a plural noun. P. ii. 1, n.
How from the finny subject of the sea
These fishers tell the infirmities of men.

Subscribes—submits, acknowledges as a superior. So. cvii. n.
My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since spite of him I'll live in this poor rhyme.

Success—succession. W. T. i. 2, n.
Than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle.

Success—succession. H. 4, S. P. iv. 2, n.
And so, success of mischief shall be born.

Success—succession, consequence. O. iii. 3, n.
Should you do so, my lord,
My speech should fall into such vile success
Which my thoughts aim'd not.

Suggest (v.)—prompt. R. S. i. 1, n.
That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries.

Suggest (v.)—tempt. So. cxliv. n.
Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still.

Suggested—tempted. G. V. iii. 1, n.
Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested.

Suggested—tempted. Luc. n.
Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king.

Suggestions—temptations. L. L. L. i. 1, n.
Suggestions are to others, as to me.

Suggestions—temptations. A. W. iii. 5, n.
A filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young earl.

Suggests—excites. H. E. i. 1, n.
Suggests the king our master
To this last costly treaty.

Suicide of Sir James Hales. H. v. 1, i.
Crowner's-quest law.

Suit—request. A. L. ii. 7, n.
It is my only suit.

Suit—court solicitation. R. J. i. 4, n.
Sometime she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,
And then dreams he of smelling out a suit.

Suited—clothed. L. iv. 7, n.
Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worser hours.

Suitor—pronounced as shooter. L. L. L. iv. 1, n.
Who is the suitor?

Sun of York—allusion to the cognizance of Edward IV. R. T. i. 1, n.
Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York.

Superstitions respecting drowned men. T. N. ii. 1, i.
If you will not murther me for my love, let me be your servant.

Supplications in the quill—written supplications. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
And then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

Sur-rein'd—over-reined, over-worked. H. F. iii. 5, n.
Can sodden water,
A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?

Suspect—suspicion. So. lxx. n.
The ornament of beauty is suspect.

Swashers. R. J. i. 1, i.
Gregory, remember thy swashing blow.

Swashing—making a noise of swords against targets. A. L. i. 3, n.
We'll have a swashing and a martial outside.

Swear his thought over—over-swear his thought. W. T. i. 2, n.
Swear his thought over
By each particular star in heaven.

Swears only. J. iii. 1, n.
The truth thou art unsure
To swear, swears only not to be forsworn.

Sweeting—name of an apple. R. J. ii. 4, n.
Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting.

Sword-belts. H. v. 2, i.
The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Sword e'en like a dancer. A. C. iii. 9, n.
He, at Philippi, kept
His sword e'en like a dancer.

Sword worn by a dancer. A. W. ii. 1, n.
Till honour be brought up, and no sword worn
But one to dance with.

SWO

Swords, inscriptions upon. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, i.
Si fortuna, &c.

Sworn brother. R. S. v. 1, n.
I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity.

Swounds—swoons. Luc. n.
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swounds.

Sycamore groves. R. J. i. 1, i.
Underneath the grove of sycamore.

Sympathetic vibration (in music). So. viii. n.
Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering.

Sympathies—mutual passion. R. S. iv. 1, n.
If that thy valour stand on sympathies.

T.

Table—tablet. A. W. i. 1, n.
To sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table.

Table—the tabular surface upon which a picture is painted. So. xxiv. n.
Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stell'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart.

Table-book, or tables. G. V. ii. 7, i.
The table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character'd.

Ta'en out—copied. O. iii. 3, n.
I'll have the work ta'en out.

Ta'en up—made up. A. L. v. 4, n.
Touch. I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.
Jaq. And how was that ta'en up?

Tailors, singing of. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
'Tis the next way to turn tailor.

Take (v.)—understand. H. F. ii. 1, n.
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up.

Take a house—take the shelter of a house. C. E. v. 1, n.
Run, master, run! for God's sake, take a house.

Take a muster—take an account, a muster-roll. H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, n.
Come, let us take a muster speedily.

Take in (v.)—subdue. Cor. i. 2, n.
Which was,
To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

Take in—gain by conquest. A. C. iii. 7, n.
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in Toryne.

Take me with you—let me know your meaning. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
I would your grace would take me with you.
Whom means your grace?

"Take, oh take those lips away," on the authorship of. M. M. iv. 1, i.

Take, or lend. Cy. iii. 6, n.
If anything that's civil, speak;—if savage—
Take, or lend.

"Take thy old cloak about thee," ballad of. O. ii. 3, i.
King Stephen was a worthy peer.

Takes—seizes with disease. M. W. iv. 4, n.
And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle.

Takes—seizes with disease. H. i. 1, n.
Then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm.

Taking—malignant influence. L. iii. 4, n.
Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking!

Taking so the head—taking away the sovereign's chief title. R. S. iii. 3, n.
To shorten you,
For taking so the head.

Taking up—buying upon credit. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, n.
If a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security.

Talents—something precious. L. C. n.
And lo! behold the talents of their hair
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd.

Tall—stout, bold. T. N. i. 3, n.
He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Tame snake. A. L. iv. 3, i.
I see, love hath made thee a tame snake.

"Taming of a Shrew"—old play. T. S. Induction, 1, i.
Before an Alehouse on a Heath.

"Taming of a Shrew," scene in the old play of. T. S. ii. 1, i.
Good-morrow, Kate.

"Taming of a Shrew," scene from the old play of. T. S. iii. 2, i.
I must away to-day.

THA

"Taming of a Shrew," scene in the old play of. T. S. iv. 1, i.
Where be these knaves?

"Taming of a Shrew," scene from old play of. T. S. iv. 3, i.
No, no; forsooth, I dare not, for my life.

"Taming of a Shrew," scene from old play of. T. S. iv. 3, i.
Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments.

"Taming of a Shrew," scene from old play of. T. S. iv. 5, i.
Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!

"Taming of a Shrew," scene from old play of. T. S. v. 2, i.
Exeunt.

Tapestry. R. S. i. 2, i.
Unfurnish'd walls.

Tarleton and his tabor. T. N. iii. 1, i.
Dost thou live by thy tabor?

Tarre (v.)—exasperate. J. iv. 1, n.
And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.

Tarre (v.)—exasperate. H. ii. 2, n. (See J. iv. 1, n.)
And the nation holds it no sin, to tarre them to controversy.

Task the earth. R. S. iv. 1, n.
I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle.

Task'd—taxed. H. 4, F. P. iv. 3, n.
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state.

Taste (v.)—try. T. N. iii. 1, n.
Taste your legs, sir; put them to motion.

Taxation—satire. A. L. i. 2, n.
You'll be whipp'd for taxation one of these days.

Taxing—censure, reproach. A. L. ii. 7, n.
My taxing like a wild goose flies,
Unclaim'd of any man.

Teen—sorrow. T. i. 2, n.
O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to.

Teen—sorrow. R. T. iv. 1, n.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wrack'd with a week of teen.

Teen—sorrow. R. J. i. 3, n.
I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,
And yet, to my teen be it spoken, I have but four.

Teen—grief. V. A. n.
My face is full of shame; my heart of teen.

Teen—grief. L. C. n.
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen.

Ten bones—ancient adjuration. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
By these ten bones, my lords.

Ten commandments. H. 6, S. P. i. 3, n.
Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

Ten shillings—value of the royal. H. 4, F. P. i. 2, n.
Thou camest not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

Tench. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, i.
Stung like a tench.

Tender (v.)—heed, regard. Luc. n.
Then, for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit.

Tender-hefted nature—nature which may be held by tenderness. L. ii. 4, n.
Thy tender-hefted nature shall not give
Thee o'er to harshness.

Tennis-balls. M. A. iii. 2, n.
The old ornament of his cheeks hath already stuffed tennis-balls.

Tennyson, Mr., poem by. M. M. iii. 1, i.
At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

Terms. T. N. ii. 4, i.
Light airs and recollected terms.

Terms. M. M. i. 1, n.
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice.

Terms of law-courts. H. 4, S. P. v. 1, i.
The wearing out of six fashions (which is four terms or two actions).

Testern. G. V. i. 1, i.
You have testern'd me.

Than—then. Luc. n.
And their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and than
Retire again.

Tharborough—thirdborough, peace-officer. L. L. L. i. 1.
I am his grace's tharborough.

THR

That art not what thou'rt sure of. A. C. ii. 5, n.
O, that his fault should make a knave of thee,
That art not what thou'rt sure of!

That poor retention. So. cxxii. n.
That poor retention could not so much hold,
Nor need I tallies thy dear love to score.

That praise which Collatine doth owe—that object of praise which Collatine doth possess. Luc. n.
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise.

That's off—that is nothing to the matter. Cor. ii. 2, n.
That's off, that's off;
I would you rather had been silent.

The fifth, if I. L. L. L. v. 1, i.
The fifth, if I.

The rich golden shaft. T. N. i. 1, n.
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her!

Theatrical entertainments at the universities. H. ii. 2, i.
Seneca cannot be too heavy, &c.

Thee me—thee to me. So. xliii. n.
All days are nights to see, till I see thee,
And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee me.

Theorick—theory. H. F. i. 1, n.
So that the art and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorick.

"There dwelt a man in Babylon." T. N. ii. 3, i.
There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady.

There is a kind of character in thy life. M. M. i. 1, n.
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That, to the observer, doth thy history
Fully unfold.

Therefore we meet not now—we do not meet now on that account. H. 4, F. P. i. 1, n.
And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go;
Therefore we meet not now.

Thersites,—from Chapman's Homer. T. C. ii. 1, n.
The plague of Greece upon thee, &c.

Theseus. M. N. D. v. 1, i.
The battle with the Centaurs.

Things. T. S. iv. 3, n.
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things.

Thinks all is writ he spoken can—thinks all he can speak is as holy writ. P. ii. Gower, n.
Is still at Tharsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ he spoken can.

Thirdborough—petty constable. T. S. Induction, 1, n.
I must go fetch the thirdborough.

This brave o'erhanging firmament. H. ii. 2, n.
This most excellent canopy, the air, look you,
—this brave o'erhanging firmament—this majestical roof fretted with golden fire.

This 'longs the text—this belongs to the text. P. ii. Gower, n.
Pardon old Gower; this 'longs the text.

This present. T. N. i. 5, n.
Look you, sir, such a one I was this present.

This time remov'd—this time in which I was remote or absent from thee. So. xcvii. n.
And yet this time remov'd was summer's time.

Those eyes ador'd them—those eyes which adored them. P. ii. 4, n.
For they so stunk,
That all those eyes ador'd them ere their fall,
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Thou art raw. A. L. iii. 2, n.
God make incision in thee! thou art raw.

Thrasonical—from Thraso, the boasting soldier of Terence. L. L. L. v. 1, n.
Behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thrasonical.

Three-farthing silver pieces. J. i. 1, i.
Look, where three-farthings goes.

Three-man beetle. H. 4, S. P. i. 2, i.
Fillip me with a three-man beetle.

Three-men's songs. W. T. iv. 2, i.
Three-man song-men all.

Three-pile—rich velvet. W. T. iv. 2, n.
I have served prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pile.

Threne—funereal song. P. P. n.
Whereupon it made this threne
To the phœnix and the dove.

Thrice-crowned queen of night. A. L. iii. 2, n.
And, thou, thrice-crowned queen of night.

Thrift—a frugal arrangement. H. i. 2, n.
Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bak'd meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

THR

Through the sight I bear in things to love—through my prescience in knowing what things I should love. T. C. iii. 3, n.
Appear it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things to love,
I have abandon'd Troy.

Thy heart my wound—thy heart wounded as mine is. V. A. n.
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound.

Tickle—uncertain. H. 6, S. P. i. 1, n.
The state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point.

Tied. H. E. iv. 2, n.
One, that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom.

Tightly—briskly, cleverly. M. W. i. 3, n.
Bear you these letters tightly.

Tike—common dog, mongrel. H. F. ii. 1, n.
Base tike, call'st thou me host?

Tike—worthless dog. L. iii. 6, n. (See H. F. ii. 1, n.)
Hound or spaniel, brach or lym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail.

Tilly-fally. H. 4, S. P. ii. 4, n.
Tilly-fally, sir John, never tell me.

Tilt-yard. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
He never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard.

Tilts and tournaments. G. V. i. 3, i.
There shall he practise tilts and tournaments.

Time—tune. M. iv. 3, n.
This time goes manly.

Timeless—untimely. R. S. iv. 1, n.
The bloody office of his timeless end.

Timely-parted ghost—body recently parted from the soul. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost.

Time's chest. So. lxv. n.
Shall Time's best jewel from Time's chest lie hid?

Timon, account of, in North's translation of Plutarch. T. Ath. iii. 6, i.
Burn, house; sink, Athens! henceforth hated be
Of Timon, man, and all humanity.

Timon of Athens, account of, in "The Palace of Pleasure." T. Ath. v. 2, i.
I have a tree, which grows here in my close.

Tir'd—satiated, glutted. Luc. n.
What he beheld on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wiful eye he tir'd.

Tired—caparisoned. L. L. L. iv. 2.
The tired horse his rider.

'Tired—attired. V. A. n.
And Titan, 'tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them.

Tires—tears, preys. V. A. n.
Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone.

Tiring—attiring. C. E. ii. 2, n.
The money that he spends in tiring.

'Tis given with welcome—that 'tis given with welcome. M. iii. 4, n.
The feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making,
'Tis given with welcome.

'Tis in his buttons. M. W. iii. 2, n.
He will carry 't: 'tis in his buttons.

Tithe. M. M. iv. 1, n.
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's to sow.

Title-leaf. H. 4, S. P. i. 1, n.
Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Fortells the nature of a tragic volume.

To a wasteful cock—from a wasteful cock, from the scene of extravagance. T. Ath. ii. 2, n.
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow.

To do in slander. M. M. i. 4, n.
And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do in slander.

To fear—a thing to terrify. O. i. 2, n.
Of such a thing as thou,—to fear, not to delight.

To go in the song—to join in the song. M. A. i. 1, n.
Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

To his shape—in addition to his shape. J. i. 1, n.
And, to his shape, were heir to all his land.

To-pinch. M. W. iv. 4, n.
And fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight.

To slack—so as to slack. R. J. iv. 1, n.
And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.

TO

To-spend. J. v. 2, n.
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to-spend it so unneighbourly.

To the warm sun. L. ii. 2, n.
Good king, that must approve the common saw;
Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun!

To you—on you. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
I'll call to you.

Toad-stones. A. L. ii. 1, i.
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.

Toasts and butter—Londoners, eaters of buttered toasts. H. 4, F. P. iv. 2, n.
I pressed me none but such toasts and butter.

Tods of wool. W. T. iv. 2, i.
Every 'leven wether—tods.

Token'd pestilence. A. C. iii. 8, n.
Eno. How appears the fight?
Scar. On our side like the token'd pestilence,
Where death is sure.

Toll for this. A. W. v. 3, n.
I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this: I'll none of him.

Tomboys. Cy. i. 7, n.
To be partner'd
With tomboys.

Tongue—English language. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, n.
I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament.

Too fine—too full of finesse. A. W. v. 3, n.
But thou art too fine in thy evidence.

Too late a week—somewhat too late. A. L. ii. 3, n.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore, it is too late a week.

Too much i' the sun. H. i. 2, n.
King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?
Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much i' the sun.

Took away—being taken away. Luc. n.
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

Tooth-pick, custom of using. J. i. 1, i.
Now your traveller,
He and his tooth-pick.

Topmast, striking of. T. i. 1, i.
Down with the topmast.

Torch-bearer. R. J. i. 4, i.
Give me a torch.

Toss (v.)—toss upon a pike. H. 4, F. P. iv. 2, n.
P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.
Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss: food for powder.

Totter'd—tottering. R. S. iii. 3, n.
From this castle's totter'd battlements.

Tottering—tattering. J. v. 5, n.
And wound our tottering colours clearly up.

Touch—touchstone. R. T. iv. 2, n.
Now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold, indeed.

Touch—touchstone. T. Ath. iv. 3, n.
O thou touch of hearts!

Touch more rare—higher feeling. Cy. i. 2, n.
Harm not yourself with your vexation; I
Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Touches—traits. A. L. iii. 2, n.
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd.

Toward—in preparation. H. i. 1, n.
What might be toward that this sweaty haste
Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day?

Towards—ready, at hand. R. J. i. 5, n.
We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.

Trade—habitual course, path trodden. H. E. v. 1, n. (See R. S. iii. 3, n.)
Stands in the gap and trade of more preferments,
With which the time will load him.

Tranect—tow-boat. M. V. iii. 4, n.
Unto the tranect, to the common ferry.

Trash. T. i. 2, n.
Whom to advance, and whom
To trash for overtopping.

TUR

Trash of Venice, whom I trace. O. ii. 1, n.
If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace
For his quick hunting.

Travel. G. V. i. 3, i.
In having known no travel, &c.

Tray-trip. T. N. ii. 5, i.
Shall I play my freedom at tray-trip.

Treachers—cheaters, tricksters. L. i. 2, n.
Knaves, thieves, and treachers.

Tread the measures—to dance. V. A. n.
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures.

Trenchers. G. V. iv. 4, i.
He steps me to her trencher.

Trial by combat. R. S. i. 1, i.
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band?

Tribulation of Tower-hill. H. E. v. 3, i.
The Tribulation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limehouse.

Trick—peculiarity. A. W. i. 1, n.
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour.

Trick—peculiarity. J. i. 1, n.
He hath a trick of Cœur-de-Lion's face.

Trick'd—painted. H. ii. 2, n.
Horridly trick'd
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons.

Trip—the pace of the fairy. M. N. D. v. 2, i.
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Triple—third. A. C. i. 1, n.
And you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool.

Triplex—triple time in music. T. N. v. 1, n.
The triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure.

Triumph. M. N. D. i. 1, n. (See G. V. v. 4, i.)
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling.

Triumphs. G. V. v. 4, i.
Triumphs, mirth, and rare solemnity.

Troilus's reproach to Helenus. T. C. ii. 2, i.
You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest.

Trophies. H. iv. 5, i.
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones.

Tropically—figuratively. H. iii. 2, n.
The mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically.

Troth-plight—betrothed. H. F. ii. 1.
And, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Trotting paritor—officer of the Ecclesiastical Court who carries out citations. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
Sole imperator, and great general
Of trotting paritors.

Trou-madame. W. T. iv. 2, i.
Trol-my-dames.

Trow—I trow. M. A. iii. 4, n.
What means the fool, trow?

"Troy Book." T. C. iii. 3, i.
Expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes.

Truckle-bed. R. J. ii. 1, i.
I'll to my truckle-bed.

True-love showers. H. iv. 5, n.
Which bewept to the grave did not go,
With true-love showers.

True men. H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, n.
The thieves have bound the true men.

Trundle-tail—worthless dog. L. iii. 6, n.
Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail.

Trunks of the Elizabethan age. T. N. iii. 4, i.
Empty trunks o'erflourish'd by the devil.

Truth—honesty. M. V. iv. 1, n.
That malice bears down truth.

Tucket-sonaunce. H. F. iv. 2, n.
Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonaunce and the note to mount.

Tumbler. L. L. L. iii. 1, i.
And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop.

Turk Gregory—Pope Gregory VII. H. 4, F. P. v. 3, n.
Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day.

Turn (v.)—modulate. A. L. ii. 5, n.
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat.

Turn Turk with me—deal with me cruelly. H. iii. 2, n.
If the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me.

TUR

Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks. Cor. I, n.
O, that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves!

Turning the buckle behind. M. A. v. 1, i.
If he be [angry], he knows how to turn his girdle.

Turquoise, virtue of. M. V. iii. 1, i.
It was my turquoise.

Twelve score—twelve score yards. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, n.
And, I know, his death will be a march of twelve score.

Twelve score—twelve score yards. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
He would have clapped i' the clout at twelve score.

Twiggen—wicker. O. ii. 3, n.
I'll beat the knave into a twiggen bottle.

Twire. So. xxviii. n.
When sparkling stars twire not, thou gild'st the even.

Two broken points. T. S. iii. 2, n.
An old rusty sword ta'en out of the town armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points.

U.

Umber'd face. H. F. iv. Chorus, i.
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face.

Unadvised—unknowing. Luc. n.
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds.

Unavoided—not to be avoided. H. 6, F. P. iv. 5.
A terrible and unavoided danger.

Unbated—not blunted. H. iv. 7, n.
You may choose
A sword unbated, and, in a pass of practice,
Requite him for your father.

Unbolt (v.)—unfold, explain. T. Ath. i. 1, n.
Pain. How shall I understand you?
Poet. I'll unbolt to you.

Unbonneted. O. i. 2, n.
And my demerits
May speak, unbonneted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

Unchary on 't. T. N. iii. 4, n.
I have said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid mine honour too unchary on 't.

Uncurrent gold. H. ii. 2, i.
Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.

Under fiends—fiends below. Cor. iv. 5, n.
I will fight
Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends.

Undergoes—passes under. M. A. v. 2, n.
But, I must tell thee plainly, Claudio undergoes my challenge.

Understand them—stand under them. C. E. ii. 1, n.
Nay, he struck so plainly I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.

Undertaker—one who undertakes another's quarrel. T. N. iii. 4, n.
Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Unear'd—unploughed. So. iii. n.
For where is she so fair whose unear'd womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry?

Uneath—not easily. H. 6, S. P. ii. 4, n.
Uneath may she endure the flinty streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.

Unexpressive—inexpressible. A. L. iii. 2, n.
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she.

Unfair (v.)—deprive of fairness or beauty. So. v. n.
Those hours that with gentle work did frame
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair which fairly doth excel.

Unfurnish'd—unsurrounded by the other features. M. V. iii. 2, n.
But her eyes,—
How could he see to do them? having made one,
Methinks it should have power to steal both his,
And leave itself unfurnish'd.

Unhair'd—unbearded. J. v. 2, n.
This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at.

Unhappy—unlucky, mischievous. A. W. iv. 5, n.
A shrewd knave, and an unhappy.

UNH

Unhoused—unmarried. O. i. 2, n.
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription.

Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd—not having received the communion, not prepared, without the administration of extreme unction. H. i. 5, n.
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd.

Unimproved—unreproved. H. i. 1, n.
Young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle hot and full.

Union—rich pearl. H. v. 2, n.
And in the cup an union shall he throw.

Unkind—unnatural. A. L. ii. 7, n.
Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude.

Unkind. V. A. n.
O had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

Unless—except. Cor. v. 1, n.
So that all hope is vain,
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him.

Unloose it from their bond. Luc. n.
Those that much covet are with gain so fond
That what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unloose it from their bond.

Unmann'd—term of falconry. R. J. iii. 2, n.
Hood my unmann'd blood bating in my cheeks,
With thy black mantle.

Unquestionable—not to be questioned, not to be conversed with. A. L. iii. 2, n.
An unquestionable spirit; which you have not.

Unready—undressed. H. 6, F. P. ii. 1, n.
How now, my lords? what, all unready so?

Unrecalling—not to be recalled. Luc. n.
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wail the abusing of his time.

Unrespected—unregarded. So. xliii. n.
For all the day they view things unrespected.

Unrespective—inconsiderate. R. T. iv. 2, n.
I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys.

Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain. P. iii. 3, n.
Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will in 't.

Unsisting—never at rest. M. M. iv. 2, n.
That spirit's possess'd with haste,
That wounds the unsisting postern with these strokes.

Unstate. L. i. 2, n.
I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.

Unthread. J. v. 4, n.
Unthread the rude eye of rebellion.

Until your date expire—until you die. P. iii. 4, n.
Where you may 'bide until your date expire.

Untraded—unused, uncommon. T. C. iv. 5, n.
Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath.

Untrimm'd—undecorated. So. xviii. n.
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd.

Untrue—used as a substantive. So. cxiii. n.
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true mind thus maketh mine untrue.

Untwine. Cy. iv. 2, n.
And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine
His perishing root with the increasing vine.

Unwappen'd. T. N. K. v. 4, n.
We come tow'rds the gods
Young, and unwappen'd.

Unyoke—finish your work. H. v. 1, n.
Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.

Upon command—at your own will. A. L. ii. 7, n.
And therefore sit you down in gentleness,
And take upon command what help we have.

Upon the hip. M. V. i. 3, n.
If I can catch him once upon the hip.

Urchin-snouted—with the snout of the urchin, or hedgehog. V. A. n.
But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted boar.

Usances—usury. M. V. i. 3, i.
You have rated me
About my monies, and my usances.

Use—interest of money. M. M. i. 1, n.
She determines
Herself the glory of a creditor,
Both thanks and use.

Used—deported. H. E. iii. 1, n.
And, pray, forgive me,
If I have used myself unmannerly.

VEN

Usurer's chain—ornament of a wealthy citizen or goldsmith. M. A. ii. 1, n.
About your neck, like an usurer's chain.

Usurers, practices of. M. M. iv. 3, i.
He's in for a commodity of brown paper.

Utterance—à outrance. Cy. iii. 1, n.
Of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again, perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance.

Utterance—combat à outrance. M. iii. 1, n. (See Cy. iii. 1, n.)
Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance!

Utter'd—put forth. L. L. L. ii. 1, n.
Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues.

Uttered, heavenly—expelled, put out by the power of heaven. M. A. v. 3, n.
Till death be uttered,
Heavenly, heavenly.

V.

Vaded—faded, vanished. R. S. i. 2, n.
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all vaded.

Vaded—faded. P. P. n.
Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon vaded.

Vail (v.)—lower. M. M. v. 1, n.
Vail your regard
Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid!

Vail'd—lowered. V. A. n.
Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She vail'd her eyelids.

Vailing—causing to fall down. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Are angels vailing clouds.

Vailing—letting down. M. V. i. 1, n.
Vailing her high-top lower than her ribs.

Vails—lowers. V. A. n.
He vails his tail, that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent.

Vain—light of tongue. C. E. iii. 2, n.
'Tis holy sport, to be a little vain.

Valiant—manly. H. ii. 2, n.
Thy face is valiant since I saw thee last.

Validity—value. A. W. v. 3.
O, behold this ring,
Whose high respect, and rich validity.

Validity—value, worth. L. i. 1, n.
No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril.

Vantage—opportunity. Cy. i. 4, n.
Imo. When shall we hear from him?
Pis. Be assur'd, madam,
With his next vantage.

Varlet—servant. T. C. i. 1, n.
Call here my varlet, I'll unarm again.

Vassails. A. C. i. 4, n.
Leave thy lascivious vassails.

Vast—great space. W. T. i. 1, n.
Shook hands, as over a vast.

Vast of night. T. i. 2, n. (See H. i. 2, n.)
Urchins
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee.

Vastly—like a waste. Luc. n.
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly stood
Bare and unpeopled.

Vaunt—van. T. C. Prologue, n.
That our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils.

Vaward—van. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, n.
He being in the vaward, (plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,)
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.

Veil full purpose (v.)—conceal the full extent of his purpose. M. M. iv. 6, n.
Yet I am advis'd to do it;
He says, to veil full purpose.

Velure—velvet. T. S. iii. 2, n.
And a woman's crupper of velure.

Velvet-guards. H. 4, F. P. iii. 1, i.
To velvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Venetian galleys. M. V. i. 1, i.
Argosies with portly sail.

Venetian houses, furniture of. T. S. ii. 1, i.
I will unto Venice,
To buy apparel 'gainst the wedding-day.
. . . . . My house within the city
Is richly furnished with plate and gold.

Venew. L. L. L. v. 1, i.
Venew of wit.

VEN

Vengeance—mischief. A. L. iv. 3, n.
Whiles the eye of man did woo me,
That could do no vengeance to me.

Venice, climate of. T. S. iv. 1, i.
Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?
Gru. A piece of ice.

Venice, ferries at. M. V. iii. 4, i.
Unto the tranect, to the common ferry,
Which trades to Venice.

Venice, grass in. M. V. i. 1, i.
Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind.

Venice, notion of the mainland in. M. V. ii. 2, i.
I will run as far as God has any ground.

Venice, public places in. M. V. i. 3, i.

Venice, residences in. O. i. 1, i.
To start my quiet.

Ventidius,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 1, i.
Now, darting Parthia, &c.

Ventures. M. V. i. 1, n.
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted.

Venus and Adonis, passage from. R. J. ii. 5, i.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love.

Verbal—plain. Cy. ii. 3, n.
You put me to forget a lady's manners,
By being so verbal.

Very—true, real. G. V. iii. 2, n.
Especially, against his very friend.

Vice Iniquity. R. T. iii. 1, i.
Thus like the formal Vice Iniquity.

Vice of kings. H. iii. 4, n. (See H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.)
A vice of kings:
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule.

Vice's dagger. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, i.
And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire.

Vild—vile. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Things base and vild.

Vile-esteem'd. H. 6, F. P. i. 4, n.
And craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile-esteem'd.

Viliaco—rascal. H. 6, S. P. iv. 8, n.
I see them lording it in London streets,
Crying—Viliaco! unto all they meet.

Villain, in two senses: 1, worthless fellow; 2, one of mean birth. A. L. i. 1, n.
Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me, villain?
Orl. I am no villain: I am the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Bois.

Villainies of man will set him clear. T. Ath. iii. 3, n.
The devil knew not what he did when he made men politic; he crossed himself by 't: and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear.

Vinew'dest—most decayed, most mouldy. T. C. ii. 1, n.
Speak then, thou vinew'dest leaven, speak.

Viol-de-gamboys—base viol. T. N. i. 3, i.
Viol-de-gamboys.

Violent thefts. T. C. v. 3, n.
Do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to count violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.

Virgil's Æneid. H. 4, S. P. Induction, i.
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride.

Virginalling. W. T. i. 2, i.
Still virginalling
Upon his palm.

Virtue go—virtue to go. M. M. iii. 2, n.
Pattern in himself, to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go.

Vizaments—advisements. M. W. i. 1, n.
Take your vizaments in that.

Void of appointment—without preparation of armour or weapon. T. N. K. iii. 1, n.
I'll prove it in my shackles, with these hands Void of appointment.

Vows of chastity. G. V. iv. 3, i.
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.

Vox. T. N. v. i. n.
An your ladyship will have it as it ought to be, you must allow vox.

"Vulgar Errors," Sir Thomas Brown's. T. C. ii. 3, i.
The elephant hath joints, &c.

Vulgarly—publicly. M. M. v. 1, n.
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accus'd.

W.

Wafts—waves, signs. H. i. 4, n.
Look, with what courteous action
It wafts you to a more removed ground.

WAL

Walking-sticks. M. A. v. 4, i.
There is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Wall-newt and the water—the wall-newt and the water-newt. L. iii. 4, n.
The toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water.

Walter—commonly pronounced Water. H. 6, S. P. iv. 1, n.
A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by Water I should die.
Yet let not this make thee be bloody minded;
Thy name is Gualtier, being rightly sounded.

War proclaimed by Cæsar against Cleopatra,—from North's Plutarch. A. C. iii. 7, i.
'Tis said in Rome, &c.

Warden—name of a pear. W. T. iv. 2, n.
I must have saffron, to colour the warden pies.

Warder—truncheon, or staff of command. R. S. i. 3, n.
Stay, the king hath thrown his warder down.

Warkworth Castle. H. 4, S. P. Induction, i.
This worm-eaten hold of ragged stone.

Warn (v.)—summon. R. T. i. 3, n.
And sent to warn them to his royal presence.

Warn (v.)—summon. J. C. v. 1, n.
They mean to warn us at Philippi here.

Warrior—applied to a lady. O. ii. 1, n.
O my fair warrior!

Warrior. O. iii. 4, n. (See O. ii. 1, n.)
I was (unhandsome warrior as I am)
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul.

Warriors for the working day—soldiers ready for work, not dressed up for a holiday. H. F. iv. 3, n.
We are but warriors for the working day.

Wars (in the time of Elizabeth). G. V. i. 3, i.
Some, to the wars, &c.

Wasp-tongue—peevish and mischievous tongue. H. 4, F. P. i. 3, n.
Why, what a wasp-tongue and impatient fool.

Wasps. G. V. i. 2, i.
Injurious wasps! to feed on such sweet honey.

Watch—watch-light, night-candle. R. T. v. 3, n.
Give me a watch.

Watch him tame. O. iii. 3, n.
My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out of patience.

Watch in Italy. R. J. v. 3, i.
The watch is coming.

Watch-case. H. 4, S. P. iii. 1, n.
And leav'st the kingly couch,
A watch-case, or a common 'larum bell.

Watches. T. N. ii. 5, i.
Wind up my watch.

Water-galls. Luc. n.
These water-galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Wax (v.)—grow. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
That was the way to make his godhead wax.

Waxen—penetrable. R. S. i. 3, n.
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat.

Waxen epitaph. H. F. i. 2, n.
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Way of common trade—course, path traded or trodden continuously. R. S. iii. 3, n.
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head.

Way of life. M. v. 3, n.
My way of life
Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf.

"We three," picture of. T. N. ii. 3, i.
How now, my hearts? Did you never see the picture of we three?

Weak evils—causes of weakness. A. L. ii. 7, n.
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger.

Wearer's very means. A. L. ii. 7, n.
Till that the wearer's very means do ebb.

Web and the pin—dimness of sight, cataract. L. iii. 4, n.
He gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip.

Weed—garment. Luc. n.
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.

Weed—garment. So. ii. n.
Thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held.

Weeds. Cor. ii. 2, n.
As weeds before
A vessel under sail.

WHE

Weet (v.)—know. A. C. i. 1, n.
In which I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless.

Weigh out—outweigh. H. E. iii. 1, n.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here.

Weird. M. i. 3, n.
The weird sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land.

Welkin—blue. W. T. i. 2, n.
Look on me with your welkin eye.

Well. W. T. v. 1, n.
What were more holy
Than to rejoice the former queen is well?

Well appeared—rendered apparent. Cor. iv. 3, n.
But your favour is well appeared by your tongue.

Well believe this—be well assured of this. M. M. ii. 2, n.
Well believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs, &c.

Well-liking—in good condition. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Well-liking wits they have.

Welsh hook. H. 4, F. P. ii. 4, i.
A Welsh hook.

Were invincible—could not be mastered. H. 4, S. P. iii. 2, n.
He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible.

Westminster, William de Colchester, Abbot of. R. S. v. 6, i.
Hath yielded up his body to the grave.

Whales' bone—tooth of the walrus. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
To show his teeth as white as whales' bone.

What a fall Fortune does the Thick-lips owe—what a fall does Fortune owe the Thick-lips. O. i. 1, n.
What a fall Fortune does the Thick-lips owe,
If he can carry 't thus!

What he would not. Cor. v. 1, n.
What he would do,
He sent in writing after me,—what he would not;
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions.

What in rest you have. J. iv. 2, n.
If, what in rest you have in right you hold.

Whatever have—whatever things have. Cor. i. 2, n.
Whatever have been thought on in this state.

When—expression of impatience. T. i. 2, n.
Come forth, I say; there's other business for thee:
Come, thou tortoise! when!

When—expression of impatience. R. S. i. 1, n.
When, Harry? when?
Obedience bids I should not bid again.

When—expression of impatience. J. C. ii. 1, n.
When, Lucius, when! Awake, I say! What, Lucius!

"When daisies pied." L. L. L. v. 2, i.
When daisies pied, and violets blue.

Whenas—when. So. xlix. n.
Whenas thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects.

Wher'—wherefore. L. ii. 1, n.
Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not wher' he comes.

Whe'r—whether. So. lix. n.
Whether we are mended, or whe'r better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.

Whe'r—whether. J. i. 1, n.
But whe'r I be as true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head.

Where—whereas. G. V. iii. 1, n.
And, where I thought the remnant of mine age.

Where—whereas. H. 6, S. P. iii. 2, n.
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes.

Where—used as a noun. L. i. 1, n.
Thou losest here, a better where to find.

Where—whereas. L. i. 2, n.
Where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour.

Where—whereas. P. ii. 3, n.
Where now his son's like a glow-worm in the night.

Where—whereas. Luc. n.
Where now I have no one to blush with me.

Where is the life—title of a sonnet. T. S. iv. 1, n.
Where is the life that late I led?

"Where the bee sucks." T. v. 1, i.

WHE

Where their appointment we may best discover. A. C. iv. 10, n.
Our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,
Shall stay with us:—order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven:—
Where their appointment we may best discover.

Whereas—where. H. 6, S. P. i. 2, n.
You do prepare to ride unto Saint Alban's,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.

Whereas—where. P. i. 2, n.
I went to Antioch,
Whereas, thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty.

Wherein—in that. A. L. i. 2, n.
Punish me not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confess me much guilty to deny so fair and excellent ladies anything.

Wherein went he?—in what dress did he go? A. L. iii. 2, n.
How looked he? Wherein went he?

Which now you censure him—which now you censure him for. M. M. ii. 1, n.
Err'd in this point which now you censure him.

Which often,—thus,—correcting thy stout heart. Cor. iii. 2, n.
Waving thy head,
Which often,—thus,—correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble, as the ripest mulberry.

Whiffler. H. F. v. Chorus, i.
Like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king.

Whipping, custom of. A. W. ii. 2, i.
Do you cry, "O Lord, sir," at your whipping?

White death—paleness of death. A. W. ii. 3, n.
Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever.

Whiter, Mr., explanation of the passage, A. L. iii. 2, i.:—
Helen's cheek, but not her heart;
Cleopatra's majesty;
Atalanta's better part;
Sad Lucretia's modesty.

Whitsters—launders. M. W. iii. 3, n.
Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet mead.

Whitsun morris-dance. H. F. ii. 4, i.
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance.

Whose unwished yoke—to whose unwished yoke. M. N. D. i. 1, n.
Whose unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

Widowhood—property to which a widow is entitled. T. S. ii. 1, n.
And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood.

Wild—weald. H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, n.
There's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold.

Wild-goose chase. R. J. ii. 4, i.

Wilderness—wildness. M. M. iii. 1, n.
For such a warped slip of wilderness
Ne'er issued from his blood.

Will be his fire. Cor. ii. 1, n.
This, as you say,—suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence
Shall touch the people (which time shall not want,
If he be put upon 't, and that's as easy
As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble.

Will find employment—will find employment for. H. E. ii. 1, n.
And generally, whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment.

Will to her consent—will in proportion to her consent. R. J. i. 2, n.
My will to her consent is but a part.

Wimpled—veiled. L. L. L. iii. 1, n.
This wimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy.

Wincot. T. S. Induction, 2, i.
The fat alewife of Wincot.

Windows—eyelids. V. A. n.
Her two blue windows faintly she upheaveth.

Wind'ring—winding. T. iv. 1, n.
You nymphs call'd Naiads, of the wind'ring brooks.

Windsor Forest. H. 4, S. P. iv. 4, i.
I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

WIN

Windsor, state of, in the time of Henry IV. M. W. i. 4, i.
Never a woman in Windsor knows more of Anne's mind than I do.

Winter's pale. W. T. iv. 2, n.
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

Wise woman—witch. M. W. iv. 5, n.
Was 't not the wise woman of Brentford?

Wish him—commend him. T. S. i. 1, n.
I will wish him to her father.

Wistly—wistfully. R. S. v. 4, n.
And, speaking it, he wistly look'd on me.

Wit—mental power in general. M. V. ii. 1, n.
If my father had not scanted me,
And hedg'd me by his wit, to yield myself.

Wit—understanding. J. C. iii. 2, n.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth.

"Wit, whither wilt?" A. L. iv. 1, n.
A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say—"Wit, whither wilt?"

Witchcraft, law against, by James I. O. i. 3, i.
The bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter.

With tempering. V. A. n.
What wax so frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?

With the manner—in the fact. W. T. iv. 3.
If you had not taken yourself with the manner.

With what encounter so uncurrent. W. T. iii. 2, n.
Since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I
Have strain'd, to appear thus.

Without knives. T. Ath. i. 2, n.
Methinks, they should invite them without knives.

Wits—senses. M. A. i. 1, n.
In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off.

Wits, the. A. L. i. 2, n.
The dulness of the fool is the whetstone of the wits.

Witty—of sound judgment, of good understanding. H. 6, T. P. i. 2, n.
For they are soldiers,
Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit.

Woe to his correction—woe compared to his correction. G. V. ii. 4, n.
There is no woe to his correction.

Woman of the world—married. A. L. v. 3, n.
I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.

Woman-tired—hen-pecked. W. T. ii. 3, n.
Thou dotard, thou art woman-tired.

Women actors. M. N. D. i. 2, i.
You shall play it in a mask.

Wont—are accustomed. H. 6, F. P. i. 4, n.
How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,
Wont, through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city.

Wood—mad, wild. G. V. ii. 3, n.
Like a wood woman.

Wood—wild, mad. M. N. D. ii. 2, n.
And here am I, and wood within this wood.

Wood—mad. H. 6, F. P. iv. 7, n.
How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging wood,
Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Wood—mad. V. A. n.
Life-poisoning pestilence, and frenzies wood.

Woodbine. M. N. D. iv. 1, n.
So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist.

Woodman—hunter. M. W. v. 5, n.
Am I a woodman? ha!

Woolvish. Cor. ii. 3, n.
Why in this woolvish gown should I stand here?

Woolward—wanting a shirt. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
I go woolward for penance.

Woosel-cock. M. N. D. iii. 1, i.
The woosel-cock, so black of hue,
With orange-tawny bill.

Worm. M. M. iii. 1, n.
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm.

Worth—fortune, wealth. T. N. iii. 3, n.
But, were my worth, as is my conscience, firm.

ZEA

"Worth a Jew's eye." M. V. ii. 5, i.
Will be worth a Jewess' eye.

Worth the whistle. L. iv. 2, n.
I have been worth the whistle.

Worts—generic name of cabbages. M. W. i. 1, n.
Good worts! good cabbage.

Would—it would. A. W. i. 1, n.
Had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal.

Wound—twisted round. T. ii. 2, n.
Sometime am I
All wound with adders.

Wrack—wreck. O. ii. 1, n.
A noble ship of Venice
Hath seen a grievous wrack and sufferance.

Wreak—revenge. Cor. iv. 5, n.
Then if thou hast
A heart of wreak in thee, that will revenge
Thine own particular wrongs.

Wren of nine. T. N. iii. 2, n.
Look where the youngest wren of nine comes.

Wretch. O. iii. 3, n.
Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee!

Writhled—wrinkled. H. 6, F. P. ii. 3, n.
It cannot be this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Wrying—deviating from the right path. Cy. v. 1, n.
How many
Must murther wives much better than themselves,
For wrying but a little!

Y.

Yare—ready, nimble. M. M. iv. 2, n.
You shall find me yare.

Yare—nimble. A. C. iii. 11, n.
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank,
For being yare about him.

Yarely—quickly, readily. T. i. 1, n.
Fall to 't yarely, or we run ourselves aground.

Yeoman—bailiff's follower. H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, n.
Where's your yeoman?

Yet—now. A. W. i. 1, n.
Marry, yet, 'tis a withered pear.

Yield (v.)—reward. A. C. iv. 2, n.
Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
And the gods yield you for 't!

Yonder generation. M. M. iv. 3, n.
Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting
To yonder generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested.

York, Duchess of. R. S. v. 2, i.

You are allow'd—you are an allowed fool. L. L. L. v. 2, n.
Go, you are allow'd.

You are senseless—be you senseless. Cy. ii. 3, n.
So seem, as if
You were inspir'd to do those duties which
You tender to her, that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your dismission tends,
And therein you are senseless.

You are too young in this. A. L. i. 1, n.
Come, come, elder brother, you are too young in this.

You come—on which you come, or you come on. R. S. i. 1, n.
Yet one but flatters us,
As well appeareth by the cause you come.

You priority—you of priority. Cor. i. 1, n.
We must follow you;
Right worthy you priority.

Younger—younker, youngling. M. V. ii. 6, n.
How like a younger, or a prodigal.

Your eyes. A. L. i. 2, n.
If you saw yourself with your eyes, or knew yourself with your judgment.

Your gaskins fall. T. N. i. 5, n.
Clo. But I am resolved on two points.
Mar. That if one break the other will hold; or, if both break your gaskins fall.

Z.

Zeal, now melted. J. ii. 2, n.
Lest zeal, now melted, by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

INDEX II.

A.

AARON, a Moor..T. And. i. 2; ii. 1, 3, 4; iii. 1; iv. 2; v. 1, 3.
Abergavenny, Lord..H. E. i. 1.
Abhorson, an executioner..M. M. iv. 2, 3.
Abram, servant to Montague..R. J. i. 1.
Achilles, a Grecian commander..T. C. ii. 1, 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 5, 6. 7, 9.
Adam, servant to Oliver..A. L. i. 1; ii. 3, 6, 7.
Adrian, a lord..T. ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Adriana, wife to Antipholus of Ephesus..C. E. ii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 1.
Ædile..Cor. iii. 1, 3; iv. 6.
Ægeon, a merchant of Syracuse..C. E. i. 1; v. 1.
Æmilia, wife to Ægeon, an abbess at Ephesus..C. E. v. 1.
Æmilius, a noble Roman..T. And. iv. 4; v. 1, 3.
Æneas, a Trojan commander. T. C. i. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5; v. 2, 11.
Agamemnon, the Grecian general..T. C. i. 3; ii. 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 5, 10.
Agrippa, friend of Cæsar..A. C. ii. 2, 4, 7; iii. 2, 6; iv. 1, 6, 7; v. 1.
Ague-cheek, Sir Andrew..T. N. i. 3; ii. 3, 5; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 1; v. 1.
Ajax, a Grecian commander..T. C. ii. 1, 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 5, 6, 10.
Alarbus, son to Tamora..T. And. i. 2.
Albany, Duke of..L. i. 1, 4; iv. 2; v. 1, 3.
Alcibiades, an Athenian general..T. Ath. i. 1, 2; ii. 2; iii. 5; iv. 3; v. 5.
Alençon, Duke of..H. 6, F. P. i. 2, 6; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 7; v. 2, 4.
Alexander, servant to Cressida..T. C. i. 2.
Alexas, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. i. 2, 3, 5; ii. 5; iii. 3; iv. 2.
Alice, a lady attending on the Princess Katharine..H. F. iii. 4; v. 2.
Alonso, King of Naples..T. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Ambassador..H. v. 2.
Ambassadors to the King of England..H. F. i. 2.
Amiens, a lord attending upon the Duke in his banishment..A. L. ii. 1, 5, 7; v. 4.
Andromache, wife to Hector..T. C. v. 3.
Andronicus, Marcus, brother to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 1, 2; ii. 2, 5; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 3.
Andronicus, Titus, a noble Roman..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 3.
Angelo, a goldsmith..C. E. iii. 1, 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Angelo, the deputy [in the Duke's absence]..M. M. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 4; v. 1.
Angus, a nobleman of Scotland..M. i. 3, 4, 6; v. 2, 4, 7.
Anne, Lady, widow of Edward, Prince of Wales, son to King Henry VI.; afterwards married to the Duke of Gloster..R. T. i. 2; iv. 1.
Antenor, a Trojan commander..T. C. i. 2; iv. 1, 3, 4.
Antigonus, a Sicilian lord..W. T. ii. 1, 3; iii. 3.
Antiochus, King of Antioch..P. i. 1.
Antipholus of Ephesus, twin brother to Antipholus of Syracuse, but unknown to him, and son to Ægeon and Æmilia..C. E. iii. 1; iv. 1, 4; v. 1.
Antipholus of Syracuse, twin brother to Antipholus of Ephesus, but unknown to him, and son to Ægeon and Æmilia..C.E. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 3, 4; v. 1.
Antonio, father to Proteus..G. V. i. 3.
Antonio, the Merchant of Venice..M. V. i. 1, 3; ii. 6; iii. 3; iv. 1; v. 1.
Antonio, brother to Leonato..M. A. i. 2; ii. 1; v. 1, 4.
Antonio, a sea-captain, friend to Sebastian..T. N. ii. 1; iii. 3, 4; v. 1.
Antonio, brother to Prospero, and usurping Duke of Milan..T. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Antonius, Marcus, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar..J. C. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1; v. 1, 4, 5.
Antony, Mark, a triumvir..A. C. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 2, 3, 6, 7; iii. 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11; iv. 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13.
Apemantus, a churlish philosopher..T. Ath. i. 1, 2; ii. 2; iv. 3.
Apothecary..R. J. v. 1.
Apparitions..M. iv. 1.
Archidamus, a Bohemian lord..W. T. i. 1.
Arcite, in love with Emilia..T. N. K. i. 2; ii. 1, 2, 3, 5; iii. 1, 3, 5, 6; v. 1, 3, 4.
Ariel, an airy spirit..T. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 1; v. 1.
Armado, Don Adriano de, a fantastical Spaniard..L. L. L. i. 2; iii. 1; v. 1, 2.
Arragon, Prince of, suitor to Portia..M. V. ii. 9.
Artemidorus, a sophist of Cnidos..J. C. ii. 3; iii. 1.
Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, son of Geffrey, late Duke of Bretagne, the elder brother of King John..J. ii. 1; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 3.
Arviragus, son to Cymbeline, disguised under the name of Cadwal, supposed son to Belarius..Cy. iii. 3, 6; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 3, 5.

AST

Astringer, a gentle..A. W. v. 1, 3.
Athenian, an old..T. Ath. i. 1.
Attendant..M. A. v. 3.
Attendant on the young Prince Mamillius..W. T. ii. 3.
Attendant..Cy. iii. 5.
Attendant..M. i. 5; iii. 1.
Attendants..J. iv. 1.
Attendants..A. C. i. 2; iii. 9, 11.
Audrey, a country wench..A. L. iii. 3; v. 1, 3, 4.
Aufidius, Tullus, general of the Volsces..Cor. i. 2, 8, 10; iv. 5, 7; v. 2, 3, 5.
Aumerle, Duke of, son to the Duke of York..R. S. i. 3, 4; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 1; v. 2, 3.
Austria, Archduke of..J. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Autolycus, a rogue..W. T. iv. 2, 3; v. 2.
Auvergne, Countess of..H. 6, F. P. ii. 3.

B.

Bagot, a creature to King Richard..R. S. i. 4; ii. 1, 2; iv. 1.
Balthasar, servant to Romeo..R. J. i. 1; v. 1, 3.
Balthazar, a merchant..C. E. iii. 1.
Balthazar, servant to Portia..M. V. iii. 4.
Balthazar, servant to Don Pedro..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1, 3.
Banditti..T. Ath. iv. 3.
Banquo, a general of the King's army..M. i. 3, 4, 6; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 3.
Baptista, a rich gentleman of Padua..T. S. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 4; v. 1, 2.
Bardolph, follower of Falstaff..M. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 2; iii. 5; iv. 3, 5.
Bardolph..H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, 4; iii. 3; iv. 2.
Bardolph, Lord, an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. i. 1, 3.
Bardolph..H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, 2, 4; iii. 2; iv. 3; v. 1, 3, 5.
Bardolph, formerly servant to Falstaff, now a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. ii. 1, 3; iii. 2.
Barnardine, a dissolute prisoner..M. M. iv. 3; v. 1.
Bassanio, friend to Antonio..M. V. i. 1, 3; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Basset, of the Red Rose, or Lancaster faction..H. 6, F. P. iii. 4; iv. 1.
Bassianus, brother to Saturninus..T. And. i. 1, 2; ii. 2, 3.
Bastard of Orleans..H. 6, F. P. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 7; v. 4.
Bates, a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. iv. 1.
Bavian, a character in the morris-dance..T. N. K. iii. 5.
Beadle..H. 6, S. P. ii. 1.
Beadles..H. 4, S. P. v. 4.
Beatrice, niece to Leonato..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 4; iv. 1; v. 2, 4.
Beaufort, Cardinal, Bishop of Winchester, great uncle to the King..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 1; iii. 1, 2, 3.
Bedford, Duke of, brother to the King..H. F. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1; iv. 1, 3; v. 2.
Bedford, Duke of, uncle to the King, and Regent of France..H. 6, F. P. i. 1; ii. 1, 2; iii. 2.
Belarius, a banished lord, disguised under the name of Morgan..Cy. iii. 3, 6; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 3, 5.
Belch, Sir Toby, uncle of Olivia..T. N. i. 3, 5; ii. 3, 5; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 1, 2; v. 1.
Benedick, a young lord of Padua, favourite of Don Pedro..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1, 2, 4.
Benvolio, nephew to Montague, and friend to Romeo..R. J. i. 1, 2, 4, 5; ii. 1, 4; iii. 1.
Berkley, Earl..R. S. ii. 3.
Bernardo, an officer..H. i. 1, 2.
Bertram, Count of Rousillon..A. W. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 3, 5; iii. 3, 5, 6; iv. 2, 3; v. 3.
Bianca, daughter to Baptista, and sister to Katharina..T. S. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2; v. 1, 2.
Bianca, a courtezan..O. iii. 4; iv. 1; v. 1.
Biondello, servant to Lucentio..T. S. i. 1, 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 2.
Biron, a lord attending on the King..L. L. L. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 1; iv. 3; v. 2.
Blanch, daughter to Alphonso, King of Castile, and niece to King John..J. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Blunt, Sir James..R. T. v. 2.
Blunt, Sir Walter..H. 4, F. P. i. 1, 3; iii. 2; iv. 3; v. 1, 3.
Boatswain..T. i. 1; v. 1.
Bolingbroke, Henry, Duke of Hereford, son to John of Gaunt, afterwards King Henry IV...R. S. i. 1, 3; ii. 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1; v. 3, 6.
Bolingbroke, a conjurer; and a Spirit raised by him..H. 6, S. P. i. 4; ii. 3.
Bona, sister to the French Queen..H. 6, T. P. iii. 3.

CAT

Borachio, follower of Don John..M. A. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 3; iv. 2; v. 1.
Bottom, the weaver..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 1, 2.
Boult, servant to the Pander..P. iv. 3, 6.
Bourbon, Duke of..H. F. iii. 5; iv. 5.
Bourchier, Cardinal, Archbishop of Canterbury..R. T. iii. 1.
Boy..M. A. ii. 3.
Boy..M. M. iv. 1.
Boy, servant to Nym, Bardolph, and Pistol..H. F. ii. 1, 3; iii. 2; iv. 4.
Boy..R. J. ii. 2.
Boyet, a lord attending on the Princess of France..L. L. L. ii. 1; iv. 1; v. 2.
Brabantio, a senator; father to Desdemona..O. i. 1, 2, 3.
Brakenbury, Sir Robert, lieutenant of the Tower..R. T. i. 1, 4; iv. 1.
Brandon..H. E. i. 1.
Brother to the Gaoler..T. N. K. iv. 1.
Brutus, Decius, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Brutus, Junius, a tribune of the people..Cor. i. ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 2, 6; v. 1.
Brutus, Marcus, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. i. 2; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 3; v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.
Buckingham, Duke of; of the King's party..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3, 4; ii. 1; iii. 1; iv. 4, 8, 9; v. 1.
Buckingham, Duke of..R. T. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 4, 5, 7; iv. 2; v. 1.
Buckingham, Duke of..H. E. i. 1; ii. 1.
Bull-calf, a recruit..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2.
Bullen, Anne, Maid of Honour to Queen Katharine; afterwards Queen..H. E. i. 4; ii. 3.
Burgundy, Duke of..H. F. ii. 4; v. 2.
Burgundy, Duke of..H. 6, F. P. ii. 1, 2; iii. 2, 3; iv. 7; v. 2.
Burgundy, Duke of..L. i. 1.
Bushy, a creature to King Richard..R. S. i. 4; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Butts, Doctor, physician to the King..H. E.

C.

Cade, Jack, a rebel..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 10.
Cæsar, Julius..J. C. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1.
Cæsar, Octavius, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar..J. C. iv. 1; v. 1, 5.
Cæsar, Octavius, a triumvir..A. C. i. 4; ii. 2, 3, 6, 7; iii. 2, 6, 8, 10; iv. 1, 6, 10; v. 1, 2.
Caius, Dr., a French physician..M. W. i. 4; ii. 3; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 2, 5; v. 3, 5.
Calchas, a Trojan priest taking part with the Greeks..T. C. iii. 3; v. 2.
Caliban, a savage and deformed slave..T. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Calphurnia, wife to Cæsar..J. C. i. 2; ii. 2.
Cambridge, Earl of, a conspirator against the King..H. F. ii. 2.
Camillo, a Sicilian lord..W. T. i. 1, 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 3.
Campeius, Cardinal..H. E. ii. 2, 4; iii. 1.
Canidius, lieutenant-general to Antony..A. C. iii. 7, 8.
Canterbury, Archbishop of..H. F. i. 1, 2.
Caphis, servant to one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. ii. 1, 2.
Captain, a sea, friend to Viola..T. N. i. 2.
Captain of a band of Welshmen..R. S. ii. 4.
Captain..H. 6, F. P. ii. 2; iii. 2.
Captain, a sea..H. 6, S. P. iv. 1.
Captain..H. iv. 4.
Captain, a Roman..Cy. iv. 2.
Captain...T. And. i. 2.
Captains, two British..Cy. v. 3.
Capucius, ambassador from the Emperor Charles V...H. E. iv. 2.
Capulet..R. J. i. 1, 2, 5; iii. 1, 4, 5; iv. 2, 4, 5; v. 3.
Capulet, Lady, wife to Capulet..R. J. i. 1, 3; iii. 1, 4, 5; iv. 2, 3, 4, 5; v. 3.
Carlisle, Bishop of..R. S. iii. 2, 3; iv. 1; v. 6.
Carriers..H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, 4.
Casca, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. i. 2, 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Cassandra, daughter to Priam; a prophetess..T. C. ii. 2; v. 3.
Cassio, lieutenant to Othello..O. i. 2; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 3, 4; iv. 1; v. 1, 2.
Cassius, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. i. 2, 3; ii. 1; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 3; v. 1, 3.
Catesby, Sir William..R. T. i. 3; iii. 1, 2, 5, 7; iv. 2, 4; v. 3, 4.
Cathness, a nobleman of Scotland..M. v. 2, 4, 7.
Cato, Young, a friend to Brutus and Cassius..J. C. v. 3, 4.

INDEX II.

CEL

Celia, daughter to Frederick..A. L. i. 2, 3; ii. 4; iii. 2, 4, 5; iv. 1, 3; v. 4.
Ceres, a spirit..T. iv. 1.
Cerimon, a lord of Ephesus..P. iii. 2, 4; v. 3.
Chamberlain..H. 4, F. P. ii. 1.
Chamberlain, Lord..H. E. i. 3, 4; ii. 2, 3; iii. 2; v. 2, 3.
Chancellor, Lord..H. E. v. 2.
Charles, wrestler to Frederick..A. L. i. 1, 2.
Charles VI., King of France..H. F. ii. 4; iii. 5; v. 2.
Charles, Dauphin, and afterwards King of France..H. 6, F. P. i. 2, 5, 6; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 7; v. 2, 4.
Charmian, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. i. 2, 3, 5; ii. 5; iii. 3, 9, 11; iv. 2, 4, 11, 13; v. 2.
Chatillon, ambassador from France to King John..J. i. 1; ii. 1.
Chiron, son to Tamora..T. And. i. 2; ii. 1, 2, 3, 5; iv. 2, 4; v. 2.
Chorus..H. F. i. ii. iii. iv. v.
Chorus..R. J. i. 5.
Cicero, a senator..J. C. i. 2, 3.
Cinna, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Cinna, a poet..J. C. iii. 3.
Citizen of Antium..Cor. iv. 4.
Citizens..J. ii. 1.
Citizens..H. 6, S. P. iv. 5.
Citizens, three..R. T. ii. 3.
Citizens..R. J. i. 1; iii. 1.
Citizens, mutinous..Cor. i. 1; ii. 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 6.
Citizens..J. C. i. 1; iii. 2, 3.
Clarence, Thomas, Duke of..H. 4, S. P. iv. 4; v. 2.
Clarence, George, Duke of, brother to Edward IV...R. T. i. 1, 4.
Claudio, a young lord of Florence, favourite of Don Pedro..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1, 3, 4.
Claudio, a young gentleman..M. M. i. 3; iii. 1; iv. 2; v. 1.
Claudius, King of Denmark..H. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 3, 5, 7; v. 1, 2.
Claudius, a servant to Brutus..J. C. iv. 3.
Cleomenes, a Sicilian lord..W. T. iii. 1, 2; v. 1.
Cleon, Governor of Tharsus..P. i. 4; iii. 3; iv. 4.
Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt..A. C. i. 1, 2, 3, 5; ii. 5; iii. 3, 7, 9, 11; iv. 2, 4, 8, 10, 11, 13; v. 2.
Clerk of Chatham..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2.
Clifford, Lord, of the King's party..H. 6, S. P. iv. 8, 9; v. 1, 2.
Clifford, Young, son to Lord Clifford..H. 6, S. P. v. 1, 2.
Clifford, Lord; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 3, 4; ii. 2, 4, 6.
Clitus, a servant to Brutus..J. C. v. 5.
Cloten, son to the Queen by a former husband..Cy. i. 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 5; iv. 1, 2.
Clown, servant to the Countess of Rousillon..A. W. i. 3; ii. 2, 4; iii. 2; iv. 5; v. 2.
Clown, servant to Olivia..T. N. i. 5; ii. 3, 4; iii. 1; iv. 1, 2; v. 1.
Clown..M. M. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 2, 3.
Clown, son to the old Shepherd..W. T. iii. 3; iv. 2, 3; v. 2.
Clown, servant to Othello..O. iii. 1, 4.
Clown..A. C. v. 2.
Clown..T. And. iv. 3, 4.
Cobweb, a fairy..M. N. D. iii. 1; iv. 1.
Colevile, Sir John, an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. iv. 3.
Cominius, a general against the Volsces..Cor. i. 1, 6, 9; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 6; v. 1.
Conrade, follower of Don John..M. A. i. 3; iii. 3; iv. 2; v. 1.
Conspirators with Aufidius..Cor. v. 5.
Constable of France..H. F. ii. 4; iii. 5, 7; iv. 2, 5.
Constance, mother to Arthur..J. ii. 1; iii. 1, 4.
Cordelia, daughter to Lear..L. i. 1; iv. 4, 7; v. 2, 3.
Corin, a shepherd..A. L. ii. 4; iii. 2, 4, 5; v. 1.
Coriolanus, Caius Marcius, a noble Roman..Cor. i. 1, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 4, 5; v. 2, 3, 5.
Cornelius, a courtier..H. i. 2; ii. 2.
Cornelius, a physician..Cy. i. 6; v. 5.
Cornwall, Duke of..L. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 4; iii. 5, 7.
Costard, a clown..L. L. L. i. 1, 2; iii. 1; iv. 1, 2, 3; v. 1, 2.
Country People..T. N. K. ii. 3; iii. 5.
Court, a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. iv. 1.
Courtezan..C. E. iv. 3, 4; v. 1.
Courtier..H. v. 2.
Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury..H. E. ii. 4; v. 1, 2, 4.
Cressida, daughter to Calchas..T. C. i. 2; iii. 2; iv. 2, 4, 5; v. 2.
Crier..H. E. ii. 4.
Cromwell, servant to Wolsey..H. E. iii. 2; v. 2.
Cupid and Maskers..T. Ath. i. 2.
Curan, a courtier..L. ii. 1.
Curio, a gentleman attending on the Duke..T. N. i. 1, 4; ii. 4.
Curtis, servant to Petrucio..T. S. iv. 1.
Cymbeline, King of Britain..Cy. i. 2; ii. 3; iii. 1, 5; iv. 3; v. 2, 3, 5.

D.

Dancer, a, speaker of the Epilogue..H. 4, S. P. Epilogue.
Danes..H. iv. 5.

DAR

Dardanius, a servant to Brutus..J. C. v. 5.
Daughter to the Gaoler, in love with Palamon..T. N. K. ii. 1, 4, 6; iii. 2, 4, 5; iv. 1, 3; v. 2.
Daughter of Clarence..R. T. ii. 2; iv. 1.
Daughter of Antiochus..P. i. 1.
Davy, servant to Shallow..H. 4, S. P. v. 1, 3.
Deiphobus, son to Priam..T. C. iv. 1, 3, 4.
Demetrius, in love with Hermia..M. N. D. i. 1; ii. 2, 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Demetrius, friend of Antony..A. C. i. 1.
Demetrius, son to Tamora..T. And. i. 2; ii. 1, 2, 3, 5; iv. 2, 4; v. 2.
Dennis, servant to Oliver..A. L. i. 1.
Denny, Sir Anthony..H. E. v. 1.
Dercetas, friend of Antony..A. C. iv. 12; v. 1.
Desdemona, wife to Othello..O. i. 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 3, 4; iv. 1, 2, 3; v. 2.
Diana, daughter to the Widow..A. W. iii. 5; iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 3.
Diana..P. v. 2.
Dick, a follower of Jack Cade..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 3, 6, 7.
Diomedes, a Grecian commander..T. C. ii. 3; iii. 3; iv. 1, 3, 4, 5; v. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 10.
Diomedes, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. iv. 12, 13.
Dion, a Sicilian lord..W. T. iii. 1, 2; v. 1.
Dionyza, wife to Cleon..P. i. 4; iii. 3; iv. 1, 4.
Doctor, an English..M. iv. 3.
Doctor, a Scotch..M. v. 1, 3.
Doctor..T. N. K. iv. 3; v. 2.
Dogberry, a city officer..M. A. iii. 3, 5; iv. 2; v. 1.
Dolabella, friend of Cæsar..A. C. iii. 10; v. 1, 2.
Donalbain, son to Duncan..M. i. 2, 4, 6; ii. 3.
Door-keeper of the Council Chamber..H. E. v. 2.
Dorcas, a shepherdess..W. T. iv. 3.
Dorset, Marquis of, son to King Edward's Queen..R. T. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iv. 1.
Douglas, Archibald, Earl of..H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 3, 4.
Drawers, two..H. 4, S. P. ii. 4.
Dromio of Ephesus, twin brother to Dromio of Syracuse, and attendant on Antipholus of Ephesus..C. E. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 1; iv. 1, 4; v. 1.
Dromio of Syracuse, twin brother to Dromio of Ephesus, and attendant on Antipholus of Syracuse..C. E. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1, 2, 3, 4; v. 1.
Duke, father to Silvia..G. V. ii. 4; iii. 1, 2; v. 2, 4.
Duke, living in exile..A. L. ii. 1, 7; v. 4.
Dull, a constable..L. L. L. i. 1, 2; iv. 2; v. 1.
Dumain, a lord attending on the King..L. L. L. i. 1; ii. 1; iv. 3; v. 2.
Duncan, King of Scotland..M. i. 2, 4, 6.

E.

Edgar, son to Gloster..L. i. 2; ii. 1, 3; iii. 4, 6; iv. 1, 6; v. 1, 2, 3.
Edmund, Earl of Rutland, son to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. i. 3.
Edmund, bastard son to Gloster..L. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 2; iii. 3, 5, 7; iv. 2; v. 1, 3.
Edward, son to the Duke of York..H. 6, S. P. v. 1.
Edward, Earl of March, afterwards King Edward IV., son to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 2, 3, 6; iii. 2; iv. 1, 5, 7, 8; v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7.
Edward, Prince of Wales, son to Henry VI...H. 6, T. P. i. 1; ii. 2, 5; iii. 3; v. 4, 5.
Edward IV., King..R. T. ii. 1.
Edward, Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward V., son to Edward IV...R. T. iii. 1.
Egeus, father to Hermia..M. N. D. i. 1; iv. 1.
Eglamour, agent for Silvia in her escape..G. V. iv. 3; v. 1.
Elbow, a simple constable..M. M. ii. 1; iii. 2.
Elinor, the widow of King Henry II., and mother of King John..J. i. 1; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 3.
Elizabeth, Queen of King Edward IV...R. T. i. 3; ii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 1, 4.
Ely, Bishop of..H. F. i. 1, 2.
Emilia, a lady attending on the Queen..W. T. ii. 2.
Emilia, wife to Iago..O. ii. 1; iii. 1, 3, 4; iv. 2, 3; v. 1, 2.
Emilia, sister to Hippolyta..T. N. K. i. 1, 3; ii. 2, 5; iii. 5, 6; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4.
Enobarbus, Domitius, friend of Antony..A. C. i. 2; ii. 2, 6, 7; iii. 2, 5, 7, 8, 11; iv. 2, 6, 9.
Eros, friend of Antony..A. C. iii. 5, 9; iv. 4, 5, 7, 12.
Erpingham, Sir Thomas, an officer in King Henry's army..H. F. iv. 1.
Escalus, an ancient lord [joined with Angelo in the deputation]..M. M. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 4; v. 1.
Escalus, Prince of Verona..R. J. i. 1; iii. 1; v. 3.
Escanes, a lord of Tyre..P. i. 3; ii. 4.
Essex, Geffrey Fitz-Peter, Earl of, chief justiciary of England..J. i. 1.
Euphronius, an ambassador from Antony to Cæsar..A. C. iii. 10, 11.
Evans, Sir Hugh, a Welch parson..M. W. i. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 4, 5; v. 4, 5.
Exeter, Duke of, uncle to the King..H. F. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1; iv. 3, 6, 7, 8; v. 2.
Exeter, Thomas Beaufort, Duke of, great uncle to the King..H. 6, F. P. i. 1; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 1, 5.

GEO

Exeter, Duke of; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. i. 1; ii. 5; iv. 8.
Exton, Sir Pierce of..R. S. v. 4, 5, 6.

F.

Fabian, servant to Olivia..T. N. ii. 5; iii. 2, 4; iv. 1; v. 1.
Fairies..M. N. D. ii. 1, 3; iii. 1.
Falstaff, Sir John..M. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 2; iii. 3, 5; iv. 2, 5; v. 1, 5.
Falstaff, Sir John..H. 4, F. P. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 3; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4.
Falstaff..H. 4, S. P. i. 2; ii. 1, 4; iii. 2; iv. 3; v. 1, 3, 5.
Fang, a sheriff's officer..H. 4, S. P. ii. 1.
Fastolfe, Sir John..H. 6, F. P. iii. 2; iv. 1.
Father that has killed his son..H. 6, T. P. ii. 5.
Faulconbridge, Robert, son of Sir Robert Faulconbridge..J. i. 1.
Faulconbridge, Philip, half-brother to Robert Faulconbridge, bastard son to King Richard I...J. i. 1; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 2, 3; v. 1, 2, 6, 7.
Faulconbridge, Lady, mother to the Bastard and Robert Faulconbridge..J. i. 1.
Feeble, a recruit..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2.
Fenton..M. W. i. 4; iii. 4; iv. 6; v. 5.
Ferdinand, King of Navarre..L. L. L. i. 1; ii. 1; iv. 3; v. 2.
Ferdinand, son to the King of Naples..T. i. 1, 2; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 1.
Fishermen, three..P. ii. 1.
Fitzwater, Lord..R. S. iv. 1; v. 6.
Flaminus, servant to Timon..T. Ath. ii. 2; iii. 1, 4.
Flavius, steward to Timon..T. Ath. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 4; iv. 2, 3; v. 2.
Flavius, a tribune..J. C. i. 1.
Fleance, son to Banquo..M. ii. 1; iii. 3.
Florence, Duke of..A. W. iii. 1, 3.
Florizel, son to Polixenes..W. T. iv. 3; v. 1, 3.
Fluellen, an officer in King Henry's army..H. F. iii. 2, 6; iv. 1, 7, 8; v. 1.
Flute, the bellows-mender..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Fool..T. Ath. ii. 2.
Fool..L. i. 4, 5; ii. 4; iii. 2, 4, 6.
Ford, Mr., a gentleman dwelling at Windsor..M. W. ii. 1, 2; iii. 2, 3, 5; iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 5.
Ford, Mrs...M. W. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 3; iv. 2, 4; v. 3, 5.
Forester..L. L. L. iv. 1.
Fortinbras, Prince of Norway..H. iv. 4; v. 2.
France, Princess of..L. L. L. ii. 1; iv. 1; v. 2.
France, King of..A. W. i. 2; ii. 1, 3; v. 3.
France, King of..L. i. 1.
Francis, a drawer..H. 4, F. P. ii. 4.
Francisca, a nun..M. M. i. 5.
Francisco, a lord..T. ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Francisco, a soldier..H. i. 1.
Frederick, brother to the Duke, and usurper of his dominions..A. L. i. 2, 3; ii. 2; iii. 1.
Friar..M. A. iv. 1; v. 4.
Friends to the Gaoler..T. N. K. iv.
Froth, a foolish gentleman..M. M. ii. 1.

G.

Gadshill..H. 4, F. P. ii. 1, 2, 4.
Gallus, friend of Cæsar..A. C. v. 1, 2.
Gaoler..C. E. i. 1.
Gaoler..W. T. ii. 2.
Gaoler..T. N. K. ii. 1, 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 4.
Gaolers, two..Cy. v. 4.
Gardener..R. S. iii. 4.
Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester..H. E. ii. 2; v. 1, 2
Gargrave, Sir Thomas..H. 6, F. P. i. 4.
Garter King at Arms..H. E. v. 4.
Gaunt, John of, Duke of Lancaster, uncle to the King..R. S. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 1.
General of the French forces in Bordeaux..H. 6, F. P. iv. 2.
Gentleman..H. 4, F. P. iv. 4.
Gentleman attending on the Chief Justice..H. 4, S. P. i. 2.
Gentleman, French, friend to Philario..Cy. i. 5.
Gentleman..L. i. 5; ii. 4; iii. 1; v. 3.
Gentleman, attendant on Cordelia..L. iv. 3, 6, 7.
Gentleman..T. N. K. iv. 2.
Gentlemen, two..A. W. iii. 2.
Gentlemen, two fantastic..M. M. i. 2, 3.
Gentlemen..W. T. v. 1, 2.
Gentlemen, two, prisoners with Suffolk..H. 6, S. P. iv. 1.
Gentlemen..R. T. i. 2.
Gentlemen, three..H. E. ii. 1; iii. 1; iv. 1.
Gentlemen..H. iv. 5; v. 1.
Gentlemen, two, of Cymbeline's court..Cy. i. 1; ii. 1.
Gentlemen..O. ii. 1; iii. 2.
Gentlemen, two..P. iii. 2; iv. 5; v. 1.
Gentlewoman attending on Lady Macbeth..M. v.
Gentlewoman attending Virgilia..Cor. i. 3.
George, a follower of Jack Cade..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 7.
George, afterwards Duke of Clarence, son to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. ii. 2, 3, 6; iii. 2; iv. 1, 2, 3, 6, 8; v. 1, 3, 4, 5, 7.

GER

Gerrold, a schoolmaster..T. N. K. iii. 5.
Gertrude, Queen of Denmark, and mother of Hamlet ..H. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 1, 5, 7; v. 1, 2.
Ghost of Banquo..M. iii. 4; iv. 1.
Ghost of Cæsar..J. C. iv. 3.
Ghost of Hamlet's father..H. i. 1, 4, 5; iii. 4.
Ghosts..R. T. v. 3.
Ghosts..Cy. v. 4.
Glansdale, Sir William..H. 6, F. P. i. 4.
Glendower, Owen..H. 4, F. P. iii. 1.
Gloster, Duchess of..R. S. i. 2.
Gloster, Duke of, brother to the King..H. F. i. 2; iii. 1, 6; iv. 1, 3, 7, 8; v. 2.
Gloster, Duke of, uncle to the King, and Protector.. H. 6, F. P. i. 1, 3; iii. 1, 4; iv. 1; v. 1, 5.
Gloster, Humphrey, Duke of, uncle to the King..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 1, 3, 4; iii. 1.
Gloster, Eleanor, Duchess of..H. 6, S. P. i. 2, 3, 4; ii. 3, 4.
Gloster, Richard, Duke of, brother to Edward IV., afterwards King Richard III...R. T. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 4, 5, 7; iv. 2, 3, 4; v. 3, 4.
Gloster, Earl of..L. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 2, 4; iii. 3, 4, 6, 7; iv. 1, 6; v. 2.
Gobbo, Launcelot, a clown, servant to Shylock..M. V. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5; iii. 5; v. 1.
Gobbo, Old, father to Launcelot..M. V. ii. 2.
Goneril, daughter to Lear..L. i. 1, 3, 4; ii. 4; iii. 7; iv. 2; v. 1, 3.
Gonzalo, an honest old counsellor of Naples..T. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Goths..T. And. v. 1, 3.
Governor of Harfleur..H. F. iii. 3.
Governor of Paris..H. 6, F. P. iv. 1.
Gower, of the King's party..H. 4, S. P. ii. 1.
Gower, an officer in King Henry's army..H. F. iii. 2, 6; iv. 1, 7, 8; v. 1.
Gower, as Chorus..P. i.; ii.; iv. 4; v.; v. 2, 3.
Grandpré, a French lord..H. F. iv. 2.
Gratiano, friend to Antonio and Bassanio..M. V. i. 1; ii. 2, 4, 6; iii. 2; iv. 1, 2; v. 1.
Gratiano, brother to Brabantio..O. v. 1, 2.
Gravediggers, two..H. v. i.
Green, a creature to King Richard..R. S. i. 4; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Gregory, servant to Capulet..R. J. i. 1.
Gremio, a suitor to Bianca..T. S. i. 1, 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; v. 1, 2.
Grey, Lady, afterwards Queen to Edward IV...H. 6, T. P. iii. 2; iv. 1, 4; v. 7.
Grey, Lord, son to King Edward's Queen..R. T. i. 3; ii. 1; iii. 3.
Grey, Sir Thomas, a conspirator against the King.. H. F. ii. 2.
Griffith, gentleman-usher to Queen Katharine..H. E. ii. 4; iv. 2.
Groom..R. S. v. 5.
Grooms, two..H. 4, S. P. v. 5.
Grumio, servant to Petrucio..T. S. i. 2; iii. 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 2.
Guard..H. 6, F. P. iii. 2.
Guards, two Volscian..Cor. v. 2.
Guards..A. C. iv. 12; v. 2.
Guiderius, son to Cymbeline, disguised under the name of Polydore, supposed son to Belarius..Cy. iii. 3, 6; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 3, 5.
Guildenstern, a courtier..H. ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 3, 4.
Guildford, Sir Henry..H. E. i. 4.
Gurney, James, servant to Lady Faulconbridge..J. i. 1.

H.

Haberdasher..T. S. iv. 3.
Hamlet, son to the former, and nephew to the present King..H. i. 2, 4, 5; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 3, 4; iv. 2, 3, 4; v. 1, 2.
Harcourt, of the King's party..H. 4, S. P. iv. 4.
Hastings, Lord, an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. i. 3; iv. 1, 2.
Hastings, Lord; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. iv. 1, 3, 5, 7; v. 7.
Hastings, Lord..R. T. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 2, 4.
Hecate..M. iii. 5; iv. 1.
Hector, son to Priam..T. C. i. 2; ii. 2; iv. 5; v. 1, 3, 4, 6, 9.
Helen, woman to Imogen..Cy. ii. 2.
Helen, wife to Menelaus..T. C. iii. 1.
Helena, in love with Demetrius..M. N. D. i. 1; ii. 2, 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Helena, a gentlewoman, protected by the Countess.. A. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 3, 4, 5; iii. 2, 5, 7; iv. 4; v. 1, 3.
Helenus, son to Priam..T. C. i. 2; ii. 2.
Helicanus, a lord of Tyre..P. i. 2, 3; ii. 4; v. 1, 2, 3.
Henry, Prince, son to King John; afterwards King Henry III...J. v. 7.
Henry IV., King..H. 4, F. P. i. 1, 3; iii. 2; v. 1, 4, 5.
Henry, Prince of Wales, son to the King..H. 4, F. P. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 2, 3; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4, 5.
Henry IV., King..H. 4, S. P. iii. 1; iv. 4.
Henry, Prince of Wales; afterwards King Henry V. ..H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, 4; iv. 4; v. 2, 5.
Henry V., King..H. F. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1, 3, 6; iv. 3, 6, 7, 8; v. 2.
Henry VI., King..H. 6, F. P. iii. 1, 4; iv.

HEN

Henry VI., King..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 4, 9; v. 1, 2.
Henry VI., King..H. 6, T. P. i. 1; ii. 2, 5; iii. 1; iv. 6, 8; v. 6.
Henry VIII., King..H. E. i. 2, 4; ii. 2, 4; iii. 2; v. 1, 2, 4.
Herald, English..J. ii. 2.
Herald, French..J. ii. 2.
Herald..H. F. iv. 8.
Herald..H. 6, S. P. ii. 4.
Herald..L. v. 3.
Herald..O. ii. 2.
Herald, a Roman..Cor. ii. 1.
Herald..T. N. K. i. 4.
Heralds, two..R. S. i. 3.
Herbert, Sir Walter..R. T. v. 2.
Hermia, daughter to Egeus, in love with Lysander.. M. N. D. i. 1; ii. 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Hermione, Queen to Leontes..W. T. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; v. 3.
Hero, daughter to Leonato..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 1, 4; iv. 1; v. 4.
Hippolyta, Queen of the Amazons, betrothed to Theseus..M. N. D. i. 1; iv. 1; v. 1.
Hippolyta, bride to Theseus..T. N. K. i. 1, 3; ii. 5; iii. 5, 6; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4.
Holofernes, a schoolmaster..L. L. L. iv. 2; v. 1, 2.
Horatio, friend to Hamlet..H. i. 1, 2, 4, 5; iii. 2; iv. 5, 6; v. 1, 2.
Horner, Thomas, an armourer..H. 6, S. P. i. 3; ii. 3.
Hortensio, a suitor to Bianca..T. S. i. 1, 2; ii. 1 iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 3, 5; v. 2.
Hortensius, servant to one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. iii. 4.
Host, where Julia lodges..G. V. iv. 2.
Host of the Garter Inn..M. W. i. 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 3, 5, 6.
Hostess..T. S. Induction, 1.
Hubert de Burgh, chamberlain to the King..J. ii. 2; iii. 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 3; v. 3, 6.
Hume, a priest..H. 6, S. P. i. 2, 4; ii. 3.
Humphrey, Prince, of Gloster, afterwards created (2 Henry V.) Duke of Gloster..H. 4, S. P. iv. 4; v. 2.
Huntsman, a..H. 6, T. P. iv. 5.
Huntsmen..T. S. Induction, 1.
Hymen, person representing..A. L. v. 4.

I.

Iachimo, a Roman, friend to Philario..Cy. i. 5, 7; ii. 2, 4; v. 2, 5.
Iago, ancient to Othello..O. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2, 3, 4; iv. 1, 2; v. 1, 2.
Iden, Alexander, a Kentish gentleman..H. 6, S. P. iv. 10; v. 1.
Imogen, daughter to Cymbeline by a former Queen.. Cy. i. 2, 4, 7; ii. 2, 3; iii. 2, 4, 6; iv. 2; v. 2, 5.
Iras, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. i. 2, 3, 5; ii. 5; iii. 3, 9, 11; iv. 2, 11, 13; v. 2.
Iris, a spirit..T. iv. 1.
Isabel, Queen of France..H. F. v. 2.
Isabella, sister to Claudio..M. M. i. 5; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1; iv. 1, 3, 6; v. 1.

J.

Jamy, an officer in King Henry's army..H. F. iii. 2.
Jaquenetta, a country wench..L. L. L. i. 2; iv. 2, 3.
Jaques, a lord attending upon the Duke in his banishment..A. L. ii. 5, 7; iii. 2, 3; iv. 1, 2; v. 4.
Jaques, son of Sir Rowland de Bois..A. L. v. 4.
Jessica, daughter to Shylock..M. V. ii. 3, 5, 6; iii. 2, 4, 5; v. 1.
Jeweller..T. Ath. i. 1.
John, Don, bastard brother to Don Pedro..M. A. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 2; iv. 1.
John, King..J. i. 1; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 3, 7.
John, Prince, of Lancaster, son to the King..H. 4, F. P. v. 1, 4, 5.
John, Prince, of Lancaster, afterwards created (2 Henry V.) Duke of Bedford..H. 4, S. P. iv. 2, 3, 4; v. 2, 5.
John, a follower of Jack Cade..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 7.
John, Friar, a Franciscan..R. J. v. 2.
Jourdain, Margery, a witch..H. 6, S. P. i. 4; ii. 3.
Julia, a lady of Verona, beloved of Proteus..G. V. i. 2; ii. 2, 7; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 4.
Juliet, beloved of Claudio..M. M. i. 3; ii. 3; v. 1.
Juliet, daughter to Capulet..R. J. i. 3, 5; ii. 2, 5, 6; iii. 2, 5; iv. 1, 2, 3, 5; v. 3.
Juno, a spirit..T. iv. 1.
Justice, a..M. M. ii. 1.

K.

Katharina, the Shrew, daughter to Baptista..T. S. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 1, 3, 5; v. 1, 2.
Katharine, daughter of Charles and Isabel..H. F. iii. 4; v. 2.
Katharine, lady attending on the Princess..L. L. L. ii. 1; iv. 1; v. ii.
Katharine, Queen, wife to King Henry, afterwards divorced..H. E. i. 2; ii. 4; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Keeper..R. S. v. 5.
Keeper to Mortimer..H. 6, F. P. ii. 5.
Keepers, two..H. 6, T. P. iii. 1.

LYS

Kent, Earl of..L. i. 1, 4, 5; ii. 2, 4; iii. 2, 4, 6; iv. 3, 7; v. 3.
Knights..P. ii. 3, 5.
Knights, six valiant..T. N. K. v. 4.

L.

La Pucelle, Joan, commonly called Joan of Arc..H. 6, F. P. i. 2, 5, 6; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 7; v. 2, 3, 4.
Ladies, two, attending on the Queen..W. T. ii. 1.
Lady attending on the Queen..R. S. iii. 4.
Lady, old, friend to Anne Bullen..H. E. ii. 3; v.
Lady..Cy. i. 4, 6; ii. 3; v. 5.
Laertes, son to Polonius..H. i. 2, 3; iv. 5, 7; v. 1, 2.
Lafeu, an old lord..A. W. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 3, 5; iv. 5; v. 2, 3.
Langley, Edmund of, Duke of York, uncle to the King..R. S. ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1; v. 2, 3, 6.
Launce, a clownish servant to Proteus..G. V. ii. 3, 5; iii. 1; iv. 4.
Laurence, Friar, a Franciscan..R. J. ii. 3, 6; iii. 3; iv. 1, 5; v. 2, 3.
Lavinia, daughter to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 3, 5; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1; v. 2, 3.
Lawyer..H. 6, F. P. ii. 4.
Le Beau, a courtier attending upon Frederick..A. L. i. 2.
Lear, King of Britain..L. i. 1, 4, 5; ii. 4; iii. 2, 4, 6; iv. 6, 7; v. 2, 3.
Legate..H. 6, F. P. v. 1.
Lenox, a nobleman of Scotland..M. i. 2, 4, 6; ii. 3; iii. 1, 4, 6; iv. 1; v. 2, 4, 7.
Leonardo, servant to Bassanio..M. V. ii. 2.
Leonato, governor of Messina..M. A. 1, 2; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2, 5; iv. 1; v. 1, 4.
Leonine, servant to Dionyza..P. iv. 1, 2.
Leontes, King of Sicilia..W. T. i. 2; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2; v. 1, 3.
Lepidus, Marcus Æmilius, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar..J. C. iii. 1; iv. 1.
Lepidus, M. Æmilius, a triumvir..A. C. i. 4; ii. 2, 4, 6, 7; iii. 2.
Lewis, the Dauphin..J. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 4; v. 2, 5.
Lewis, the Dauphin..H. F. ii. 4; iii. 5, 7; iv. 2, 5.
Lewis XI., King of France..H. 6, T. P. iii. 3.
Lieutenant of the Tower..H. 6, T. P. iv. 6.
Lieutenant..Cor. i. 7.
Lieutenant to Aufidius..Cor. iv. 7.
Ligarius, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. ii. 1, 2.
Lincoln, Bishop of..H. E. ii. 4.
Lion, in the Interlude..M. N. D. v. 1.
Lodovico, kinsman to Brabantio..O. 3; v. 1, 2.
Longaville, a lord attending on the King..L. L. L. i. 1; ii. 1; iv. 3; v. 2.
Lord..L. L. L. ii. 1.
Lord..T. S. Induction, 1, 2.
Lord, a Sicilian..W. T. v. 1.
Lord..R. S. iv. 1.
Lord, a British..Cy. v. 3.
Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench..H. 4, S. P. i. 2; ii. 1; v. 2, 5.
Lord Mayor of London..R. T. iii. 1, 5, 7.
Lords that serve with Bertram in the Florentine war.. A. W. ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 6; iv. 1, 3.
Lords, French..A. W. i. 2.
Lords..A. L. ii. 1, 2, 7; iv. 2.
Lords..W. T. ii. 1, 3; iii. 2.
Lords, two..Cy. i. 3; ii. 1, 3; iv.
Lords..M. iii. 4, 6.
Lords..T. Ath. i. 1; iii. 6.
Lords, Volscian..Cor. v. 5.
Lords..P. i. 2, 4; ii. 2, 4.
Lorenzo, in love with Jessica..M. V. i. 1; ii. 4, 6; iii. 2, 4, 5; v. 1.
Lovel, Lord..R. T. iii. 4, 5.
Lovell, Sir Thomas..H. E. i. 2, 3, 4; ii. 1; iii. 2; v. 1.
Luce, servant to Adriana..C. E. iii. 1; v. 1.
Lucentio, son to Vincentio, in love with Bianca..T. S. i. 1, 2; ii. 1; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 2.
Lucetta, waiting-woman to Julia..G. V. i. 2; ii. 7.
Luciana, sister to Adriana..C. E. ii. 1, 2; iii. 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 1.
Lucilius, servant to Timon..T. Ath. i. 1.
Lucilius, a friend to Brutus and Cassius..J. C. iv. 2, 3; v. 1, 3, 4, 5.
Lucio, a fantastic..M. M. i. 2, 3, 5; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 3; v. 1.
Lucius, a lord, flatterer of Timon..T. Ath. i. 2; iii. 2.
Lucius, servant to one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. iii. 4.
Lucius, Caius, general of the Roman forces..Cy. iii. 1, 5; iv. 2; v. 2, 5.
Lucius, a servant to Brutus..J. C. ii. 1, 4; iv. 2, 3.
Lucius, son to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1; v. 1, 3.
Lucius, Young, a boy, son to Lucius..T. And. iii. 2; iv. 1, 2, 3; v. 3.
Lucullus, a lord, flatterer of Timon..T. Ath. iii. 1.
Lucy, Sir William..H. 6, F. P. iv. 3, 4, 7.
Lychorida, nurse to Marina..P. iii. 1, 3.
Lysander, in love with Hermia..M. N. D. i. 1; ii. 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Lysimachus, governor of Mitylene..P. iv. 6; v. 1, 2, 3.

M.

Macbeth, a general of the King's army..M. i. 3, 4, 5, 7; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 1; v. 3, 5, 7.
Macbeth, Lady..M. i. 5, 6, 7; ii. 2, 3; iii. 1, 2, 4; v. 1.
Macduff, a nobleman of Scotland..M. i. 6; ii. 3, 4; iv. 3; v. 4, 6, 7.
Macduff, Lady..M. iv. 2.
Macmorris, an officer in King Henry's army..H. F. iii. 2.
Malcolm, son to Duncan..M. i. 2, 4, 6; ii. 3; iv. 3; v. 4, 6, 7.
Malvolio, steward to Olivia..T. N. i. 5; ii. 2, 3, 5; iii. 4; iv. 2; v. 1.
Mamillius, son to Leontes..W. T. i. 2; ii. 1.
Man, old, tenant to Gloster..L. iv. 1.
Man, an old..M. ii. 4.
Marcellus, an officer..H. i. 1, 2, 4, 5.
March, Edmund Mortimer, Earl of..H. 4, F. P. iii. 1.
March, Edmund Mortimer, Earl of..H. 6, F. P. ii. 5.
Marcius, Young, son to Coriolanus..Cor. v. 3.
Mardian, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. i. 5; ii. 5; iv. 11, 12.
Margarelon, a bastard son of Priam..T. C. v. 8.
Margaret, gentlewoman attending on Hero..M. A. ii. 1; iii. 1, 4; v. 2.
Margaret, daughter to Reignier, afterwards married to King Henry..H. 6, F. P. v. 3.
Margaret, Queen to King Henry..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 4, 9; v. 1, 2.
Margaret, Queen..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 4; ii. 2, 5; iii. 3; v. 4, 5.
Margaret, widow of King Henry VI...R. T. i. 3; iv. 4.
Maria, a lady attending on the Princess..L. L. L. ii. 1; iv. 1; v. 2.
Maria, Olivia's woman..T. N. i. 3, 5; ii. 3, 5; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 2.
Mariana, neighbour and friend to the Widow..A. W. iii. 5.
Mariana, betrothed to Angelo..M. M. iv. 1, 6; v. 1.
Marina, daughter to Pericles and Thaisa..P. iii. 3; iv. 1, 3, 6; v. 1, 2, 3.
Mariner..W. T. iii. 3.
Mariners..T. i. 1.
Marshal, Lord, and another Lord..R. S. i. 3; iv. 1.
Marshal..P. ii. 3.
Mar-text, Sir Oliver, a vicar..A. L. iii. 3.
Martius, son to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1.
Marullus, a tribune..J. C. i. 1.
Master of a ship..T. i. 1; v. 1.
Master and Master's Mate..H. 6, S. P. iv. 1.
Master-Gunner of Orleans, and his Son..H. 6, F. P. i. 4.
Mayor of London..H. 6, F. P. i. 3; iii. 1.
Mayor of Saint Alban's..H. 6, S. P. ii. 1.
Mayor of York..H. 6, T. P. iv. 7.
Mecænas, friend of Cæsar..A. C. ii. 2, 4, 6, 7; iii. 6; iv. 1; v. 1, 2.
Melun, a French lord..J. v. 2, 4.
Menas, friend of Pompey..A. C. ii. 1, 6, 7.
Menecrates, friend of Pompey..A. C. ii. 1.
Menelaus, brother to Agamemnon..T. C. i. 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 8, 10.
Menenius Agrippa, friend to Coriolanus..Cor. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 6; v. 1, 2, 4.
Menteth, a nobleman of Scotland..M. v. 2, 4, 7.
Mercade, a lord attending on the Princess of France..L. L. L. v. 2.
Merchant, friend to Antipholus of Syracuse..C. E. i. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Merchant..T. Ath. i. 1.
Mercutio, kinsman to the Prince, and friend to Romeo..R. J. i. 4; ii. 1, 4; iii. 1.
Messala, a friend to Brutus and Cassius..J. C. iv. 3; v. 1, 2, 3, 5.
Messenger..M. A. i. 1; iii. 5; v. 4.
Messenger..M. M. iv. 2.
Messenger..J. iv. 2; v. 3, 5.
Messenger..H. 4, S. P. iv. 1.
Messenger..H. F. ii. 4; iii. 7; iv. 2.
Messenger..H. E. iv. 2.
Messenger..H. iv. 7.
Messenger..Cy. ii. 3; v. 4.
Messenger..O. i. 3.
Messenger..T. Ath. v. iii.
Messenger..L. iv. 2, 4.
Messenger..M. iv. 2; v. 5.
Messenger..J. C. v. 1.
Messenger..T. And. iii. 1.
Messenger..P. i. 1.
Messenger..T. N. K. iv. 2; v. 2, 4.
Messengers..H. 4, F. P. iv. 1; v. 2.
Messengers..H. 6, F. P. i. 1, 4; ii. 2, 3; iv. 3; v. 2.
Messengers..H. 6, S. P. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 4, 7, 9.
Messengers..H. 6, T. P. i. 2; ii. 1, 2; iii. 3; iv. 1, 6; v. 1, 4.
Messengers..R. T. ii. 4; iii. 2; iv. 4; v. 3.
Messengers..Cor. i. 1, 4, 6; ii. 1; iv. 6; v. 4.
Messengers..A. C. i. 2, 4; ii. 5; iii. 3, 7; iv. 6; v. 1.
Metellus Cimber, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Michael, Sir, a friend of the Archbishop..H. 4, F. P. iv. 4.
Michael, a follower of Jack Cade..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2.
Miranda, daughter to Prospero..T. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 1.

MON

Montague, Marquis of; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 2, 6; iv. 1, 6, 8; v. 1.
Montague..R. J. i. 1; iii. 1; v. 3.
Montague, Lady, wife to Montague..R. J. i. 1; iii. 1.
Montano, Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus..O. ii. 1, 3; v. 2.
Montgomery, Sir John..H. 6, T. P. iv. 7.
Montjoy, a French herald..H. F. iii. 6; iv. 3, 7.
Moonshine, in the Interlude..M. N. D. v. 1.
Mopsa, a shepherdess..W. T. iv. 3.
Morocco, Prince of, suitor to Portia..M. V. ii. 1, 7.
Mortimer, Lady, daughter to Glendower, and wife to Mortimer..H. 4, F. P. iii. 1.
Mortimer, Sir Hugh, uncle to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. i. 2.
Mortimer, Sir John, uncle to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. i. 2.
Morton, domestic of Northumberland..H. 4, S. P. i. 1.
Morton, John, Bishop of Ely..R. T. iii. 4.
Moth, page to Armado..L. L. L. i. 2; iii. 1; v. 1, 2.
Moth, a fairy..M. N. D. iii. 1.
Mouldy, a recruit..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2.
Mowbray, Lord, an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. i. 3; iv. 1, 2.
Murderers, two..H. 6, S. P. iii. 2.
Murderers, two..R. T. i. 3, 4.
Murderers, three..M. iii. 1, 3, 4; iv. 2.
Musicians..Cy. ii. 3.
Musicians..O. iii. 1.
Musicians, three..R. J. iv. 5.
Mustard-seed, a fairy..M. N. D. iii. 1; iv. 1.
Mutius, son to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2.
Myrmidons..T. C. v. 9.

N.

Nathaniel, Sir, a curate..L. L. L. iv. 2; v. 1, 2.
Neighbours of Horner..H. 6, S. P. ii. 3.
Nerissa, waiting-maid to Portia..M. V. i. 2; ii. 1, 9; iii. 2, 4; iv. 1, 2; v. 1.
Nestor, a Grecian commander..T. C. i. 3; ii. 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 5, 10.
Nobleman, a..H. 6, T. P. iii. 2.
Norfolk, Robert Bigot, Earl of..J. iv. 3; v. 2, 4, 7.
Norfolk, Mowbray, Duke of..R. S. i. 1, 3.
Norfolk, Duke of; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. i. 1; ii. 2.
Norfolk, Duke of..R. T. v. 3, 4.
Norfolk, Duke of..H. E. i. 1, 2; ii. 2; iii. 2; v. 2, 4.
Northumberland, Earl of..R. S. ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1; v. 1, 6.
Northumberland, Henry Percy, Earl of..H. 4, F. P. i. 3.
Northumberland, Earl of; an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. i. 1; ii. 3.
Northumberland, Lady..H. 4, S. P. ii. 3.
Northumberland, Earl of; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 4; ii. 2.
Nurse to Juliet..R. J. i. 3, 5; ii. 2, 4, 5; iii. 2, 3, 5; iv. 2, 3, 4, 5.
Nurse and a Black Child..T. And. iv. 2.
Nym, follower of Falstaff..M. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 1.
Nym, formerly servant to Falstaff, now a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. ii. 1, 3; iii. 2.
Nymphs..T. iv. 1.

O.

Oberon, king of the fairies..M. N. D. ii. 2, 3; iii. iv. 1; v. 2.
Octavia, sister to Cæsar, and wife to Antony..A. C. ii. 3; iii. 2, 4, 6.
Officer..C. E. iv. 1, 4.
Officer employed by Edmund..L. v. 3.
Officers, two..T. N. iii. 4.
Officers of a Court of Judicature..W. T. iii. 2.
Officers..H. 6, F. P. i. 3; iv. 4.
Officers..Cor. ii. 2.
Officers..A. C. iv. 4.
Oliver, son of Sir Rowland de Bois..A. L. i. 1; iii. 1; iv. 3; v. 2, 4.
Olivia, a rich countess..T. N. i. 5; iii. 1, 4; iv. 1, 3; v. 1.
Ophelia, daughter of Polonius..H. i. 3; ii. 1; iii. 1, 2; iv. 5.
Orlando, son of Sir Rowland de Bois..A. L. i. 1, 2; ii. 3, 6, 7; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 2, 4.
Orleans, Duke of..H. F. iii. 7; iv. 2, 5.
Orsino, Duke of Illyria..T. N. i. 1, 4; ii. 4; v. 1.
Osric, a courtier..H. v. 2.
Oswald, steward to Goneril..L. i. 3, 4; ii. 2, 4; iii. 7; iv. 2, 5, 6.
Othello, the Moor..O. i. 2, 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2, 3, 4; iv. 1, 2, 3; v. 1, 2.
Outlaws with Valentine..G. V. iv. 1; v. 3, 4.
Overdone, Mistress, a bawd..M. M. i. 2; iii. 2.
Oxford, Earl of; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. iii. 3; iv. 2, 3, 6, 8; v. 1, 2, 4, 5.
Oxford, Earl of..R. T. v. 2, 3.

P.

Page, Mr., a gentleman dwelling at Windsor..M. W. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2, 3, 4; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 5.
Page, Mrs...M. W. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3, 4; iv. 1, 2, 4; v. 3, 5.

POR

Page, Mrs. Anne, daughter to Mrs. Page..M. W. i. 1; iii. 4; v. 5.
Page, William, a boy, son to Mr. Page..M. W. iv. 1; v. 5.
Page..T. S. Induction, 2; i. 1.
Page..A. W. i. 1.
Page..H. 4, S. P. i. 2; ii. 1, 2, 4; v. 1, 3, 5.
Page..R. T. iv. 2.
Page to Gardiner..H. E. v. 1.
Page to Paris..R. J. v. 3.
Page..T. Ath. ii. 2.
Pages, two..A. L. v. 3.
Painter..T. Ath. i. 1; v. 1.
Palamon, in love with Emilia..T. N. K. i. 2; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 3, 6; v. 1, 4.
Pandarus, uncle to Cressida..T. C. i. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 3, 11.
Pander..P. iv. 3, 6.
Pandulph, Cardinal, the Pope's legate..J. iii. 1, 4; v. 1, 2.
Panthino, servant to Antonio..G. V. i. 3; ii. 2, 3.
Paris, a young nobleman, kinsman to the Prince..R. J. i. 2; iii. 4; iv. 1, 5; v. 3.
Paris, son to Priam..T. C. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 1; iv. 1, 3, 4; v. 8.
Parolles, a follower of Bertram..A. W. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 3, 4, 5; iii. 5, 6; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 3.
Patience, woman to Queen Katharine..H. E. iii. 1; iv. 2.
Patricians..Cor. iii. 1, 2.
Patroclus, a Grecian commander..T. C. ii. 1, 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1.
Paulina, wife to Antigonus..W. T. ii. 2, 3; iii. 2; v. 1, 3.
Peas-blossom, a fairy..M. N. D. iii. 1; iv. 1.
Pedant, an old fellow set up to personate Vincentio..T. S. iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 2.
Pedro, Don, Prince of Arragon..M. A. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1, 3, 4.
Pembroke, William Mareshall, Earl of..J. i. 1; ii. 1; iv. 2, 3; v. 2, 4, 7.
Pembroke, Earl of; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. iv. 1.
Percy, Henry, son to the Earl of Northumberland..R. S. ii. 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1; v. 3, 6.
Percy, Henry, surnamed Hotspur, son to the Earl of Northumberland..H. 4, F. P. i. 3; ii. 3; iii. 1; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 3, 4.
Percy, Lady, wife to Hotspur, and sister to Mortimer..H. 4, F. P. ii. 3; iii. 1.
Percy, Lady..H. 4, S. P. ii. 3.
Perdita, daughter to Leontes and Hermione..W. T. ii. 3; iii. 3; iv. 3; v. 1, 3.
Pericles, Prince of Tyre..P. i. 1, 2, 4; ii. 1, 3, 5; iii. 1, 3; v. 1, 2, 3.
Perithous, an Athenian general..T. N. K. i. 1, 3; ii. 5; iii. 5, 6; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4.
Peter, a friar..M. M. iv. 5, 6; v. 1.
Peter of Pomfret, a prophet..J. iv. 2.
Peter, servant to Horner..H. 6, S. P. i. 3; ii. 3.
Peter..R. J. ii. 4, 5; iv. 5.
Petitioners..H. 6, S. P. i. 3.
Peto..H. 4, F. P. ii. 2, 4; iii. 3.
Peto, an attendant on Prince Henry..H. 4, S. P. ii. 4.
Petrucio, a gentleman of Verona, a suitor to Katharina..T. S. i. 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 1, 3, 5; v. 1, 2.
Phebe, a shepherdess..A. L. iii. 5; v. 2, 4.
Philario, a Roman, friend to Posthumus..Cy. i. 5; ii. 4.
Philemon..P. iii. 2.
Philip, King of France..J. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 4.
Philo, friend of Antony..A. C. i. 1.
Philostrate, master of the revels to Theseus..M. N. D. i. 1; v. 1.
Philotus, servant to one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. iii. 4.
Phrynia, mistress to Alcibiades..T. Ath. iv. 3.
Physician..L. iv. 4, 7.
Pinch, a schoolmaster and a conjurer..C. E. iv. 4.
Pindarus, servant to Cassius..J. C. iv. 2; v. 3.
Pirates..P. iv. 1, 3.
Pisanio, gentleman to Posthumus..Cy. i. 2, 4, 6, 7; ii. 3; iii. 2, 4, 5; iv. 3; v. 3, 5.
Pistol, follower of Falstaff..M. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 2; v. 5.
Pistol..H. 4, S. P. ii. 4; v. 3, 5.
Pistol, formerly servant to Falstaff, now a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. ii. 1, 3; iii. 2, 6; iv. 1, 4; v. 1.
Plantagenet, Richard, eldest son of Richard, late Earl of Cambridge, afterwards Duke of York..H. 6, F. P. ii. 4, 5; iii. 1; iv. 1, 3; v. 3, 4.
Players..T. S. Induction, 1.
Players..H. ii. 2; iii. 2.
Poet..T. Ath. i. 1; v. 1.
Poet..J. C. iv. 3.
Poins..H. 4, F. P. i. 2; ii. 2, 4.
Poins, an attendant on Prince Henry..H. 4, S. P. ii. 2, 4.
Polixenes, King of Bohemia..W. T. i. 2; iv. 1, 3; v. 3.
Polonius, lord chamberlain..H. i. 2, 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 1, 2, 3, 4.
Pompeius, Sextus..A. C. ii. 1, 6, 7.
Popilius Lena, a senator..J. C. iii. 1.
Porter..H. 4, S. P. i. 1.
Porter..H. 6, F. P. ii. 3.
Porter, and his Man..H. E. v.
Porter..M. ii. 3.

POR

Portia, a rich heiress..M. V. i. 2; ii. 1, 7, 9; iii. 2, 4; iv. 1, 2; v. 1.
Portia, wife to Brutus..J. C. i. 2; ii. 1, 4.
Posthumus, Leonatus, husband to Imogen..Cy. i. 2, 5; ii. 4, 5; v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.
Prentices, friends of Peter..H. 6, S. P. ii. 3.
Priam, King of Troy..T. C. ii. 2; v. 3.
Priest..T. N. v. 1.
Priest..R. T. iii. 2.
Priest..H. v. 1.
Proculeius, friend of Cæsar..A. C. v. 1, 2.
Prologue, in the Interlude..M. N. D. v. 1.
Prospero, the rightful Duke of Milan..T. i. 2; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1; v. 1.
Proteus..G. V. i. 1, 3; ii. 2, 4, 6; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 2, 4.
Provost..M. M. i. 3; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2, 3; v. 1.
Publius, a senator..J. C. ii. 2; iii. 1.
Publius, son to Marcus, the tribune..T. And. iv. 3; v. 2.
Puck, or Robin-goodfellow, a fairy..M. N. D. ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1; v. 2.
Pursuivant..R. T. iii. 2.
Pyramus, in the Interlude..M. N. D. iii. 1; v. 1.

Q.

Queen to King Richard..R. S. ii. 1, 2; iii. 4; v. 1.
Queen, wife to Cymbeline..Cy. i. 2, 6; ii. 3; iii. 1, 5.
Queens, three..T. N. K. i. 1, 4, 5.
Quickly, Mrs., servant to Dr. Caius..M. W. i. 4; ii. 1, 2; iii. 4, 5; iv. 1, 5; v. 1, 5.
Quickly, Mrs., hostess of a tavern in Eastcheap..H. 4, F. P. ii. 4; iii. 3.
Quickly, hostess..H. 4, S. P. ii. 1, 4; v. 4.
Quickly, Pistol's wife, an hostess..H. F. ii. 1, 3.
Quince, the carpenter..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Quintus, son to Titus Andronicus..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1.

R.

Rambures, a French lord..H. F. iii. 7; iv. 2, 5.
Ratcliff, Sir Richard..R. T. ii. 2; iii. 3, 4, 5; iv. 3, 4; v. 3.
Reapers..T. iv. 1.
Regan, daughter to Lear..L. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 4; iii. 7; iv. 5; v. 1, 3.
Reignier, Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples..H. 6, F. P. i. 2, 6; ii. 1; v. 3, 4.
Reynaldo, servant to Polonius..H. ii. 1.
Richard II., King..R. S. i. 1, 3, 4; ii. 1; iii. 2, 3; iv. 1; v. 1, 5.
Richard, son to the Duke of York..H. 6, S. P. v. 1, 2, 3.
Richard, afterwards Duke of Gloster, son to the Duke of York..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 2; ii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6; iii. 2; iv. 1, 3, 5, 7, 8; v. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.
Richmond, Henry, Earl of, a youth..H. 6, T. P. iv. 6.
Richmond, Henry, Earl of, afterwards King Henry VII...R. T. v. 2, 3, 4.
Rivers, Lord, brother to Lady Grey..H. 6, T. P. iv. 4.
Rivers, Earl, brother to King Edward's Queen..R. T. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 3.
Robin, page to Falstaff..M. W. i. 3; ii. 2; iii. 2, 3.
Roderigo, a Venetian gentleman..O. i. 1, 2, 3; ii. 1, 3; iv. 2; v. 1.
Rogero, a Sicilian gentleman..W. T. v. 2.
Roman..T. And. v. 3.
Roman..Cor. iv. 3.
Romeo, son to Montague..R. J. i. 1, 2, 4, 5; ii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6; iii. 1, 3, 5; v. 1, 3.
Rosalind, daughter to the banished Duke..A. L. i. 2, 3; ii. 4; iii. 2, 4, 5; iv. 1, 3; v. 2, 4.
Rosaline, a lady attending on the Princess..L. L. L. ii. 1; iv. 1; v. 2.
Rosencrantz, a courtier..H. ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; iv. 1, 2, 3, 4.
Ross, Lord..R. S. ii. 1, 3; iii. 1.
Rosse, a nobleman of Scotland..M. i. 2, 3, 4, 6; ii. 4; iii. 1, 4; iv. 2, 3; v. 4, 7.
Rotherham, Thomas, Archbishop of York..R. T. ii. 4.
Rousillon, Countess of, mother to Bertram..A. W. i. 1, 3; ii. 2; iii. 2, 4; iv. 5; v. 3.
Rugby, servant to Dr. Caius..M. W. i. 4; ii. 3; iii. 1, 2.
Rumour..H. 4, S. P. i. Induction.

S.

Sailor..H. iv. 6.
Sailor..O. i. 3.
Sailors, two..P. iii. 1; v. 1.
Salarino, friend to Antonio and Bassanio..M. V. i. 1; ii. 4, 6, 8; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1.
Salisbury, William Longsword, Earl of..J. i. 1; iii. 1; iv. 2, 3; v. 2, 4, 7.
Salisbury, Earl of..R. S. ii. 4; iii. 2, 3.
Salisbury, Earl of..H. F. iv. 3.
Salisbury, Earl of..H. 6, F. P. i. 4.
Salisbury, Earl of; of the York faction..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 2, 3; iii. 2, 3; v. 1, 3.
Sampson, servant to Capulet..R. J. i. 1.
Sands, Lord..H. E. i. 3, 4; ii. 1.
Saturninus, son to the late Emperor of Rome..T. And. i. 1, 2; ii. 2, 4; iv. 4; v. 3.
Say, Lord..H. 6, S. P. iv. 4, 7.
Scales, Lord, governor of the Tower..H. 6, S. P. iv. 5.

SCA

Scarus, friend of Antony..A. C. iii. 8; iv. 7, 8, 10.
Scribes..H. E. ii. 4.
Scrivener..R. T. iii. 6.
Scroop, Sir Stephen..R. S. iii. 2, 3.
Scroop, Archbishop of York..H. 4, F. P. iv. 4.
Scroop, Lord, a conspirator against the King..H. F. ii. 2.
Sebastian, a young gentleman, brother to Viola..T. N. ii. 1; iii. 3; iv. 1, 3; v. 1.
Sebastian, brother to Alonso..T. i. 1; ii. 1; iii. 3; v. 1.
Secretaries to Wolsey..H. E. i. 1.
Seleucus, an attendant on Cleopatra..A. C. v. 2.
Sempronius, a lord, flatterer of Timon...T. Ath. i. 2; iii. 3.
Senators, two..Cy. iii. 7.
Senators, two..O. i. 3.
Senators..T. Ath. ii. 1; iii. 5; v. 2, 3, 5.
Senators..Cor. i. 1, 2, 4; ii. 2; iii. 1, 2, 3; v. 4.
Sentinels, two French..H. 6, F. P. ii. 1.
Sergeant, a French..H. 6, F. P. ii. 1.
Sergeant at Arms..H. E. i. 1.
Servant..G. V. ii. 4.
Servant..M. V. i. 2; ii. 9; iii. 1.
Servant..A. W. iv. 3.
Servant..T. N. iii. 4.
Servant..M. M. ii. 2, 4.
Servant..W. T. iii. 2.
Servant to the old Shepherd..W. T. iv. 3.
Servant..R. S. ii. 2; iii. 4; v. 4.
Servant..H. 4, F. P. ii. 3.
Servant..H. 6, S. P. ii. 4.
Servant..H. E. i. 4.
Servant..H. iv. 6.
Servant of Isidore, one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. ii. 2.
Servant of Ventidius..T. Ath. i. 1.
Servant..M. iii. 2; v. 3.
Servant to Paris..T. C. iii. 1.
Servant to Troilus..T. C. i. 2; iii. 2.
Servant to Diomedes..T. C. v. 5.
Servant..J. C. ii. 2; iii. 1, 2.
Servant to Emilia..T. N. K. ii. 2; v. 3.
Servants, two..M. W. iv. 2.
Servants..T. S. Induction, 1, 2; i. 1; iii. 1; iv. 1.
Servants..R. J. i. 2, 3, 5; iv. 2, 4.
Servants..T. Ath. i. 1, 2; iii. 1, 3; iv. 2.
Servants of Varro, one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. ii. 2; iii. 4.
Servants to Cornwall..L. iii. 7.
Servants, three..Cor. iv. 5.
Servants..A. C. ii. 7; iv. 2.
Servants..P. iii. 2.
Servilius, servant to Timon..T. Ath. ii. 2; iii. 2, 4.
Serving-men..H. 6, F. P. i. 3; iii. 1; iv. 7.
Sexton..M. A. iv. 2; v. 1.
Seyton, an officer attending on Macbeth..M. v. 3, 5.
Shadow, a recruit..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2.
Shallow, a country justice..M. W. i. 1; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2, 4; iv. 2; v. 2.
Shallow, a country justice..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2; v. 1, 3, 5.
Shepherd, an old, reputed father of Perdita..W. T. iii. 3; iv. 3; v. 2.
Shepherd, an old, father to Joan la Pucelle..H. 6, F. P. v. 4.
Sheriff..H. 4, F. P. ii. 4.
Sheriff..H. 6, S. P. ii. 4.
Sheriff of Wiltshire..R. T. v. 1.
Shylock, a Jew..M. V. i. 3; ii. 5; iii. 1, 3; iv. 1.
Sicinius Velutus, a tribune of the people..Cor. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 1, 3; iv. 2, 6; v. 1, 4.
Silence, a country justice..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2; v. 3.
Silius, an officer in Ventidius's army..A. C. iii. 1.
Silvia, the Duke's daughter, beloved of Valentine..G. V. ii. 1, 4; iv. 2, 3, 4; v. 1, 3, 4.
Silvius, a shepherd..A. L. ii. 4; iii. 5; iv. 3; v. 2, 4.
Simonides, King of Pentapolis..P. ii. 2, 3, 5.
Simpcox, an impostor..H. 6, S. P. ii. 1.
Simple, servant to Slender..M. W. i. 1, 2, 4; iii. 1; iv. 5.
Siward, Earl of Northumberland, general of the English forces..M. v. 4, 6, 7.
Siward, Young, son to Siward, Earl of Northumberland..M. v. 4, 7.
Slender, cousin to Shallow..M. W. i. 1; ii. 3; iii. 1, 2, 4; v. 2, 5.
Sly, Christopher, a drunken tinker..T. S. Induction, 1, 2; i. 1.
Smith, the weaver, a follower of Jack Cade..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 6, 7.
Snare, a sheriff's officer..H. 4, S. P. ii. 1.
Snout, the tinker..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Snug, the joiner..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Solanio, friend to Antonio and Bassanio..M. V. i. 1; ii. 4, 8; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1.
Soldier, French..H. F. iv. 4.
Soldier, English..H. 6, F. P. ii. 1.
Soldier, French, H. 6, F. P. iii. 2.
Soldier..H. 6, S. P. iv. 6.
Soldier..T. Ath. v. 4, 5.
Soldier..M. i. 2; v. 4.
Soldier, Volscian..Cor. i. 10.
Soldiers..A. W. iv. 1, 3.
Soldiers, Roman..Cor. i. 4, 5.
Soldiers to Antony..A. C. iii. 7; iv. 3, 5.
Soldiers to Cæsar..A. C. iv. 6, 9.
Solinus, Duke of Ephesus..C. E. i. 1; v. 1.
Somerset, John Beaufort, Earl of; afterwards Duke..H. 6, F. P. ii. 4; iii. 1; iv. 1, 4.

VAL

Somerset, Duke of; of the King's party..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 9; v. 1, 2.
Somerset, Duke of; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. iv. 1, 2, 3, 6; v. 1, 2, 4, 5.
Somerville, Sir John..H. 6, T. P. v. 1.
Son that has killed his father..H. 6, T. P. ii. 5.
Son to Clarence..R. T. ii. 2.
Son to Macduff..M. iv. 2.
Soothsayer..Cy. iv. 2; v. 5.
Soothsayer..J. C. i. 2; ii. 4; iii. 1.
Soothsayer..A. C. i. 2; ii. 3.
Southwell, a priest..H. 6, S. P. i. 4; ii. 3.
Speed, a clownish servant to Valentine..G. V. i. 1; ii. 1, 4, 5; iii. 1; iv. 1.
Stafford, Sir Humphrey..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 3.
Stafford, William..H. 6, S. P. iv. 2, 3.
Stafford, Lord; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. iv. 1.
Stanley, Lord..R. T. i. 3; ii. 1, 2; iii. 2, 4; iv. 1, 2, 4, 5; v. 3, 4.
Stanley, Sir John..H. 6, S. P. ii. 4.
Stanley, Sir William..H. 6, T. P. iv. 5.
Starveling, the tailor..M. N. D. i. 2; iii. 1; iv. 2.
Stephano, servant to Portia..M. V. v. 1.
Stephano, a drunken butler..T. ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Steward, servant to the Countess of Rousillon..A. W. i. 3; iii. 4.
Strangers, three..T. Ath. iii. 2.
Strato, a servant to Brutus..J. C. v. 3, 5.
Suffolk, Earl of..H. 6, F. P. ii. 4; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 3, 5.
Suffolk, Duke of; of the King's party..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 1, 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1.
Suffolk, Duke of..H. E. i. 2; ii. 2; iii. 2; v. 1, 2, 4.
Surrey, Duke of..R. S. iv. 1.
Surrey, Earl of..H. E. iii. 2; v. 2.
Surrey, Earl of, son to the Duke of Norfolk..R. T. v. 3.
Surveyor to the Duke of Buckingham..H. E. i. 2.

T.

Taborer..T. N. K. iii. 5.
Tailor..T. S. iv. 3.
Talbot, Lord, afterwards Earl of Shrewsbury..H. 6, F. P. i. 4, 5; ii. 1, 2, 3; iii. 2, 3, 4; iv. 1, 2, 5, 6, 7.
Talbot, John, son of Lord Talbot..H. 6, F. P. iv. 5, 6, 7.
Tamora, Queen of the Goths..T. And. i. 2; ii. 2, 3, 4; iv. 4; v. 2, 3.
Taurus, lieutenant-general to Cæsar..A. C. iii. 8.
Tear-sheet, Doll..H. 4, S. P. ii. 4; v. 4.
Thaisa, daughter to Simonides..P. ii. 2, 3, 5; iii. 2, 4; v. 3.
Thaliard, servant to Antiochus..P. i. 1, 3.
Thersites, a deformed and scurrilous Grecian..T. C. ii. 1, 3; iii. 3; v. 1, 2, 4, 8.
Theseus, Duke of Athens..M. N. D. i. 1; iv. 1; v. 1.
Theseus, Duke of Athens..T. N. K. i. 1, 4; ii. 5; iii. 5, 6; iv. 2; v. 1, 3, 4.
Thisbe, in the Interlude..M. N. D. iii. 1; v. 1.
Thomas, a friar..M. M. i. 4.
Thurio, a foolish rival to Valentine..G. V. ii. 4; iii. 1, 2; iv. 2; v. 2, 4.
Thyreus, friend of Cæsar..A. C. iii. 10, 11.
Timandra, mistress to Alcibiades..T. Ath. iv. 3.
Time, as Chorus..W. T. iv. Chorus.
Timon, a noble Athenian..T. Ath. 4, 6; iv. 1, 3; v. 1, 2.
Titania, queen of the fairies..M. N. D. ii. 2, 3; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 2.
Titinius, a friend to Brutus and Cassius..J. C. iv. 3; v. 1, 3.
Titus, servant to one of Timon's creditors..T. Ath. iii. 4.
Titus Lartius, a general against the Volsces..Cor. i. 1, 4, 5, 7, 9; ii. 1; iii. 1.
Touchstone, a clown..A. L. i. 2; ii. 4; iii. 2, 3; v. 1, 3, 4.
Tranio, servant to Lucentio..T. S. i. 1, 2; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 2, 4; v. 1, 2.
Travellers..H. 4, F. P. ii. 2.
Travers, domestic of Northumberland..H. 4, S. P. i. 1.
Trebonius, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar..J. C. ii. 1, 2; iii. 1.
Tribunes..Cy. iii. 7.
Tribunes..T. And. i. 2.
Trinculo, a jester..T. ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 1; v. 1.
Troilus, son to Priam..T. C. i. 1, 2; ii. 2; iii. 2; iv. 2, 3, 4, 5; v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 11.
Tubal, a Jew, friend to Shylock..M. V. iii. 1.
Tutor to Rutland..H. 6, T. P. i. 3.
Tybalt, nephew to Lady Capulet..R. J. i. 1, 5; iii. 1.
Tyrrel, Sir James..R. T. iv. 2, 3.

U.

Ulysses, a Grecian commander..T. C. i. 3; ii. 3; iii. 3; iv. 5; v. 1, 2, 5.
Uncle to Capulet..R. J. i. 5.
Ursula, gentlewoman attending on Hero..M. A. ii. 1; iii. 1, 4; v. 2, 4.
Urswick, Sir Christopher, a priest..R. T. iv. 5.

V.

Valentine..G. V. i. 1; ii. 1, 4; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 4.
Valentine, a gentleman attending on the Duke..T. N. i. 1, 4.

16/43

INDEX II.

VAL

Valeria, friend to Virgilia..Cor. i. 3; ii. 1; v. 3.
Valerius, a Theban nobleman..T. N. K. 2.
Varrius, friend of Pompey..A. C. ii. 1.
Varro, a servant to Brutus..J. C. iv. 3.
Vaughan, Sir Thomas..R. T. iii. 3.
Vaux..H. 6, S. P. iii. 2.
Vaux, Sir Nicholas..H. E. ii. 1.
Venice, Duke of..M. V. iv. 1.
Venice, Duke of..O. i. 3.
Ventidius, one of Timon's false friends..T. Ath. i. 2.
Ventidius, friend of Antony..A. C. ii. 2, 3; iii. 1.
Verges, a city officer..M. A. iii. 3, 5; iv. 2; v. 1.
Vernon, Sir Richard..H. 4, F. P. iv. 1, 3; v. 1, 2, 5.
Vernon, of the White Rose, or York faction..H. 6, F. P. ii. 4; iii. 4; iv. 1.
Vincentio, an old gentleman of Pisa..T. S. iv. 5; v. 1, 2.
Vincentio, the Duke..M. M. i. 1, 4; ii. 3; iii. 1, 2; iv. 1, 2, 3, 5; v. i.
Vintner..H. 4, F. P. ii. 4.
Viola, in love with the Duke..T. N. i. 2, 4, 5; ii. 2, 4; iii. 1, 4; v. 1.
Violenta, neighbour and friend to the Widow..A. W. iii. 5.
Virgilia, wife to Coriolanus..Cor. i. 3; ii. v. 3.
Volsce, a..Cor. iv. 3.
Voltimand, a courtier..H. i. 2; ii. 2.
Volumnia, mother to Coriolanus..Cor. i. 3; ii. 1; iii. 2; iv. 1, 2; v. 3.
Volumnius, a friend to Brutus and Cassius..J. C. v. 3, 5.

W.

Wall, in the Interlude..M. N. D. v. 1.
Warders of the Tower..H. 6, F. P. i. 3.
Wart, a recruit..H. 4, S. P. iii. 2.
Warwick, Earl of; of the King's party..H. 4, S. P. iii. 1; iv. 4; v. 2
Warwick, Earl of..H. F. i. 2; iv. 7, 8; v. 2.
Warwick, Earl of..H. 6, F. P. i. 1; ii. 4; iii. iv. 1; v. 4.
Warwick, Earl of; of the York faction..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3; ii. 2; iii. 2, 3; v. 1, 2, 3.
Warwick, Earl of; of the Duke of York's party..H. 6, T. P. i. 1; ii. 1, 2, 3, 6; iii. 3; iv. 2, 3, 6, 8; v. 1, 2.
Watchmen..M. A. iv. 2.
Watchmen..H. 6, T. P. iv. 3.
Watchmen..R. J. v. 3.
Westminster, Abbot of..R. S. iv. 1.
Westmoreland, Earl of, friend to the King..H. 4, F. P. i. 1; iv. 2; v. 4, 5.
Westmoreland, Earl of; of the King's party..H. 4, S. P. iv. 1, 2, 3, 4; v. 2.
Westmoreland, Earl of..H. F. i. 2; ii. 2; iv. 3; v. 2.
Westmoreland, Earl of; a lord on King Henry's side..H. 6, T. P. i. 1.
Widow..T. S. v. 2.
Widow of Florence, an old..A. W. iii. iv. 4; v. 1, 3.
Wife to Simpcox..H. 6, S. P. ii. 1.
Wife to the Pander..P. iv. 3, 6.
William, a country fellow, in love with Audrey..A. L. v. 1.

YOR

Williams, a soldier in King Henry's army..H. F. iv. 1, 7, 8.
Willoughby, Lord..R. S. ii. 1, 3; iii. 1.
Winchester, Henry Beaufort, Bishop of, great uncle to the King, and afterwards Cardinal..H. 6, F. P. i. 1, 3, 5; iii. 1; iv. 1; v. 1, 4.
Witches, three..M. i. 1, 3; iii. 5; iv.
Whitmore, Walter..H. 6, S. P. iv. 1.
Wolsey, Cardinal..H. E. i. 1, 2, 4; ii. 2, 4; 1, 2.
Woodville, Lieutenant of the Tower..H. 6, F. P. i. 3.
Wooer to the Gaoler's Daughter..T. N. K. ii. 1; iv. 1, 3; v. 2.
Worcester, Thomas Percy, Earl of..H. 4, F. P. i. 3; 1; iv. 1, 3; v. 1, 2, 5.

Y.

York, Duchess of..R. S. v. 2, 3.
York, Scroop, Archbishop of, an enemy to the King..H. 4, S. P. i. 3; iv. 1, 2.
York, Duke of, cousin to the King..H. F. iv. 3.
York, Richard Plantagenet, Duke of..H. 6, S. P. i. 1, 3, 4; ii. 2, 3; iii. 1; v. 1, 2, 3.
York, Richard Plantagenet, Duke of..H. 6, T. P. i. 1, 2, 4.
York, Richard, Duke of, son to Edward IV...R. T. ii. 4; iii. 1.
York, Duchess of, mother to King Edward IV., Clarence, and Gloster..R. T. ii. 2, 4; iv. 1, 4.

THE END.

BIBLIOTEKA UNIWERSYTECKA

VIRTUE AND CO. LIMITED, PRINTERS, CITY ROAD, LONDON.

Biblioteka Główna UMK

300000231155

ROTANOX
oczyszczanie
lipiec 2008

BIBL
KD.2861.2
nr inw. 1192